The Weather.

The weather promises to be slightly colder and fair.

TO ALL GOOD CITIZENS.

See That Good Men Are Selected This Time.

It is important that every citizen of Plainfield interested in securing good government should attend the primaries Wednesday and Thursday evenings and see that good candidates are nominated. Had the citizens done their duty two years ago we would not have had such an experience as this city has since passed through and we hope is never to have again. THE NEWS has tried to do its duty when the real character of the men who were put into power was discovered, and provided as much mischief being done as possible. It is now time for the citizens of Plainfield to do their duty. Increased taxes and many useless expenses are the result of the blunder two years ago. We hope that it will not be repeated at the primaries Wednesday and Thursday evening.

A Hint to Our Church Members.

Rev. Wm. R. Richards, in the course of a sermon last evening on the subject of Salvation being not only for the soul, but for the whole man, made the following practical suggestion, which will no doubt be heeded by those who regularly attend prayer meetings.

It should also convince those who do not have this excuse for neglecting the primaries, of the very great importance of every public-spirited citizen making his influence felt in the cause of good government.

"I learn that the primaries in several wards of this city are to be held on Wednesday evening of this week. That is the evening when our churches are accustomed to meet to pray that men may be saved by Christ.

Under the circumstances, especially at a time like the present, when grave interests of the city are at stake, I believe a true view of what is meant by Salvation will convince Christian men that they for once may leave the women and the pastor, perhaps, to do the praying that men may be saved, and that their own duty takes them into those political assemblies where a community's salvation needs to be worked out with fear and trembling.

I hope the Christian voters of this city will so understand their duty this week."

A TERRIBLE FATE.

A Two-Year-Old Child Burned to Death.

The two-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seibel, formerly of North Plainfield but now of Hightstown, New Jersey, was so badly burned on Friday last that it died yesterday morning. The child's sufferings were intense.

The child in some unaccountable way obtained some matches and succeeded in lighting one. The flames quickly communicated to its clothing and before the mishap was discovered the baby was burned so badly that it died from its injuries as above stated.

Mr. Seibel, the father of the child, was in this city last evening making arrangements for the funeral which will take place to-morrow.

—The Bible Normal Class of the First Baptist Church will omit its regular session this week. The class will meet as usual next Monday evening and continue its studies in the Book of Genesis.

A DWELLING HOUSE BURNED.

Fire Bugs at Work in North Plainfield Saturday Night.

At about 10:15 o'clock Saturday a dwelling house situated at the corner of Mountain and Westervelt avenues was discovered to be afire. An alarm was sounded and the borough department turned out, but when they arrived at the scene of the conflagration the members ascertained that there was not enough hose to reach the fire from the nearest hydrant. By this time the flames had gained considerable headway and it was evident that the dwelling could not be saved. Albert Hose company's carriage was sent for but when it arrived the house had been burned to the ground.

The building was a two-and-a-half story French roof house and was unoccupied. It was owned by the Elias Cole estate. The loss is estimated at $2,000 and was partially covered by insurance. The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

BREVITIES.

—To-morrow will be election day. Vote early.

—City Common Council meeting to-night.

—The Young Men's Republican Club will hold a meeting this evening.

—A number of sportsmen are out gunning for quail and rabbits to-day.

—The bowling section of the Y. M. C. A. will meet at the Olympia Alleys to-morrow evening. Interesting matches will be given by Mr. C. C. Dilts or at the association rooms.

—A large number of people attended the services at the Salvation Army barracks last evening. The meeting was in charge of Captain McIver and Lieutenant Rowland.

—It is now a settled fact, so the committee say, that North Broadway—or a continuation of it—will be built and started soon. The proposed new street will aid traffic and boom North Plainfield real estate.

—The reception to be tendered to all who assisted at the fair for the benefit of St. Mary's church, is to be held in St. Mary's auditorium on Friday evening instead of next Thursday evening as previously announced.

—"A number of Plainfield's Christian Workers have accepted an invitation to visit the Night Missions in New York City, and with the superintendent of one of the East Side Missions as guide, the party, this evening, will make the town. Among those who will go are Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Vanardale, Miss Rachel Mair, President Murray of the Y. M. C. A., Chas. R. Brown, and J. A. Goodhue."

—The Chatauqua Circle of the Congregational church will meet Tuesday, Nov. 3d, at 8 p. m., in the church parlors. Visitors and new members are always welcome. The programme is as follows: 1, roll call, to be answered by quotations on Colonial New Jersey; 2, questions on American history; 3, reading Bacon's Rebellion; 4, reading from Mackenbach's History of New York; 5, the comfort signal on the Mayflower; 6, question on lessons in Social Institutions of the United States; 7, informal talk on the same by Miss Gifford.

—Another largely attended men's meeting was held yesterday afternoon in the M. E. church. The speaker, S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the McAuley Mission at 316 Water street, related the remarkable story of his own conversion and illustrated by the grand results of the mission work of New York City, the power of Christ to save and keep the drunkard and outcast. Master Howard Case sang a beautiful solo entitled "Cling to the Cross." Men who had requested prayers during the meeting were conversed with at the close of the service.

All Souls' Day.

To-day is what is known in Catholic circles as All Souls' Day. The day is observed by offering up prayers for the dead. In St. Mary's church there were two masses, at half-past seven and half-past eight respectively. The latter mass was a high mass.

SHOT BY A COMPANION.

SPECIAL POLICEMAN JAMES BABBITT PAINFULLY INJURED TO-DAY.

He and a Man Named Peterson Went Gunning for Rabbits and Babbitt was Accidentally Shot in the Right Arm.

Special Policeman James Babbitt, and a companion named Peterson went hunting for rabbits this morning. When in a woods back of Netherwood, Babbitt and his friend separated. Just before eleven o'clock Mr. Babbitt was shot in the right arm. His friend had discharged his gun at a rabbit but Babbitt received the full charge of shot in his arm as above stated.

A carriage was procured and Babbitt was taken to the office of Dr. Fritts. An examination showed that his right arm had received the entire charge of shot and was badly lacerated. The serious work of picking the shot out, one by one, was then begun. No serious results are anticipated.

Mr. Babbitt is very fond of hunting and has the reputation of being one of the best gunners in this vicinity. During his long experience it is the first time that he has ever met with an accident of a similar nature.

MISCHIEVIOUS BOYS ARRESTED.

They Were Celebrating All Hallow E'en and Were Caught by the Police.

Mayor Gilbert Saturday evening notified the police to arrest all boys who were caught stealing gates or molesting other people's property. The result of the Mayor's orders was that a dozen or more boys found themselves in the clutches of the policemen. When they arrived at the station house they were thoroughly frightened. Some cried and others pleaded piteously to be released from custody promising to go home and not to again be caught in the same boyish pranks. In the evening they were reprimanded and released.

A large number of persons did not heed the advice of THE NEWS of Saturday to take off their gates and consequently they were missing yesterday morning. Some of them were found blocks away. In several instances a gate that had been painted white was found on a green fence and vice versa.

Several gates were swinging from the limbs of trees on East Second street and a tree on East Second street and if a pedestrian did not happen to see it he would easily collide with it.

There were several Hallow e'en parties in progress and the young people enjoyed themselves hugely.

The usual number of masqueraders were on the street and every once and awhile a pedestrian was frightened by a supply of flower that came from some unknown quarter. The old custom of ducking for apples was also observed in several households. Taking all in all Hallow'een was thoroughly observed in this city.

Two Bridges Afire.

At about eleven o'clock this morning the railroad bridge which spans Grant avenue was discovered to be afire. The flames were extinguished after considerable work.

At about the same hour the Madison avenue railroad bridge was also discovered to be afire. The flames were extinguished with a few pails of water.

The fire originated from a spark from a locomotive.

Sentenced by the Mayor.

In the absence of City Judge Codington this morning His Honor, Mayor Gilbert, was called upon to act as City Judge. A man named Madden, who had been arrested Saturday night for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, was arraigned. He pleaded guilty to the charge and the Mayor gave him the choice of paying a fine of ten dollars or spending five days in the county jail. Madden will probably take the five days.

Warden Dodd Charged with Cruelty

Lawyers Connolly and Lindabury took Warden Dodd severely to task last Saturday, in the Union County Court, for the alleged inhuman treatment of Harmon Blaszar, an old veteran, who is confined in the county jail. Warden Dodd, who was responsible to the court for the safe keeping of the prisoner, said he did not think the complainants were excuse enough for this purpose.

Dowd Again in the Toils.

Policeman Cooney and Flanagan on Saturday night arrested Thomas Dowd, Sr., on the charge of interfering with an officer in the discharge of his duty. Dowd was arraigned before Mayor Gilbert this morning and his honor declined to give him a hearing until he had first had an interview with the officers who made the arrest. Dowd will be given a hearing this evening.

She Whipped Her Husband.

Shortly after twelve o'clock Saturday night a married woman beat her husband at the corner of Second and Peace streets and began to belabor him unmercifully. After the latter had patiently stood her anger she requested a bystander to go and get a policeman, as she wanted to take possession of him. It is said that the woman was intoxicated.

After Masqueraders.

A number of young men and girls were acting in a disorderly manner on Front street Saturday evening. They were masquerading. The girls had donned male attire and the boys vice versa. Their actions were disgraceful. The police have secured some of the names of the offending persons and arrests may follow.

The Ordinance Vetoed.

For the second time Mayor Gilbert has vetoed the ordinance granting a franchise to J. Low & Co. to build a system of sewerage in this city. The veto together with the Mayor's objections to the adoption of the ordinance will be read at the next meeting of Common Council to be held this evening.

The Wheel Came Off.

While Mr. Caleb Dickinson, the Park avenue jeweler, was driving with his wife and child along Mountain avenue yesterday, a wheel came off the buggy. No one was hurt and after adjustment the vehicle was secured they continued their drive.

SOMETHING FROM MR. KYTE.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 30, 1891.

Hon. George Kyte, Fanwood, N. J.

DEAR SIR:—As you are aware, the newspapers of this district are publishing a communication from two wheelmen, which is intended to damage you politically. It may be west it sounds like "a mixed drink Monday night after the election;" or it is possible you may merit their anathemas. If the latter is the case, you have fallen a long way from the grace which was yours, when years ago, through your personal exertion and influence, the first concrete on the famous Fanwood sidewalk near your house, was made rideable. I do not know that you have ever been known to be a staunch friend of wheelmen ever since the "good roads" campaign. I feel sure there must be something to be said from your side of the matter. It is possible that you may not think the matter worth any consideration, but this view, I think, would be a mistake. The bicycle is no longer looked upon as a toy, nor is its use considered to be merely for sport. Many good and useful citizens, including representatives of all its professions (from editorial dom) are riders of the wheel. In fact in this locality it would be safe to say that one that we may be compelled to adopt as our political motto, with the cry "Put none but wheelmen on guard."

An early reply will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

THOS. S. BUSH.

FANWOOD, N. J., Oct. 31, 1891.

Thos. S. Bush, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to yours of the 29th I can only say I have no excuse to offer for my part in the enforcement of the ordinance against bicycle riding on the sidewalks. An ordinance was passed in July last prohibiting riding upon sidewalks of the township and which I very strongly advocated. Mr. Sayre willfully, persistently and knowingly violated the ordinance, thereby bringing ridicule upon the authorities and the law, shortly after the passage of the ordinance. Mr. Sayre offered a petition to our Township Committee asking that the fines realized from the enforcement of the ordinance be used in improving the road from Fanwood to Scotch Plains and it seems strange that he should feel so hurt because he was the first to be punished for its violation. By Mr. Sayre's continual violation of the law and the non-enforcements of its provisions, many citizens were constantly being made to myself, and I believe to my fellow committeemen, of the danger and annoyance from bicycle riders on the sidewalk. It is to be hoped that no more trouble in this district will be deterred from voting for me simply because Mr. Sayre was not allowed to violate a township ordinance and a State law at will. I may add that as long as I remain a township officer I propose to enforce the township ordinances against those who knowingly violate them. Thanking you for your kindly letter on the subject, I remain,

Yours very truly,

GEORGE KYTE.

Miss Victoria Hand, daughter of Mr. David Hand of Netherwood and Mr. Frederick Hall of Plainfield, N. Y., were married in the Scotch Plains Baptist Church Saturday afternoon. The Rev. Mr. Barber tied the ceremony.

Walter Vroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Adams, died at the home of his parents on Watchung avenue yesterday morning. Deceased was in the sixth year of his age. The funeral will take place from the house at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at one o'clock. Interment will be made in Mt. Pleasant cemetery at Rewark.

An Exciting Game of Foot Ball.

An exciting and closely contested game of foot ball was played on the Crescent Athletic Park grounds Saturday afternoon between a team from Rutgers' preparatory school of New Brunswick and a team from Plainfield. There was a large number of spectators witnessed the game. The Rutgers boys were victorious, at the close of the contest, when the Rutgers boys kicked a goal and succeeded in winning the game by a score of 9 to 6.

For Free Scholarships.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 2d, (Special)—Dr. Scott President this morning received $4,800 from the State Treasurer for free scholarships in Rutgers College.

PRISONERS SENTENCED.

Charles Elston and Harry Devine Get Long Terms in State Prison.

Charles Elston, the young man who, a few weeks ago, robbed Mr. C. M. Dunham's store on West Front street of about three hundred dollars worth of jewelry, was yesterday sentenced in the Union County Court by Judge McCormick to five years in State Prison at hard labor. Previous to the sentence being pronounced on Elston his counsel pleaded for a suspension of sentence providing that Elston had been an inmate of the State Reform School and that he had been sentenced to five years in State Prison from Middlesex County for a similar crime, although he had been pardoned before his term had expired. In sentencing Elston Judge McCormick said the court would be doing an injustice by suspending sentence and entertaining a prisoner as above stated.

Harry Devine, the colored man who was arrested in this city by Acting-Captain of Police Lynch on the charge of burglarizing a dwelling house at Elizabeth, and who afterward pleaded guilty to the charge, was sentenced to two years in State Prison at hard labor.

Saved by the Engineer.

Coal train engine No. 329 of the Central Railroad broke loose about 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning and jumped the track on the main line at Bayonne, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. It was going rather slow at the time, and the engineer and fireman both escaped injury. Passenger train No. 146 from New York was a short distance behind the freight. Prompt action on the part of the engineer prevented a frightful accident. The air brakes were put on, but even then the engine struck the rear coal car. The shock threw the passengers in the train were badly scared, but none were injured. No material damage was done the trains.

Arrested for Arson.

Peter and Caroline Clawson, an aged couple residing near New Market, were arrested Friday afternoon charged with arson. They occupied a house belonging to Luther Boice, were given notice to vacate, and left. Then they are attempted to set fire to the building. Constable Pierce made the arrest and the old couple were committed to the county jail at New Brunswick. It is said that they are demented.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Rio Grande Will Not Secede.

It happened in Kansas. Things usually happen in Kansas. Enterprising individuals in the western part of the state had all arrangements made for making the wilderness blossom as the rose by the process of irrigation. To make their task easier a law was passed allowing citizens to tax themselves for funds to moisten the thirsty soil. All was beautiful, fair and promising. Water was to flow like milk and honey in the promised land, from canals, artesian wells or otherwise, and prize hogs and pumpkins were to follow in its wake like small boys after a circus.

But now comes Melbourne, the rain—what shall we say, rain king or rain fiend?—and spoils it all. Melbourne goes into an old building, cuts a hole in the roof, and divests himself of the major part of his clothing, to judge from the sequel. What he does in there—whether he performs some Keeley motor experimenting, or sets up an Indian medicine howl—nobody has as yet been able to find out. But in due course he emerges, without much clothes on, so the story goes, and with the perspiration oozing from every pore. That is all anybody knows. But presently the rain comes pouring down in showers.

Kansas is satisfied with Melbourne's rainmaking. Numerous counties have declared their intention of taxing themselves under the irrigation law to hire Melbourne to make it rain at ten cents an acre, which will be a good thing both for Melbourne and for Kansas. But now up step the irrigating gentlemen and say this proceeding is against the law and shall not go on. Droughty Kansas shall stay droughty forever first. It would ruin all their works for water to come down from the sky instead of going up through the earth.

As between the irrigants and the showerers, however, the lawyers decided that the showerers may go on and tax themselves to produce the waters that come from the heavens. Meantime, like the boy in the story, Melbourne saws wood and says nothing. This story teaches us a lesson in human nature.

Fruit Excursions.

It is a Boston idea to form excursions to visit the fruit growing regions of California during the month of February. Any place short of paradise itself could not be more delightful than California at that season of the year, and the shrewd eastern capitalists get both profit and pleasure from these tours. Many of them have money invested in the wonderful fruit valleys of the state which gave to the public both Sunol and Denis Kearney.

The Boston idea is worthy of imitation. It is to be noted that every part of this great republic has some overwhelming excellence or resource which, properly developed, will make it an object of interest to visitors from abroad and at home. California will become the greatest fruit garden in the world, and, besides California, Florida will also be in the future one vast and glorious fruit garden. There are also localities peculiarly adapted to dairying and the making of the delicious and profitable cheese which we are beginning to find can be made better in the United States than in Europe. Every part of this great country has its own special attraction, but the fruit growers of California have had the shrewdness to develop their region beyond most others. Some 900 car loads of raisins of fine quality have been shipped east from the great fruit state this fall. In thirty-eight counties oranges are growing, and there are altogether 4,000,000 orange trees with 1,000,000 in bearing. Besides this, California has already 3,000,000 lemon trees.

No other writer of biography has succeeded in making his literary style so attractive as James Parton did. His were histories that young people would sit up all night to read. They were as interesting as a good novel. It has been charged against him that he could not always refrain from making an epigrammatic sentence at the expense of truth, after the manner of the French. But for all that his biographies will be read when others which the critics consider more accurate lie buried under dust. Parton's "Life of Franklin" ought to be the text book of every American youth. The "Life of Voltaire" is considered his strongest and most philosophical work.

It is to be remembered, too, of this popular writer that his sympathies were always in the right place, on the side of right and human liberty.

Those preachers of the gospel who propose holding debating bouts at various points of the country should remember that no soul was ever saved yet through theological argument. It was not the way of the founder of Christianity.

Hog meats and all swine products may now go into Italy if they are accompanied by inspection certificates, but not live swine. One more victory for the American hog. If he cannot go in alive, he will go in dead.

Ten racing stables among them won nearly a million dollars during the season of 1891. It is not recorded how many lost.

Without the sense of humor life would be unbearable.

SLAIN BY CHILI'S POLICE

Schley Says Riggin Was Killed by an Officer.

SAILORS SHOT AND DRAGGED.

The Whole Conduct of the Authorities in Valparaiso During the Late Unpleasantness Seems to Have Been of an Unwarrantably High Handed Character.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—Further details of the affray between the Chilians at Valparaiso and seamen of the United States cruiser Baltimore have been received by cable from Captain Schley, whose dispatch confirms the previous report that the Valparaiso police treated the Baltimore's men outrageously, and assisted the mob in its work of killing two of the crew and severely injuring four. The dispatch from Captain Schley follows:

VALPARAISO, Oct. 31, 1891.

Secretary of the Navy:

Petty Officer Riggin, in whose arm Charles W. Roggne was killed, declares that the act was done by the police guard. Apprentice Francis D. Williams says that he was arrested by a mounted policeman, who placed himself around his waist and carried his horse into a gallop, throwing him down. After that the policeman walked his horse. Coal Heaver Patrick McWilliams was arrested and taken to prison, with ragged nippers around his wrists and lasso around his neck. He was dragged by the horse across the street. Gunner Joseph Quigley, while trying to effect escape from the mob, was struck with a sword by a police officer named Wenceslao Tabos and arrested, ragged nippers were placed around his wrists, and on the way to prison he was struck repeatedly by police.

Dragged Unconscious to Prison.

Petty Officer John Hamilton dangerously injured. Coxswain Dougan dragged to prison. One of my people trying to make him comfortable was threatened with the butt of a musket to assist. My men's rights, I am informed secretly, although I sent an officer to the court to request authority to attend, have been refused. The request based on account of the proceedings being secret. Before discharge my men were required to sign a paper, but before doing it Minister Egan and a court official the meaning of the paper. He was informed that the form stating that the men and the signer was not engaged in the trouble. Two are dead, three are dangerously wounded and eleven others slightly injured. Surgeons believe the wounded out of danger.

The Situation at Valparaiso.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via GALVESTON, Nov. 2.—From all appearances the danger of any serious trouble between Chili and the United States is passing away. What impresses the foreign newspaper representatives here as the most marked infractions of courtesy in the affair are, first, the failure of the junta to express any regret that the assault was committed or to give any assurances that the investigation would be thorough and real, and, secondly, that Judge Foster, who is conducting the inquiry into the attack, should have refused to allow any of the Baltimore's officers to be present while the court was taking the evidence of the American sailors.

This latter action is, however, defended on the ground that it was in accordance with the Chilian laws, which require such investigations to be secretly conducted.

What Is Said at Home.

Eleven days passed after the murderous attack by the mob on the American sailors before Intendente Ariegui made his request of Consul Egan that any data in possession of Capt. Schley regarding the outrage, should be furnished to Judge Foster. Consul McCreery informed Senor Ariegui that he would comply with with the request for the reason that Captain Schley had sent all the evidence to Minister Egan for the information of the United States.

While the opinions of the few Americans here are unanimous that our government acted with unusual promptness and delicacy in demanding reparation, yet they believe that some allowance should be made until the new government is fully established.

Minister Said Nothing.

The Libertad Electoral, the semi-official organ of the junta, says that for the last few days rumors have been prevalent that an alarming rupture of amicable relations between Chili and the United States was imminent.

"To reassure the public," it adds, "that these rumors are unfounded. Dispatches have been received from Senor Montt, our minister at Washington, asserting that no misunderstanding exists between him and Secretary Blaine. Mr. Blaine has said that he would not form any definite opinions about the affair until the conclusion of the investigation. Moreover, Senor Montt reports that Mr. Blaine's reception of him was cordial and kind."

German Navy Officers Insulted.

Two officers of the German navy were insulted last night while on a train between Valparaiso and Santiago. The insult is supposed to have been the outcome of the friendship of the German naval officers because the German warship Leipzig harbored a number of Balmacedist refugees when the German admiral. Various complained about the insult to the intendente, who has promised to use all his power to prevent a repetition of it.

Struck Gold at Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 2.—Gold has been found on the banks of the Missouri here by workmen digging for the foundation made by borings that are being put down to find the location of rock under which to tunnel the Missouri river. A large number of them were thrown upon the beach by the waves and many of them were captured by men and boys.

Ellwood City's Blaze.

ELLWOOD CITY, Pa., Nov. 2.—Blatts' hardware store, Weiss Brothers' meat market, Cunningham's grocery, Kiffe's grocery, the postoffice, Star restaurant and a new building not completed were burned. Loss, $60,000. Blatt loses $25,000.

A Shoe Factory Burned.

BEVERLY, Mass., Nov. 2.—An incendiary fire destroyed Woodberry Brothers' shoe factory and several hat factories and dwellings. A railroad roundhouse on the Boston and Maine railroad was also burned. The total loss is $300,000.

Four Boys Drowned.

MIDLAND, Ont., Nov. 2.—Four boys between twelve and fifteen years old, named John Clarkson, Peter Hewis, Leo Johnston and William Allieton, were drowned through the upsetting of a sailboat in a squall.

MURDERER MILLER FOUND DEAD.

The Slayer of Minnie Rauhauser Killed Himself in New Jersey.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—William Miller did the police a favor by having done to round out completely the tragedy of Minna Rauhauser's death, in which he was the principal actor. He killed himself. The discovery of the dead body of his body showed that he had cut his own throat and stabbed himself while still in the room with the dead body of his victim, indicating that he had intended to die with her. When turned against himself, however, the little pocket knife failed and the suicide was put off for twenty-four hours.

Miller was found, not yet cold and stiff in death, sitting on the ground with his back against the trunk of an oak tree on the top of the Palisades, about two miles east of Englewood, N. J.

The discovery of the body was made by Richard Manning, a boy of eight years, living at Fort Lee. He had gone cutting with a brother in the Coytteville woods, near Fort Lee. Richard pushed his way through a dense thicket on the brow of the Palisades and saw a man sitting at the foot of a tree.

The man did not turn round or move. A second, closer look and the boy comprehended what he saw. The man was dead. A revolver was clutched in his right hand. A bullet hole was in his left temple and pinned to his breast was a newspaper clipping describing the awful death of Minna Rauhauser at the hands of William Miller the day before.

FASHIONS

AN AUTUMN STREET GOWN.

Seen on a Fashionable Avenue—Grace ful and Comfortable.

A CHARMING AUTUMN COSTUME.

Some very interesting sketches of novel autumn gowns are seen this week. The charming dressmaker is very smart costume for out of doors. The bonnet is in olive-green velvet, with black ostrich feathers, and stiffened silk strings in white and olive-green knotted behind, under the hair. The deep cape is of white cashmere, with an appliqué design in velvet representing leaves in silver and dark olive green, the borders being of olive-green velvet, cut-lined with silver. The high Henry IV. collar is also olive-green velvet. The gown is of olive-green faille, with half-sleeves of white cashmere, embroidered in the same way as the cape. Round the skirt there is a deep band of plain white satin, while all round the hem of the skirt there is an embroidery of white leaves. The gloves are white to correspond.

In the way of fur trimming, the narrow mink tail bids fair to be the favorite for the coming winter.

To Restore the Andre Monument.

TAPPAN, N. Y., Nov. 2.—The question of erecting a monument to Major John André, who was executed as a spy, is again being agitated here. The monument was broken by would be relic hunters. It is proposed by the townsmen has changed materially, and it is thought if it were restored there would be no further efforts made to destroy it.

Arrested at the Altar.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Joseph Jette Pinkinsky, of 161 Division street, was to have been married on Saturday night to Hermann Hyman, a young tailor of 806 Cherry street, but the ceremony was strangely interrupted by officers, who rushed in and arrested Hyman for bigamy. He is said to have two wives.

Ash-it Gets Chaplean to Remain.

MONTREAL, Nov. 2.—Premier Abbott has temporarily at least baffled over the split in his cabinet caused by his refusal to give Mr. Chapleau the portfolio of minister of railways and canals. Chapleau has been asked by Premier Abbott what terms nearly 12,000 men have been idle.

The Coal Miners' Strike Is Ended.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 2.—The great strike of the coal miners of this district will be called off on Tuesday. The strike was inaugurated three months ago for a 10 per cent. increase in wages. Since that time

We Can Make Armor Plates Too.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The result of the armor test at Indian Head, Md., proved the ability of American establishments to turn out rolled plate 10½ inches thick, placing it on a par with the best European armor productions.

Murdered His Mother-in-Law.

BUFFALO, Nov. 2.—Oscar Echts shot his mother-in-law, Mrs. Amelia Heiga, last evening, and she died within five minutes. He had been drinking and was threatening to shoot his wife, when Mrs. Heiga interfered and was shot.

St. Paul's Was 125 Years Old.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Representatives of many prominent old New York families attended the fifth anniversary of the first Sunday service held in old St. Paul's building, corner of Broadway and Vesey street, yesterday.

A BAY STATE BANK CRASH

The Maverick National of Boston, Goes Under.

CAUSED BY BROKER EVANS' SUICIDE

Over $21,000,000 in Cash Withdrawn from the Institution and the Controller of the Currency Closes the Doors—Bank Examiner Magruder Dies in the Harness.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—The Maverick National bank suspended payment today. The decision to close its doors was reached after a protracted conference of the clearing house committee of Boston national banks on Sunday morning. It is stated positively that the failure will not entail any widespread financial loss. The official announcement of the suspension was made by the clearing house at a meeting of the members of the clearing house to take action on a proposition recommending that all the banks composing the association loan them during advances in cash to the depositors in the Maverick bank. The deposits in the bank ten days ago amounted to more than $17,000,000. The last week more than $1,700,000 was withdrawn. Treasurer Marden withdrew some $90,000 of the commonwealth's money on deposit there. Other trusts were also taken out.

No Other Institutions Involved.

The immediate cause of the bank's suspension was the suicide of Irving Evans. The loss caused the bank by its dealings with Evans was probably large enough to seriously injure it, being not more than $300,000, but the talk of the street made the bank's loss far more. The stories included ugly rumors about President Foster and his relations with Evans. Potter says no other institution will be imperiled. He has personally assigned Thomas Hart and Henry D. Hart. Colonel J. S. French, a director of the bank, will also make an assignment. His assignees have not yet been named. Colonel French was seen, but would not say that the bank was solvent. It is stated that Bank Examiner Magruder, who has been investigating the affairs of the bank, and who died on Sunday, reported to Washington that the bank was insolvent.

By the last sworn statement of the bank, issued Sept. 30 last, it was shown that the assets of the bank included the capital of $400,000, the surplus of $800,000 and undivided profits of a little more than $900,000.

It is claimed that the clearing house committee threw out all assets which they considered worthless, and deducted 30 per cent. from the other securities, and declared the capital, surplus and undivided profits were wiped out, and that what was left will fall short of meeting the liabilities. This would indicate that the creditors might expect a dividend of seventy-five cents on the dollar. It is claimed that in good hands the depositors will receive dollar for dollar.

Died in Harness.

The faithful bank examiner, John W. Magruder, who examined it regularly, and who in January last reported its condition to his superiors, died of heart disease a few hours after the decision to suspend was reached.

To Meet the Strain.

The banks of the city, at a meeting of their officers at the Algonquin club, voted to combine against the panicky feeling which is likely to seize upon the public, to advance money to the Maverick's depositors and to assist each other.

They have plenty of money wherewith to do it, so that no serious results are expected. This is the opinion of a score of financiers who have been talked with upon the subject. The Maverick bank was established in 1854. Its location at the corner of Water and Devonshire streets is a conspicuous one, and its banking rooms are unsurpassed in size and elegance. Its customers and depositors in Maine and New Hampshire are a multitude.

THE IRISH CAMPAIGN.

Timothy Healy Makes a Very Abusive Speech at Longford.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—In an address at Longford Sunday, Timothy Healy was more vituperative than ever. He scouted the Parnellites as traitors. The Parnellites, he said, talked of English dictation and resorted to dynamite. Healy imputed to the Parnellites the Belfast dynamite explosion, which took place in Glasgow some time ago, creating great excitement. He condemned what he called "the alliance of the Parnellites with Mrs. O'Shea," who had written to Paris, looking up the fund raised for the evicted tenants. He said he was astonished that they should unite with the English proselytizer, Henry Labouchere, a member of parliament, had attempted to vindicate. Healy said he did not refer to his unhappy woman (meaning Parnell's sister) who, with her husband, Parnellites tried to make up for brains with black thorns.

Redmond Challenges Tanner.

CORK, Nov. 2.—The two factions had a fierce struggle outside the polls of Cork, where there were no police to interfere. The Parnellites came out ahead. In the struggle houses were wrecked and many persons injured, and a good deal of blood shed, although no fatalities are as yet reported. William Redmond sensational at a meeting Sunday that he had challenged Tim Tanner to fight, but that the doctor had declined.

A Newspaper Change at Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Ex-Congressman Elkhart, of Albion, has disposed of his interest in the Democrat Express to William E. Kimball, W. D. Ellwanger, James S. Wickes, J. Sherlock Andrews, A. Erickson Parking, George S. Martin and D. T. Hunt. The new officers of the company are: President, William S. Kimball; vice president, W. D. Ellwanger; treasurer, D. T. Hunt; secretary, George B. Martin.

Russia Will Keep Her Wheat.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 2.—The Russian government has assigned a further sum of 20,000,000 of rubles for the relief of the famine districts. A ukase issued Sunday prohibits the export of wheat, unless the wheat has been in the exporting vessels for three days.

Wedded His Own Sister.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—John Mueller, an immigrant at the barge office, wedded his own sister in order to secure her release. He said, too, that he was the father of her unborn child.

A Piano Factory Burned.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—A huge building on Shawmut street, this city, occupied in part by the Miller Piano company, was burned. Loss, $200,000.

BUCHANAN OFFERS A REWARD.

Governor Buchanan Will Give $5,000 for the Conviction of the Murderers.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 2.—Everything is quiet at Briceville and Coal Creek. No attempt has been made to liberate the convicts at Oliver's. The guards have been withdrawn at that point and Captain Tracy City and the lessee mines, but it is not believed that the stockades at these three mines will be attacked by the free miners. Governor Buchanan today has issued a proclamation in which he calls attention to the law holding the lessees responsible for the escape of convicts, confined at the following:

"Now, therefore, I do hereby offer a reward of twenty-five dollars for the capture of each one of the convicts now confined in the branch prisons in Anderson county and their delivery to the warden of the main prison at Nashville, which sum shall be paid as required by law by said lessees."

The governor also issued the following proclamation:

"Whereas, an armed mob has overpowered the wardens and guards and set at liberty state convicts confined in the stockades in Anderson county and burned private property, now, therefore, I, John P. Buchanan, governor of the state of Tennessee, do hereby offer for the arrest and conviction of each individual of said mob a reward of $5,000, and for the arrest and conviction of each additional member of said mob a reward of $250."

In an interview the governor said he would do all in his power to bring the leaders of the mob to justice. Calling out of the militia would be useless, because the mob has dispersed. He thinks that the offer of $5,000 reward will set the officers of the law and detectives to work.

J. C. Goodwin, one of the lessees at Briceville, was asked what he intended to do and replied: "We can't do anything but saw wood and go to law about it. Half these convicts will never be captured. The miners came from all over East Tennessee and I expect there were miners from Kentucky there also."

NO RESPECTER OF PERSONS.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Sandringham Hall, the residence of the Prince of Wales, was partly destroyed by fire Sunday. A postman crossing the park saw smoke issuing from the roof. The local volunteer fire brigade was quickly on the scene, and a brigade was also summoned from the town of Lynn-Regis. The local brigade could make but little impression on the flames, which gained headway rapidly. The engine from Lynn, which came on a special train, was more effective. Hundreds of people volunteered to assist in the work of extinguishing the flames, for the Prince of Wales is very popular on his estate.

The flames for an hour and a half continued to gain headway. For a time it seemed as if the building was doomed. Then gradually the fire yielded, but for four hours the struggle went on. The second and third floors, the roof and much of the valuable furniture were destroyed, and the rooms below greatly damaged by water. The damage amounts to £20,000. A spark from a heating flue appears to have caused the fire. The Prince of Wales is on the continent, and his wife and two of his daughters are with the czar and the czarina, their aunt.

Mexico Wants Reciprocity.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—Thomas Ryan, United States minister to Mexico, is here en route to Washington to report to the president and secretary Blaine the sentiments of the Mexican government on reciprocity. "Mexico is enthusiastically in favor of reciprocity with this government, and it is the anxious desire of the people of the republic to bring it about," said Mr. Ryan. "The Mexican congress, now in session, and President Diaz all favor the scheme."

Ex-Congressman Gooch Dead.

BOSTON, Nov. 2 — The Hon. Daniel Wheelwright Gooch, one of the most prominent citizens of the past generation, died at his home, in Melrose, Sunday of ossification of the heart. Mr. Gooch was a member of congress during the most exciting time in the history of the country, and made himself a great power by his patriotic services in the dark days of the rebellion. He was afterward naval officer and pension agent at Boston.

Fays Better than Fishing.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The naval authorities do not express much sympathy for the fishermen who claim to have had their boats damaged by the firing practice of her majesty's fleet. They say that the fishermen are in the habit of sneaking their boats into range of the firing so that they may be sunk by stray shots and the fishermen saved by a liberal reconpense. It pays better than fishing.

Preventing Panics Predicted.

TIFLIS, Nov. 2.—Reports in opposition is raging in a mountainous district near the Persian frontier. Four Protestant leaders have been torn from their families and their bodies cut to tiny pieces by fanatics. One hundred and ten of both sexes have been banished, and children kidnaped for the purpose of bringing them up in the orthodox religion.

Portuguese Soldiers Killed.

MARSEILLES, Nov. 2.—Mail advices received here state that the Portuguese at Mozambique are quarreling with the British South African company's men. As a result of the quarrel the Mazaki two Portuguese soldiers were killed and fifteen wounded.

CABLE BREVITIES.

It is believed that nearly 25,000 people were killed by the Japan earthquake. Many cities were entirely destroyed.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS

A World's Fair Bribery Affidavit from New York.

M. S. QUAY TO SUE CHAIRMAN KERR.

Action Will Be Instituted for $100,000 at Philadelphia Today, It Is Said, and Other Suits Will Be Brought Throughout the Keystone State.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Vernon K. Stevenson, of this city, who was one of the delegates sent to Washington to advocate the World's fair being held in New York city, has made the following affidavit before a notary public:

NEW YORK SOUTHERN SOCIETY, } 7 and 9 Twenty-fifth Street. }

State of New York, City and County of New York, } ss.

Vernon K. Stevenson, being duly sworn, says that he was born in the state of Tennessee, has been a resident of the city of New York for the last twenty-five years; that he was selected as one of the delegates from New York city to go to Washington to advocate the World's fair being held in New York city, that while there he met the Hon. Mr. Enloe, then a member of congress from Jackson, Tenn., and with him visited the different members from his state to solicit their votes in favor of New York city as the site for the World's fair; that while riding with Mr. Enloe in a carriage visiting the said congressmen, Mr. Enloe told him in the presence of a Republican delegate from this city, who will verify what he states, that Mr. Thomas C. Platt had offered him (Mr. Enloe) through a Mr. Thomas, $5,000 for his vote and to use his influence with his colleagues from Tennessee to vote against New York. Mr. Platt knew that Mr. Enloe at that time had a note due for that amount of money, and that he did not have the money to pay it, and Mr. Enloe felt outraged and indignant to think that Mr. Platt should take advantage of the opportunity of bribing him. Deponent was present when congressional upon the question of the site for the World's fair, and Mr. Enloe voted for New York city. V. K. STEVENSON.

Sworn to before me this first day of November, 1891. CHARLES F. HITCHCOCK, Notary Public 207, New York County.

Rev. Dixon Denounces Tammany.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—The Rev. Thomas Dixon fired his last shot into Tammany Hall before the election along with his sermon on Christian Charity in Association hall yesterday. His denunciation was probably the most bitter ever heard from a pulpit in this city. In the course of his remarks he said:

Tammany Hall is a private corporation or club of irresponsible adventurers who are banded together for the purpose of plundering the public treasury. It stands squarely in the way of every possibility of municipal or social reform. It has fastened its slimy form upon every nook and corner of this great metropolis. It has made the name of justice a byword and jest. The only power recognized within its royal domain is the power of a "pull." It has transformed the government of the second city of the world into a comedy of thieves.

At the head of this gang sits Hugh J. Grant on the mayor's chair, a self confessed criminal, who received a second term as mayor in vindication of his own public confession that he appropriated while in office $21,000 that did not belong to him. Back of him stands the royal triumvirate who have felt the cold steel of the law upon their wrists as for the prisoners' dock they faced the solemn words of a grand jury charging them with murder.

Back of these stand an army of criminals whom Tammany has trained, and upon whose ill gotten gains the deep tribute, blackmail, is regularly laid.

Back of all lies a city treasury through whose vaults there pours annually a Niagara of gold nearly fifty millions. But in fain we search a depth in seeking the bottom of Tammany Hall that there is no line to fathom. Let us try from this bottom pit to show whether it has pone.

In the name of God I appeal to the conscience vote of the good citizens of New York to remember these things on next Tuesday! Let every voter see to it that wherever the hydra head of Tammany appears a Saint Michael be striken it as he would that of a snake.

Rosendale Denies a Story.

ALBANY, Nov. 2.—Simon W. Rosendale, the Democratic candidate for attorney general, denies the allegations of the New York Tribune and The Recorder that he stated before any legislative committee or elsewhere that "only a few miserable shoemakers and dipt molders are opposed to prison labor competition" or that he made any such statement in substance or effect.

Ex-Mayor Hewitt's Letter.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Ex-Mayor Hewitt has written a letter in which he says: "I do not believe that the defeat or election of the Democratic candidate for governor will have any significance in relation to the presidential election next year. If we are to give our views in view of future contingencies, without regard to present conditions, we shall never be able to secure good government. The control now possessed by machine politicians will be perpetuated."

Mr. Quay to Sue Chairman Kerr.

BEAVER, Pa., Nov. 2.—Senator Quay, after consultation with his counsel, Mr. Shapley, has instructed him to commence suit today in Philadelphia against James Kerr, chairman of the Democratic state committee, for $100,000 damages for libel and conspiracy and for a libel. Mr. Quay has retained George S. Graham, district attorney of Delaware county, with Mr. Shapley, and a number of other suits will be commenced in different parts of the state.

Printers and Politics.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Typographical Union, No. 6 held an indignation meeting yesterday. Circulars headed "Big Six's Work" and ending with a recommendation for workingmen to vote for Fassett and Vroomau," was the cause. W. J. Brennan presided. Resolutions were passed declaring that the circular was issued without authority, and that the interests of The Union Printer were likewise unauthorized by the union.

Sheehan Bets on Himself.

BUFFALO, Nov. 2.—William F. Sheehan offered to bet $2,000 to $1,500 that he would be elected lieutenant governor. Richard R. Daniel and H. H. Goldfinch, Jr., took him up, and at Sheehan's request George Bleistein, a leading Democrat, saanted the bet.

What Crocker and Platt Say.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Richard Croker, the Tammany hall leader, says that Flower will be elected governor by 50,000 majority. Ex-Senator Platt says that Fassett will win by 30,000 majority.

The World's Oil Record Touched.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 2.—The McDonald oil field, near this city, touched the world's record Sunday by producing 17,000 barrels of oil in twenty-four hours. The prize has heretofore been held by the Bradford field, which is nearly 100 miles away, on range on the McDonald, and made the record nine points up.

Charged with Embezzlement.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 2.—Alfred A. Osborn, thirteen, of this city, was arrested in Jersey City and taken to Newark, charged with embezzling $650 from the Commercial Enterprise company, doing business there and in Plainfield, and a Dayton, Ohio, firm.

"Prisoner," said Judge Cowing, "you are charged with gambling."

"Gambling! What is gambling?"

"Playing cards for money."

"But I did not play cards for money; I played cards for chips."

"Well, you put money for your chips at the end of the game, didn't you?"

"You are discharged."—Texas Siftings.

True Literary Enclosiveness.

"Don't you admire Robert Browning as a poet, Mr. Newsmonk?"

"I used to once; but everybody admires him now, dontcherknow, so I've had to give him up!"—London Punch.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Another Big Athletic War Cloud Looms Up on the Horizon.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—An athletic war second only to the famous fight between the Amateur Athletic union and the old National Association of Amateur Athletes of America promises to shake the world of amateur athletes in this country before many days. It will be brought about by Frederick William Janssen, of the Staten Island Athletic club. He proposes to form a new association, to be called "The United States League of Athletic Clubs," which will be limited to wealthy members only.

A blow is aimed at the smaller clubs which, if successful, will ultimately freeze them out of existence. Mr. Janssen's scheme is worked out under belief that the large clubs owning property are tired of being governed and dictated to by the smaller but no less important athletic organizations.

Yale's Eleven in Peril.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 2.—The Yale faculty is today considering the advisability of disbarring the entire freshman class from all athletic contests during the year. Walter Camp, Captain Wright, George Adee and others are here forming with the faculty to prevent the edict.

The cause of the trouble was the disgraceful conduct of certain members of the freshman class last Saturday, when the class race victory was celebrated.

If the edict is issued it will greatly cripple the chance of Yale football this year, for most of the best players happen to be freshmen.

Captain Horner's Suicide.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Captain Algernon Horner, formerly of the British army, committed suicide in his room in the Victoria hotel last evening by shooting himself through the right temple. He had been suffering greatly from nervousness and insomnia since last June, and it is believed that his reason gave way under the strain. He was an intimate friend of Alexander Pantages, the head of the circus and dramatical company who killed himself last week, and had been especially despondent since then.

Speculated with Peter's Pence.

ROME, Nov. 2.—The pope presided Sunday at a consistory of the cardinals with the view of reorganizing the Peter's Pence fund. Owing to rash speculations on the bourse several millions of francs had been lost. A vast amount of money had also been invested in valueless mortgages for the accommodation of friends. The contributions since 1870 had averaged 13,000,000 francs a year, but the generosity of the faithful was fast abating.

Hawaiian Minister Carter Dead.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Mr. H. A. P. Carter, Hawaiian minister to the United States, died Sunday at the Everett House. He was born in Honolulu in 1837, of American parents. He was educated in Boston and then returned to Honolulu. He had held almost every position of honor and trust on the islands. As minister of foreign affairs of the Hawaiian government he assisted in getting up the reciprocity treaty with the United States.

Played with a Pistol and Died.

CHICAGO, Nov. 2.—"This is the way I'll kill myself some day," said sixteen-year-old Vincent Stafiney, as he pressed a pistol against his forehead. He didn't think it was loaded. He pulled the trigger and fell to the floor dead. Young Stafiney lived with his parents on Laflin street. A friend warned him not to fool with the weapon as it might be loaded.

Bicyclist Martin Exhibiting.

SIOUX CITY, N. Y., Nov. 2.—William Martin, champion long distance bicyclist of the world, who made over 1,000 miles in six days at the recent race at Madison Square Garden; Michael O. Fanagan, champion of Ireland, and Donald Sharp, champion of Scotland, gave an exhibition with the wheel at Robbins' Opera House Saturday night.

Yale's New School Building.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 2.—Of the $200,000 left by Joel Sayre Sheffield, formerly of New York, to Yale university last spring, $135,000 is to be put into a new building for the Sheffield scientific school. The faculty have awarded the contract for constructing the building to Longstaff & Burd, of Bridgeport.

Destructive Forest Fires.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2.—Extensive forest fires are raging a few miles west of Gleneon, Mo., and the people of the county of Franklin are in the greatest excitement. Fears are entertained by people from Gleneon fully fighting the fire, and in many instances the farmers have plowed up their crops so as to check the flames and save their homes.

West Loudon to Run Her Docks.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Three thousand dockmen struck on the dock gates and resolved to ask the royal labor commission to support a plan to enable the city to acquire the right to conduct the work at the docks instead of the steamship companies, as now.

Messrs. Carney Bros. have been repairing my lawn mower for a number of years and will say I consider they are good workmen. Wm. Lamberton, 1 Grove street.

Messrs. Carney Bros. have sharpened and repaired our lawn mowers to our entire satisfaction. WM. MCCART,
Head gardener for J. T. Johnson.

My experience has shown that Messrs. Carney Bros. have no superiors in sharpening and repairing lawn mowers.
WM. LOUIS CONRAD,
Head gardener for ex-Mayor Cooley.

There is no need to send your mower to any factory while Carney Bros. do the repairing. They understand their business.
HENRY BRAY, Landscape gardener.

Messrs. Carney Bros. have the several lawn mowers and shears belonging to my estate in thorough repair.
THOMAS CRANE, Landscape gardener

They made me a good job of my mower as well as any factory could have done.
Rev. ALEXANDER MACKAY-SMITH,
Head pastor of the St. Lawrence Church.

The above will show a few of the persons who have had their lawn mowers repaired by Carney Bros. Any one wishing to have their lawn mowers put in order, and all kinds of repairing done, will do well to call on Carney Bros. Their shop is on Somerset street, near Second, and is fitted up with the latest improved machinery for sharpening and repairing lawn mowers. AT AUNTY'S HOME.

One time when we'd at aunty's house—
"Way in the country—where
They've lot but woods an' pigs and cows,
An' all out doors an' air!
An' orchards stirred, an' cherry trees,
An' cherries in 'em! Yes, an' those Big red-hued birds of prey that skirt
An' soldier of you, there!
W'y wonst, one time when we was there
We et out on the porch!

Wite where the red-door was that
The main door, an' I.
Let aunty set by me an' eat
My victles up—an' pie
Thy gentlest friend! I could see
The red-heads in the cherry trees
An' beetives, where you got to be
So heerful goin' by—
An' oomp'ny there an' all! and we—
We et out on the porch!

An'—I bet ef y'-ercorns an' things
'At me don't low me to—
An' chick an gizzards don't like wings
Little parties—dew, dry pies
An' all that time the wind blowed there
An' I could feel it in my hair,
An' it seemed like somewhere!
An' a old red-head flew
Purr' nigh wite over thy high chair,
When we et out on the porch!
—James Whitcomb Riley.

THE TRAIN ROBBERS.

Four of us—a young lady, governess in an officer's family—a wealthy merchant, middle-aged—the company's horseshoer, bound for the stables at Denver—and myself, government expert and mineral expert, had left Santa Fe, N. M., on the S. F. & D. stage one scorching summer afternoon. It was now 2 o'clock in the morning. We had just congratulated ourselves on being safely out of the most dangerous passes, and were driving briskly toward the Canadian fork.

The full moon lightened our way, making the bushes and trees adjacent cast sharp, decided shadows across the road. I had changed places with the little horseshoer on the roof for the sake of a little more air. The "inside" was broiling, but I felt wakeful and alert. We beguiled the sultry hours by story telling. Suddenly I saw something moving in the shadows ahead of us.

"What is that?" I said.

The driver looked, his eyes rounding like the moon. "Nothing but a burro," he replied, referring to the pack mules that frequently strayed down the mountain side. It disappeared quickly in the shade, and from thence, as if by magic, two men, the polished barrels of their rifles gleaming in the moonlight, sprang into the road.

They wore huge slouched sombreros and army cloaks. The stoutest of the pair caught the bridles of the leaders; the other, covering us with his Winchester, roared:

"Stir a finger an' yer dead men!" Advancing closer, and keeping us within range of his muzzle, he shouted:

The driver began to stammer a reply, but I stopped him with a muttered, "Shut up! Let me talk to these chaps! There's no treasure aboard to-night!"

I said this coolly, at the same time swaying my body to and fro, to get out of the range of the muzzle; the man was evidently very determined as well as very near. As I intended he should, he took me for an express messenger, and as neither driver nor messenger is supposed to possess any valuables they are seldom molested.

"None o' yer nonsense!" replied the bandit. "Hand out the treasure or ye'll see trouble, blast yer!"

The scoundrel at the reins, who held his rifle pointed at me from between the horses' heads, evidently enjoyed my endeavors to get out of range, for he squeaked in a high falsetto voice: "Does them bar'ls look big?" "Yes," I said, echoing the old joke current among the miners: "I can read all the advertisements on the sides!"

He gave a hoarse chuckle. "Hy'ar, hy'ar; heave out ther specie box!" roared the ruffian with the Winchester. I insisted there was none. "Here, look at the way bill; if there's any such thing aboard it will be among the items."

I threw him the way bill. He dropped his rifle, and, picking it up, looked it over in the moonlight. Profiting by the action, I undertook to slip my pocketbook into my boot, and moved my hand round to get at the pocket.

The driver, mistaking the movement, whispered, "Have you got one?" The man at the horses' heads noticed our little conference, and yelled at us. The other instantly leveled his gun straight at my head: "None o' that! Hands up!"

We threw up our hands and he again turned to the way bill. I did manage, though, to slip my money into my boot.

"You see, there's no mention made of the treasure, and if it was sent it would certainly be noticed on the bill. However, you can get up and look in the box and satisfy yourself."

He hesitated a moment, then climbed up, rifle in hand, and looked in the box; in doing so he kicked my valise. (As a government expert, I was well known to the bankers of Santa Fe.)

They never hesitated to intrust me with large amounts of money, and this trip was no exception, having with me nearly $15,000 in gold, secured partly in an inner belt around my waist, partly by a false bottom improvised in my valise by gumming strong wrapping paper over the useless pasteboard, an inner lining of the bag. "Open this hy'ar grip!" cried the road agent. I did so, carefully taking out its contents and letting him look inside. The wrapping paper deceived him.

"Naw," he growled, "ther's no treasure on this stage, but we've sworn to have $200 to-night, an' ef we don't fin' it in yer treasure box we mought fu' it in yer baggage. Who's inside?"

"Two men and a lady. None of them rich; one of them is a horseshoer going to Denver to shoe the company horses."

"We'll look at 'em. Whatever happens don't yer move on yer life. We may find the cash on them or in the baggage."

The "insides" appeared to be sleeping. The man rattled the door and roused them. Leveling his rifle, he ordered them out to be searched. They obeyed, apparently half asleep. He placed them in a row. "Hands up!" he said. "Now fur your pocketbooks!"

The horseshoer had but $2 in silver; the merchant's purse showed only $10 and a few small bills, and the young lady's nothing but her papers and a little change. The poor girl looked as if about to faint.

"You're a ornary crowd ter have so little with yer," he snarled, "an' I've a good mind ter send yer all ter blazes this cussed night. Two hundred we've sworn to have, so we'll have ter rip up yer baggage." This was uttered with infinite disgust.

The man and then spoke: "You'll find nothing of any account in our baggage, but if you will ask this young lady for her hat, and can find the $1,000 in bills she concealed in it just before leaving Santa Fe, I think you will certainly consider yourself repaid for your trouble."

The girl turned toward him with blazing eyes, and uttered the word, "Traitor!" There was no escape. The hat was taken possession of. After the lining had been carefully ripped out it was returned with a few gruff words of apology.

"In luck, by heavens!" cried the highwayman, exultingly. "Pile in, all. Sorry fur yer loss, Miss, but we're boun' ter take all we kin git. We ain't got no treasure; but this here'll do 'bout as well. Drive on!"

"I want the way bill!" I said, excitedly, for the scene we had just witnessed had raised my indignation to fever heat. He handed it to me, but it fluttered under the advice, but could not find language strong enough to express our opinion of the merchant. The driver made the air fairly lurid with his sulphurous profanity, and the young lady answered all attempts at consolation with hysterical sobs. The merchant alone appeared to retain his cool equanimity of temper.

Arriving at Denver he begged very earnestly of the young lady, with me as her escort, to grant him a few moments for explanation in a private parlor. He pleaded so fervently that she gave a reluctant assent. He closed the door and bolted it, which took a little strange.

"Don't be afraid," said he, as I felt for my revolver. Sitting down he pulled off his boot and from the toe took out a wad of bills. Said he, "My poor child, let me make restitution. Here are $2,000 in bills for the $1,000 you lost"—handing her two $1,000 bills —"your lining was a godsend to me. If they had searched me further they would have secured $20,000 instead of $1,000.

"And besides, concealed in my baggage are diamonds and other precious stones, which, if they had secured, would have beggared me." Taking a beautiful solitaire from his vest lining, he presented that also to her. "I should have explained in the stage," he said, "but walls have ears, and why should I trust the others with my secrets?"—Edward J. Armstrong in Cincinnati Commercial.

How a King Keeps Cool.

Although one may not keep cool, it is some satisfaction to know how others manage it. There is the King of Siam, for instance. He is said to have in his employ a country palaces a wonderful pavilion. It was built by a Chinese engineer as a refuge for the King during the extreme heat of Summer. The walls, ceiling and floors are formed of pieces of plate glass an inch thick. They are so perfectly fitted together with a transparent cement that the joints are invisible and no fluid can penetrate. The pavilion is 30 feet long and 17 wide, and stands in the middle of a huge basin made of beautiful colored marbles.

When the king enters the pavilion the single door is closed and cemented. Then the sluice gates are opened and the basin is filled with water. Higher and higher it rises, until the pavilion is covered and only the ventilators at the top connect it with the open air. When the heat on the sun is so great that the water almost boils on the surface of the freshest fountains this pavilion is deliciously cool. And this is the way the king of Siam cools himself off in hot weather. It sounds very delightful.

Inland Lakes.

It is not generally realized that there are in this country literally millions of lakes which are available for water farming; in size all the way from mere ponds to the great inland seas of fresh water. In Illinois alone there are tens of thousands of lakes, and hundreds of thousands more can be readily created.

There are in Illinois many extinct lakes, which can easily be transformed into sheets of water by the simplest means. All the enormous "Lake Plain," as it is known to geologists, comprising Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan, north of the Ohio River, is dotted with countless sheets of water, conditions being favorable for creating many more by such inexpensive artifices as the damming of streams.

By damming at intervals, every creek and rivulet can be made to form artificial lakes. Even the vast arid region, the "Great Desert" of the West, is speckled all over with multitudes of extinct lakes which can be filled once more and made to teem with life, as they once did.—Youth's Companion.

MR. WRETCHES OUTLINES.

A Game That Will Train the Eye, Hand and Inventive Faculty.

Here is an opportunity for any ingenuity as well as the artistic faculty of a party. Slips of paper are distributed among the company, and each player marks on his slip a troubled line of any shape he pleases. The papers are then passed on, or exchanged, and each player has to add lines to the created line at hand, and the paper handed to him so as to represent a complete figure or sketch of some kind that will be recognizable. The best plan is to allow a certain time for the sketching, after the lines are already drawn. If possible, to suggest some figure and to work accordingly. It is of course understood that the works of art to be produced are only expected to be of the very roughest description. If there is a difficulty in dealing with the outline as it stands, the player is entitled to place it on its side, or even upside down, if he prefers it.

WRETCHES OUTLINES.

The thick lines in the illustration indicate the original "outlines" to which the figures have been drawn. We dare not flatter our readers that they will always be as successful as our artist has been, but we can assure them that the sketches given have been produced with strict regard to the conditions of the game, i.e., the sketches have really been drawn to haphazard lines, not the lines drawn to fit the sketches.

THE ARROGANT LITTLE GIRL.

We Hope This Will Not Apply to Any Children We Know.

If there is one style of child more disagreeable than any other it is the arrogant girl, be she little or big, young or old. I was in a book store in New York some days ago, when school had just opened, and was suddenly startled by a shrill voice demanding, "Mr. Blank, I did not ask for a soiled copy-book when I bought this; you will please change it at once!"

The man she addressed was probably forty-five years old, and the rude, arrogant child not over ten years. As he took the book to replace it with a clean one she said: "Now, don't you give me another soiled one; I won't have it!"

The words were bad enough, but the manner they were said in was far worse. Oh, it was indescribable! I looked into that little girls face and saw it was harsh and horrid looking just like her words sounded.

But after all she was not entirely to blame, for I suppose no mother has been imprudent enough to comment on the carelessness of the shop-keeper who sold her the soiled book, and she had taken her cue from that, and had acted accordingly. And all this goes again to prove that young and old should keep strict guard over himself, for from hasty words and thoughtless actions arise all the commotions of life.

Preserving Flowers.

Flowers may be preserved for several months by merely dipping in paraffine. Take each flower by the extremity of the stalk, plunge it into a vessel of melted paraffine; quickly withdraw, and twirl rapidly between the finger and thumb, so as to shake off the superfluous oil; they will keep about twelve months.

Nonsense Rhyme.

There once was a wooden-legged sailor,
Who thought he should make a good tailor;
But his notsy pegs
Couldn't cross like true legs,
Which grieved that poor wooden-legged sailor.

Thought It Ought to Satisfy Him.

"Madam!" exclaimed the indignant neighbor, "your little boy has got a hatchet and he won't give it up."

"Oh, let the little darling have it," replied the fond mother.

"But he's brandishing it about his head and chasing the other children around the yard."

"He's crying 'Ugh! Ugh! Whoop!' isn't he?"

"That's exactly what he's doing."

"Yes; my pet likes to play Indian. Does he cry 'Me scalp palefaces?'"

"Yes, yes; but didn't you see"——

"Oh, let the little fellow enjoy himself. He takes much pleasure in the sport," said the fond mother.

"But he'll kill some of the others!" cried the indignant neighbor frantically.

"Not intentionally," returned the fond mother. "He never means to hurt any one."

"No; but he does sometimes, and it's dangerous, madam; it's dangerous."

"Perhaps it is," said the fond mother thoughtfully. Then she went to the window and called out:

"Willie, if you hit any of the children with that hatchet I'll spank you and put you to bed."

"You need have no fears," she said to the indignant neighbor, as she resumed her seat. "I hate to punish the little, but I promise you that I will if he hits one of the children."

And she cannot understand now why the neighbors ill will since their children to play with Willie.—Chicago Tribune.

FEELING

That there is needed in Plainfield an establishment where garments can be gotten up in an artistic, perfect-fitting manner, at N. Y. prices, I would inform friends and the general public that I have opened one, or below, and will keep for inspection a fine line of sample cloths.

BREVITIES.

—Vote for George Kyte and good government.

—A total eclipse of the moon will occur on Nov. 15th.

—The Union County Court adjourned yesterday until Thursday.

—Don't fail to vote to-day. The polls will remain open until seven p. m.

—The various grocery stores throughout the city closed at noon to-day.

—The Borough Council will hold a regular meeting next Friday evening.

—The Republican City Executive Committee held a meeting last evening.

—The bowling section of the Y. M. C. A. will meet on the Olympia Alleys to-night.

—The short hand class will meet as usual at the Y. M. C. A. this evening at 7.15 o'clock.

—Gazelle Engine Company No. 1, will hold a meeting to-morrow evening at half-past seven o'clock.

—The Democratic Primaries will be held next Monday and Tuesday evenings at Democratic headquarters.

—Albert Cook was fined five dollars by Mayor Gilbert this morning. The charge against Cook was drunkenness.

—There will be services in St. Mary's church next Friday evening at eight o'clock in honor of the Sacred Heart.

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Hope Chapel held evangelistic services in the chapel last evening.

—George Staats of East Third street was badly burned about the face and hands with powder yesterday afternoon. Dr. Paul attended him.

—The regular monthly meeting of the "Ts" was held this afternoon, at four o'clock, in their rooms corner of Peace street and North avenue.

—George Kyte is a staunch Republican send him back to Trenton. He is not afraid of that corporation which that city is at present afflicted.

—It is said that Mr. E. W. Titsworth will be the Republican candidate for Council in the Fourth Ward and that Mr. V. L. Frazee will be the Democratic nominee.

—It was rumored this morning that Mr. Gerard Fassett had received a telegram to the effect that J. Sloat Fassett had been elected Governor of New York by 20,000 majority.

—Commencing next Sunday the Vesper and Benediction service will be held in St. Mary's church at half-past three p. m. instead of at eight p. m. as has heretofore been the custom.

—Every North Plainfield Republican should be sure and vote. One vote may save from defeat. Mr. George A. Dilts, the candidate for Assembly, is a Republican worthy of your confidences.

—Mr. Franklin S. Smith teacher of science in the public schools will give an illustrated talk at the Y. M. C. A. rooms Thursday evening upon the "The Chemistry of Flame." Admission will be free.

—A large number of people witnessed the exhibition given by the members of Alert Hose Company this morning when they tested the new four-way hydrant at the corner of Madison avenue and Third street.

—Saturday afternoon at five o'clock a fire, in the yard of the Potter Printing Press Works, was extinguished by Messrs. William Bitner and George Frazee. It is thought that the fire was started by a spark from a locomotive.

—It is against the law to build bonfires after dark. Some young men in the Borough did so recently and that watchful official, Marshal Thomas Rutledge, caught them and took them before a Justice to be reprimanded. The Justice did so and let them go. The fact that the Marshal, as usual, did his duty seems ground enough for an attack upon him by a certain paper given to that sort of thing.

The Beskeman Cannot Recover.

George Nelson, the brakeman who was injured in the wreck on the Central Railroad at Greenbrook tanks, near Dunellen last Thursday morning, cannot possibly recover. When he was taken to his home at Neshanic and medical examination revealed the fact that his ribs had been crushed very badly and his death is only the question of a few days.

To Receive Returns To-night.

The Young Men's Republican Club has arranged to have a special wire in their rooms on East Front street to-night and a competent telegraph operator will be present to take election returns from all parts of the county.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE REGULAR MEETING FOR NOVEMBER.

About Extending Peace Street.—Mayor Gilbert Again Vetoes the Sewerage Ordinance.—The Combine Inaugurated. His Wise Advice and Push in the Scheme Through Over His Veto.—The Combine Want to Borrow $4,000 More.—No Money to Pay Bills.

The City Common Council met in regular session last evening. Besides the President, Councilmen Ackerman, Gilsey, Ginna, Hetfield, Johnston, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, See and Spangenberg were present.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

A petition from the estate of the late D. J. Baker asking permission to erect a ventilator on top of the coal sheds on Park avenue was read and referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings.

In a petition Dr. Geo. W. Endicott requested permission to erect an addition to his house, corner of Park avenue and Seventh street. The petition was referred to the Committee on Fire and Buildings with power.

On recommendation of the Board of Engineers Edward McCann was confirmed as foreman of Zephyr Hook & Ladder Company.

B. B. Gray and others petitioned for an electric light on Hillside avenue. The petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lights.

Mannina Bros. petitioned for a peddler's license. The petition was referred to the Committee on Licenses and subsequently granted.

Borough Counsel Charles A. Reed was then given the privilege of the floor and he addressed the Council in reference to the opening and widening of Peace street. During the course of his remarks he said he understood that the position of North Plainfield in the matter had been explained by the Corporation Counsel. He said that the borough's position legally had been explained. He stated that if Council on this side opened the street from its present terminus to the brook it would block the borough in opening the street. The borough he said had only the right to accept streets after they had been opened and had no authority to open them. Under the road law the borough has no right to open a street where it is necessary to remove a house. There is no way except by special legislation, he said, or by obtaining the consent of half the property owners. Then commissioners could be appointed to assess benefits and damages. Their report need not be accepted or approved by Council unless it is satisfactory. "If you open the street to the brook you take away our only essential point and if it is not extended into North Plainfield I think it would be only a waste of money. I ask you not to pass the ordinance until we present our petition. It is now ready and in my possession. We have succeeded in securing the consent of one-half the property owners, but the law requires that the notice shall be published ten days. If Council will wait up until two weeks from to-night we will be ready to present the petition, therefore I ask you not to pass the ordinance until then."

The various claims were presented, referred to the various committees and the following communication from his honor, the mayor, was then read.

October 30, 1891.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN:—I return herewith without my approval "An Ordinance to Provide for Sewerage in the City of Plainfield" adopted Oct. 19th, 1891 This ordinance with the exception of a corrected date is similar to the one vetoed by me on the 30 ult., and all of the objections urged against the adoption of that ordinance except the one which had reference to the time when it should apply with equal force to this

Accompanying this ordinance I find a description of the system which Mr. Low proposes to introduce, by which we are informed that "the main sewer will begin at the north from the corner of Richmond and Seventh streets six feet below the surface with a grade of ten feet to the mile, and pass through Seventh street, Franklin place, Ninth street, Central avenue, Eighth street, Plainfield avenue, to Front street, there to be met by another main trunk line, which should start from the intersection of Front and Richmond streets—both to converge into a 24-inch sewer on Front street, pass through Front street to West End avenue, (now Grant avenue), through West End avenue, in establishment of the outlet sewage tank at the sewage works, or to continue to points to be agreed upon. The sewage passes through pipes at the outlet, or through sewage tanks at the sewage works, where it is treated with chemicals, the solid ingredients are precipitated and drawn off, while the liquid part is clarified and allowed to filter through into the earth."

Just what this means it is difficult to tell. There is nothing in the description which would lead an individual to guess what to do; he does not say that he is to locate his sewage works at Grant avenue and Front street, although one suggests the possibility of it; he does not say how the sewage is to be disposed of; he leaves us to draw our own inferences as to whether it is to be by irrigation, chemical precipitation, or some other way.

That Mr. Low should present his scheme so vaguely and indefinitely is not a matter of surprise, for I am informed that he never constructed a sewerage system, and he is desirous of having a franchise that will enable him to experiment at our cost in his own property. But that your honorable body should, on such an unsatisfactory description of his system, without any detail plans, be willing to grant him a franchise is sufficient to justify a great deal of surprise. I think it would be difficult to find another instance of a municipal corporation granting a franchise for so important a work, with so little investigation. We have been asked, and without having before it detail plans of the proposed work.

What kind of a system are we to have? Is the sewage to be disposed of by chemical precipitation or by irrigation? Are the sewage works to be located at Grant avenue or not? Have any tests been selected for the purpose? Have any tests been made to determine the adaptability of the soil to filtration purposes? We can definitely answer these questions! Surely the people of Plainfield ought to know before a franchise is granted.

The disposal of sewage by chemical precipitation or filtration requires knowledge and experience; it is a difficult problem to deal with and should only be undertaken under the guidance of men competent to direct us. We shall never be able to reach a satisfactory solution of the sewerage question until we have definitely ascertained what plant is best adapted to our needs and how best to obtain it. We cannot afford to put ourselves in the hands of unskilled men, neither can we afford to have Mr. Low or his proposed company experiment with the treatment of sewage by chemical precipitation, irrigation or otherwise so near our doors as Grant avenue.

Respectfully submitted,

A. GILSEY, Mayor.

Mr. Ackerman moved that the communication be received and spread in full on the minutes. It was so ordered.

The monthly statement of the City Collector and Treasurer were read and referred to the Finance Committee.

The quarterly report of the Corporation Counsel was read and ordered filed.

The quarterly report of the City Physician was also read and ordered filed.

Fisher & Monfort were granted permission to erect a show case in front of their place of business.

Mr. Ackerman stated that the bills presented at the present meeting amounted to $2,000 and that there was only $62.000 in the hands of the city treasurer. He then offered a resolution to the effect that the Mayor and Clerk be instructed to negotiate a loan of $4,000 in anticipation of taxes. The resolution was adopted.

On motion of the same gentleman the Mayor and Clerk were instructed to renew the note of $5,500 for fifty-five days.

Resolutions to the effect that $200 be transferred from the general fund to the poor fund and $1,000 be transferred from the general fund to the Fire Department fund were adopted.

A resolution offered by Mr. Ackerman to the effect that the boards of registry for the charter election be instructed to open on Tuesday, Nov. 24th, for the purpose of revising the list of registered voters, was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Hetfield the rules were suspended to enable the Committee on Fire and Buildings to report.

Mr. Hetfield presented an ordinance providing for the macadamizing of Woodland avenue from South to La Grande avenues to the depth of four inches.

Mr. Ackerman asked what portion of the expense was to be paid by the property owners and inquired if it had been paid into the treasury.

Mr. Hetfield replied 15 cents per foot but that it had not been paid into the treasury, but would be before the ordinance was passed.

Mr. Ackerman inquired how many houses there were on that street.

The City Clerk informed him that there were only six.

Mr. Ginna did not approve of macadamizing that street to the depth of four inches, as it was simply, in his opinion, throwing money away.

The ordinance was adopted on its first and second readings, after it had been amended to macadamize to the depth of six inches instead of four. It was then ordered engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Spangenberg introduced an ordinance amending the fourteenth section of the Peace and Moral ordinance. The ordinance provided for a fine of $50 or imprisonment not exceeding sixty days or fire alarm boxes, one-half of the fine to go to the informer. The ordinance was adopted on its first and second readings ordered engrossed and advertised.

The ordinance prohibiting the defacing of trees was adopted on its third reading and final passage.

Mr. Hetfield moved that the ordinance in relation to the building of a system of sewerage be taken from the table and adopted on the third reading and final passage, notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor.

Mr. Ackerman thought the matter had been disposed of and did not see how Council could go back to it.

Mr. Hetfield said it was necessary to act on the ordinance at the present meeting.

President Smith said that the chair would rule that the motion was in order.

Mr. Ackerman said he was sorry to see the gentlemen of the other side of the house (meaning the combine) trying to push the matter through notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor. The Mayor, he contended, had made some good suggestions in his communication to Council and he thought they should be given some attention. Continuing he said, "I agree with the Mayor in the position he takes. In passing this ordinance we are giving Low & Co. a blanket franchise. The ordinance does not say anything in the kind of a system of sewerage is to be maintained. I would like to know if the gentlemen on the other side of the house could inform me. The contract is indefinite. It does not state where his plant is to be located. It does not state what Mr. Low proposes to dispose of his sewerage. We should be very particular in granting this franchise. Therefore Mr. President, I vote no.

Mr. Hetfield said it would not be wise for Mr. Low to state where he proposed locating his works, as it would give the farmers a chance to raise the price of his land considerably if he knew that Mr. Low was compelled to purchase it. Mr. Low would be foolish in making known the place he proposed to locate. Continuing he said, "so far as the system is concerned I know it is the same as is at present in operation in Atlantic City and I have recently visited that city and upon inquiries ascertained that the system gave perfect satisfaction. It works without any detail plans, be willing to grant him a franchise is sufficient to justify a great deal of surprise. I think it would be difficult to find another instance of a municipal corporation granting a franchise for so important a work, with so little investigation. We can definitely answer these questions before it detail plans of the proposed work.

BOARD OF EDUCATION MEETING.

The Addition to Bryant School to be Occupied December 1st.

The Board of Education met in the High School building on Fifth street last evening. President Kirkner, Mr. Finch and Dr. Probasco of the board, Clerk Clark and Principal of the schools, Miss Buckley, were present.

Various reports were made. Dr. Probasco said the addition to Bryant school would be ready and safe to occupy by December 1st.

President Kirkner suggested that these fine days all the windows and doors be opened so that the building would be perfectly safe. Dr. Probasco said they were opened every day.

Miss Buckley said the additional room was greatly needed.

An estimate on books for the library, by Mr. Babcock, gave a total of $164 for about 200 volumnes.

The report from Tax Collector Johnson showed that $971.72 had been deposited in the First National Bank and $900 in the City National, to the credit of the board.

Dr. Probasco called attention to certain rooms in Washington school where the light was very bad. It was, he said, of great injury to the pupils' eyes.

The following bills were ordered paid:

Seely Edsall	$ 4.00
Spicer & Hubbard	3.75
S. R. Hope	3.75
Wm. King	3.75

After auditing the bills Mr. Finch was excused, as he had to attend the meeting of the Republican Executive Committee.

Business of no special public interest was then discussed. It related chiefly to school supplies.

Meeting adjourned 9:40.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. Rudolph Laurent of Somerset street is confined to his home by illness.

Mr. William Spangenberg of Netherwood will call for Africa to-morrow to engage in missionary work.

Ex-Councilman Gilford Mayer and family of Park avenue have left Plainfield for their Winter home in New York.

Dr. Field on Sunday last performed a very delicate operation on Mr. Harry Werner's toes. Mr. Werner is now doing as well as can be expected.

Mrs. Champney, wife of Dr. Champney, who, about a month ago, took chloral in a mistake for bromide, was reported in The News at the time, is slowly recovering.

New Officers.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Temperance Aid Society held Thursday, Oct. 29th., the following officers were elected:

President—Mrs. G. F. Opdyke.

First Vice President—Mrs. J. D. Titsworth.

Second Vice President—Mrs. Lanphear.

Third Vice President—Mrs. P. M. French.

Treasurer—Mrs. Geo. Angleman.

Secretary—Mrs. W. B. Maxson.

Dowd Fined.

Thomas Dowd, Jr., the young man who was arrested by Policemen Cooney and Flanagan Saturday night for interfering with an officer, was arraigned before Mayor Gilbert at the Station House last evening. He pleaded guilty to the charge and the Mayor gave him the choice of paying a fine of ten dollars or of spending ten days at Elizabeth at the county's expense. He will probably choose the latter.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The French and the sultan of Morocco are quarreling about Tonat, the oasis in the desert of Sahara. There cannot even an oasis in a desert that people do not quarrel over it.

To get into "good society." First, have money and move into a good neighborhood. Next, have first class breeding and cultivation and a good temperament. Next, don't be too ostentatious, but wait and the good society come to you. It will come.

"We are resting on a semifluid mass which is covered by a crust only six-teen feet thick," says General Fitzsimmons, the expert who was set to report on the foundations of Chicago. Yes, and one of these days Chicago will put her foot in it, and then what an awful time there will be.

Mr. W. W. Wells, of Leith, England, has invented and patented a small steel boat which he calls Nina is absolutely unsinkable. It is built and put together in sections which are both air and water tight, and it can only be sunk if these should be pierced both above and below the water line at the same time. The sections are three in number. Mr. Wells designed the boat for sporting and shooting purposes.

The Greatest Trotter.

One hardly knows whether Sunol, the California 5-year-old mare, is the greatest trotter or not. It is true she made a mile in 2.08¾, beating by half a second the great performance of Maud S at Cleveland in 1885. But Maud S won her 2.08¾ upon the old fashioned track. Sunol's track at Stockton, Cal., was the kite shaped one, with only one long turn. The kite shaped track favors the horse to such an extent that it is still somewhat a matter of doubt whether Sunol is faster than Maud S.

There are several things, however, that are not matters of doubt. One is that Robert Bonner certainly owns the two fastest trotters on the globe. What daylight it would be to see the two beauties together in a light road wagon. Another thing not in doubt is that 1891 will stand as the most famous record breaking year in half a century in several lines.

As to trotters, will the prize banner for the state that breeds the greatest trotters pass from Kentucky to California? Maud S, the Kentucky mare, made her great record of 2.08¾ when she was 11 years old. Sunol, the splendid California, is only 5. It is claimed that a horse's racing qualities improve up to the animal's eighteenth year. It may be, therefore, that Sunol may beat our 2.08¾. Meantime little Nancy Hanks, the Kentuckian, has a record of 2.09.

Some of the figures of the salaries one theatrical actors receive look bewildering to the clerk or typewriter who toils eight to ten hours a day for from seven to fifteen dollars a week. But the ones who get the large pay are but about one in 2,500. Then, too, it is to be remembered that theatrical people are unemployed two to three months in the year, and must live during the summer on what they save in the season." Again, their expenses are enormous compared to those of the ordinary wage worker. They dare not "skimp" either their stomachs or their backs, for the effect will at once be manifest on their physical appearance, and to the player physical appearance is everything.

In the Jefferson-Florence combination Florence gets $1,500 a week. When Modjeska played in the Booth-Barrett company she was paid $1,000 a week. Next to these comes Lillian Russell, the favorite American prima donna in opera comique. In the Lillian Russell Opera Comique company, of which she is the central sun, she gets $800 a week. Times have changed since the days when this beautiful woman and peerless singer was found one day by her mother, who arrived unexpectedly, doing her own housework in a basement in New York.

Francis Wilson is another who suddenly took the public by storm, and rode upon the waves of popularity to fame and fortune. He received last season $600 a week, with extra pay for matinees. Before he became rich he began to build a modest home for himself in one of New York's prettiest suburbs, New Rochelle. With the sudden accession of fortune the design was remodeled and the modest cottage before it was finished swelled to castlelike proportions, with a complete theater on the top floor.

Mrs. John Drew gets in the Jefferson-Florence company $300 a week. Ada Rehan is said to receive from Daly $250 a week, while Dr. Wolf Hopper commands $650. Marie Tempest at the New York Casino receives $300 a week. Frohman pays Dixey $800, Marion Manola commands $350, Mina Gale got $75 a week from the Booth-Barrett company, and Pauline Hall the same price from Rudolf Aronson before she formed her own company. From these figures a change is financially all the way down to the would be star who steps from society upon the professional stage and pays a manager for letting her appear before the public. And for every one who commands the prices mentioned there are at least ten who are, as the slang of the profession phrases it, "traveling on their uppers."

BATTLE OF THE BALLOTS

A View of the Field of Today's Election.

NEW YORK'S SPIRITED CONTEST.

McKinley and Campbell and the Tariff and Silver in Ohio—A Small Ticket, but a Warm Fight in Pennsylvania. What New Jersey Does This Year.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—A memorable campaign has closed with a flare of torchlights and a blaze of eloquence, the battle of the ballots occurred today, and these are the men most interested in the outcome:

	Democrat.	Republican.
Governor	R. P. Flower	J. Sloat Fassett
Lieut. Gov	W. F. Sheehan	J. W. Vrooman
Sec. of State	Frank Rice	E. Dorsheimer
Attorney General	Wm. F. Sheehan	W. E. Sutherland
Comptroller	Frank Campbell	A. C. Wadsworth
Treasurer	Elliott Danforth	Jas. M. Varnum
Engineer and Surveyor	Martin Schenck	Y. Colvin

The campaign in this great political battle ground has been decidedly unique. Never have greater interests, from the partisan standpoint, been involved; never has a canvass been conducted with greater earnestness and industry. "You lost the World's fair!" cried the Democrats. "You lost it yourselves!" and "Beware of the Tammany Tiger!" were the Republican war cries. National issues have been kept in the background, although everybody understands that the result of this election may decide the contest for the next year.

Novel Features of the Campaign.

The situation is not without other novel aspects. We behold Grover Cleveland and George William Curtis, the New York Times and The Evening Post arrayed on opposite sides, while Lieutenant Governor Jones has been most pronounced in his support of Fassett. The contest presents every indication of uncertainty. Not since 1879 have the Republicans elected a governor, and their victory then was due to a split in the Democracy. But this year the Republican leaders appear sanguine of success.

Fassett's Numerous Speeches.

It is long since the Republican party in this state has presented such a united front. Fassett has spoken in nearly every county in the state and conducted a vigorous campaign. His democratic opponent has not been idle, sometimes making three or four speeches in one night. He has had the solid backing of his party, and Hopper and Hiscock have rendered service on the stump. The final exhibition of party harmony was made when Warner Miller presided at a big mass meeting.

Flower's Oratorical Batteries.

Mr. Flower has made a few very effective speeches in the metropolis, and has been assisted by Governor Boies of Iowa, Governor Hill, Mayor Chapin and others. Mr. Sheehan has made an industrious canvass of the state. The County Democracy has nominated a local ticket of its own and indorsed Flower, while the Kings county Democracy, which wanted to nominate Chapin for governor, professes loyalty to the state ticket. The Stecklers will probably divert some Democratic votes from Flower, and Democratic antagonism to Sheehan may do some votes in Erie. Both parties have made strong bids for the labor vote.

Ten supreme court justices and a legislature will be elected. The tidal wave of last year gave the legislature to the Democrats on joint ballot. A change in only five canvassers will give the Republicans a majority in the next assembly, and they feel secure in the senate.

Ex-Senator Platt Denies It.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—An affidavit sworn to by Real Estate Broker Vernon H. Stevenson, of 146 Broadway, was printed today, setting forth that on the 9th Washington Congressman Enloe, of Tennessee, told him that Thomas C. Platt had offered him (Enloe) a cash bribe of $2,000 if he could send the World's fair to Chicago and use his influence to get his conferees from Tennessee to do likewise.

Mr. Platt telegraphs from Owego as follows:

Any statement by Stevenson or any other Democrat or by that Independent Congressman Enloe, of Tennessee, any one of many to vote against New York for the World's fair is without foundation. I don't know Congressman Enloe. T. C. PLATT.

Buffalo's Cleveland Democracy Mad.

BUFFALO, Nov. 3.—There is considerable excitement here over the action of the Democratic executive committee in the matter of the watchers furnished by the Cleveland Democracy club. The list was furnished by request of the committee, and when it was returned the name of every Democrat was scratched. This action has stirred up considerable feeling in the Cleveland Democracy.

Vedder to See Him.

SALAMANCA, Nov. 2.—Senator Vedder will use Governor Hill for slander, in connection with the latter's statements relative to Vedder and that Chicago land deal. Mr. Vedder's friends here are authority for the statement that he intends to bring both civil and criminal actions.

Fassett Home to Vote.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 3.—Mr. Fassett returned to Elmira to vote and was accorded a grand welcome last night. A monster torchlight procession escorted Mr. Fassett, greeted with a whirlwind of applause when he appeared. It was five minutes before he could speak.

THE BATTLE IN OHIO.

McKinley and Campbell Made a Lively Fight—Figures Piled Up Higher.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 2.—Watch the returns from Hamilton county. One-eighth of the population of Ohio is assembled about the city of Cincinnati. A large majority in that city, either way, will settle the contest. Two years ago Campbell carried Hamilton county by 4,000. Republicans of Hamilton county will have a majority of equal proportions this year. Democrats do not agree with them. Fifteen members of the legislature from Hamilton will have a potent influence on the complexion of that body.

[illegible] how the great parties line up:

[illegible] Wm. McKinley, Jr. Campbell
[illegible] A. L. Harris. W. V. Mason
[illegible] T. L. Jones. Frank Hurd
[illegible] Harold J. Hosley
[illegible] Chas. T. R. P. Ambach
[illegible] Geo. [illegible] Kennedy
[illegible] William G. H. Ward
[illegible] Thomas [illegible] Johnson
[illegible] Jacob [illegible] Rumbo
[illegible] People's candidate for [illegible] This is the ex-
[illegible] vers. He may poll 2,000
[illegible] collections will poll less,
[illegible] votes last year.

The result at the polls [illegible] will go into history as the most notable as well as one of the most earnest and enthusiastic political campaigns ever known in Ohio. The campaign has been fought on national issues almost exclusively, with the understanding that the successful candidate would make a strong bid for the presidential nomination by his party. Silver and the tariff have been the themes discussed on the stump, but state issues have received some attention.

The Australian blanket ballot is being used for the first time this year, and there are so many tickets in the field that politicians are perplexed in the effort to estimate its effect on the result.

One of the most peculiar phases of this campaign is the still hunt for Senator Sherman's scalp being conducted by ex-Governor Foraker. For the prize of a United States senatorship is involved in this election, and should the Republicans be victorious, a very interesting fight will be inaugurated in the legislature between the friends and foes of Sherman. Sherman is strong in the party and Foraker has a large and influential following.

In the event of the People's party having the balance of power in the legislature it is alleged that they will vote for Foraker. "Anything to beat Sherman" is their cry. Sherman and Foraker have been actual on the stump for McKinley. Secretary Foster has also contributed his quota of speeches.

Campbell and Carlisle Spoke.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 2.—Governor Campbell and Senator Carlisle closed the Democratic campaign last night in this city at Music hall. Chairman Hahn claims the vote in Hamilton county by 20,000. Chairman Neal claims a majority of 11,000 for Campbell.

IN THE KEYSTONE STATE.

A Small Ticket, but a Big Fight in Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 3.—Pennsylvania's state ticket is a short one, but the campaign has been long and bitter.

	Republican.	Democrat.
Auditor General	D. M. Gregg	R. E. Wright
State Treasurer	W. H. Morrison	A. L. Tilden

The result largely depends upon the vote of Philadelphia. A Republican majority of 20,000 in that city will probably be sufficient to save the ticket. Harrison carried Philadelphia last year by 20,888 and was defeated. But the Democratic vote in the rural districts was suppressed. The Democrats hope to reduce the normal Republican plurality in Philadelphia, and have conducted a vigorous campaign to that end.

Senator Quay says, "We have nothing to fear, I think, save apathy on the part of Republican voters." Chairman Kerr thinks the Republicans have something to fear from Democratic aggressiveness.

"Bardsley-ism" was the issue vigorously pressed by the Democrats, but the Republicans disdained personal recognition of Bardsley's peculations. Governor Pattison's bold stand on the alleged frauds in the treasury department has not be without effect, and the influence of the Independent Republicans of Philadelphia is an unknown quantity which perplexes the politicians. The Democrats hope to elect Pattison's successor, but it is difficult to predict the result of the vote on that question.

Editors Arrested by Senator Quay.

MEADVILLE, Nov. 3.—R. B. Brown, editor of The Messenger (Democratic), George H. Stuart, editor of The Farmer (Democratic Pennsylvania Farmer's Grange Alliance), were arrested charged with libel by Senator M. S. Quay. The amount of damages claimed is $50,000 each. The accused gave bail in $2,000 each. Senator Quay also entered suit against editor J. Keaney, of the Titusville American Citizen, and has instructed attorneys to bring civil suits against The Western Press, at Mercer, Pa., for libel, with damages fixed at $50,000.

Chairman Kerr Ready for the Suit.

CLEARFIELD, Nov. 3.—The following telegram was sent by Chairman Kerr, of the Democratic state committee, to Senator Quay's counsel in Philadelphia: "Will leave for Philadelphia in the morning to meet any action you may see fit to bring for Mr. Quay. Papers can be served on me at 1,416 South Penn square. I am ready."

P. J. Rooser Withdrew.

SOMERSET, Nov. 3.—The surprise of the campaign in this section is the seventh judicial district last evening when P. J. Rooser, Democratic candidate for presiding judge, voluntarily withdrew from the triangular contest for the sake of harmony in the Republican ranks. This injures the election of Senator Longenecker (Rep.).

IN DOUBTFUL IOWA.

Tariff and Prohibition the Principal Issues—Some Interesting Figures.

DES MOINES, Nov. 3.—Iowa, this old time Republican stronghold, occupies the novel position of a doubtful state this year. And these are the men we are in doubt about:

	Democrat.	Republican.
Governor	Horace Boies	H. C. Wheeler
Lieut. Gov.	S. L. Bestow	Gov. Van Houten
Secretary of State	S. M. Weaver	A. R. Corkhill
Supt. Pub. Inst.	J. B. Knoebler	Henry Sabin
Railroad Com.	P. A. Day	F. T. Campbell

Governor Boies has made a vigorous canvass, sometimes delivering three speeches in one day. Wheeler, the Republican nominee, has made a personal handshaking tour of the state, and with the assistance of able stump orators. The People's and Prohibition parties have also been actively at work. The Democratic victory of two years ago first astounded and then aroused the Republicans. They entered this contest determined to regain their lost prestige, and the indications were that less determined to retain their own ascendancy. The result has been a campaign of unprecedented activity. The battle has been fought on the tariff and prohibition issues.

In 1889 Governor Boies was elected by a plurality of 6,300. In round numbers he received 209,000 votes. His vote was substantially the same as that received by Cleveland in 1888, while the Republican vote was less than that cast for Harrison. It is an interesting question what is to become of these votes this year.

There has been a spirited contest for control of the legislature. In the event of Democratic success, Michigan stands ready of electing presidential electors by congressional districts will probably be tried.

The First Election Bloodshed.

BOONE, Ia., Nov. 3.—A bloody riot occurred at a political meeting in Grant township last evening. Democrats were holding a meeting when roughs tried to break up the meeting by yelling, "Hurrah for Boies and whiskey!" A row ensued, during which knives were used and a dozen men were stabbed. One man is dead and several are believed to be fatally cut. Fifteen arrests have been made.

IN THE OLD BAY STATE.

A Hot Campaign Over the Silver and Tariff Questions.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—These are the candidates who oppose and lodge for the suffrages of the electors of Massachusetts:

	Republican.	Democrat.
Governor	Geo. D. Robinson	W. E. Russell
Lieut. Gov.	W. H. Hale	J. W. Corcoran
Sec. of State	W. H. Olin	Eltridge Cushman
Treasurer	J. A. Marden	J. R. Grinnell
Att'y Gen'l	A. E. Pillsbury	G. M. Stearns
Auditor	J. W. Kimball	W. D. T. Trefry

The Prohibition and People's parties also have full tickets in the field. The Prohibitionists have made a vigorous canvass, with the assistance of Rev. Sam Small. Allen, Lodge, Hear, Crapo and ex-Speaker Reed have held forth for the Republicans, and Russell, Corcoran and Roger Q. Mills have held aloft the Democratic banner. The scene of excitement was reached at the Lodge-Russell joint debate.

The tariff and silver questions have been the themes on every platform. Both parties declare for sound money, but the Democrats have vigorously assailed the Republican silver legislation of the last state legislature, and the constitutional amendment to repeal the poll tax is of paramount interest. Democrats favor the repeal; Republicans are noncommittal. The contest for McKinley's secretary Foster has also contributed his quota of speeches.

Campbell and Carlisle Spoke.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 2.—Governor Campbell and Senator Carlisle closed the Democratic campaign last night in this city at Music hall. Chairman Hahn claims the vote in Hamilton county by 20,000. Chairman Neal claims a majority of 11,000 for Campbell.

TRACY DEFENDS BROWN

Our Navy Was Strictly Neutral in Chilian Waters.

ADMIRAL MONTT FOR PRESIDENT.

It Is Believed That When He Assumes Control of the New Republic All Legitimate Claims for Damages Will Be Settled by His Government.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—Secretary Tracy has made public the instructions sent last spring to Admiral Brown, commanding the Pacific squadron at the beginning of the Chilian disturbances. "These instructions," Secretary Tracy said, "have been rigorously adhered to throughout. They prove conclusively that the charges of partiality made by the English newspapers are untruths, and that they have been invented in order to prejudice the Chilians against the United States for commercial purposes."

Admiral Brown's Instructions.

Insurgent vessels, though outlawed by the Chilian government, are not pirates unless committing acts of piracy. Observe strict neutrality. Take no part in troubles further than to protect American interests. Take whatever measures are necessary to prevent injury by the insurgent vessels to lives or property of American citizens, including American telegraph cables. Endeavor to delay the bombardment by insurgents until American citizens and property are removed, using force if necessary, only as a last resort, and when serious injury is threatened. American vessels seized by the insurgents without satisfactory compensation are liable to be recaptured forcibly, but you should investigate matter fully before taking extreme measures, and use every precaution to avoid such measures if possible.

As further and more explicit guide for your action, you are directed to abstain from any pre-conceived action which shall be in the nature of assistance to either party in the present disturbance or from such sympathy with either party could be inferred.

The instructions then give detailed directions for the government of naval officers and their conduct in similar cases regarding.

Senor Montt's Diplomatic Error.

The sensational incident of the day was an altogether unexpected call made upon Secretary of the Navy Tracy by Senor Montt, the Chilian minister. This call was not only unexpected at the navy department, but was indeed more of a surprise, because, according to diplomatic custom, the Chilian minister should have called upon no member of the cabinet except the secretary of state. General Tracy, however, waived the error, which obviously arose from Senor Montt's genuine desire for information and from his inexperience in diplomatic usage.

No Cause for Alarm.

After the Chilian minister had been in conference with Secretary Tracy half an hour they both walked to the state department and were closeted upon Secretary Blaine. After this second conference was over Secretary Tracy said, "There is absolutely no ground for apprehension or anxiety on the part of the public, and there is not the least foundation for the sensational stories that are in circulation."

Senor Montt left for New Orleans with copies of Captain Schley's telegrams, to be gone until next week. He declined to say anything respecting his visit to the state and navy departments, but expressed the belief that matters were progressing satisfactorily, and deprecated the publication of sensational stories.

Jorge Montt for President.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via GALVESTON, Tex., Nov. 3.—The Conservative party have issued a notice declaring that Jorge Montt, the admiral of the Congressional fleet, is their unanimous choice for president of Chili. Their action has been taken without consulting Admiral Montt, who, with Waldo Silva and Barios Luco, forms the famous Junta.

The papers here are blaming Minister Egan for fomenting the present trouble between Chili and the United States. There is a report from Santiago to the effect that Minister of Foreign Affairs Matta has sent a dispatch to Minister Egan relative to the Baltimore affair. It is said to be couched in a conciliatory tone and to evince in every way a desire to see that justice is done just as soon as the inquiry in this city is concluded.

A Different Tone to Germany.

Minister Matta has written a dispatch to Intendente Arlegui, of this city, asking him to inform the German Admiral Valois that Matta regrets exceedingly the insults offered the other evening on a train to two German naval officers and ordering an immediate inquiry into the affair with a view to punishing the offenders.

The London Times Attacks Us.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—The London Times' reporter at Valparaiso sends a long telegram describing how the United States supported Hippolyte, of Hayti, in the overthrow of Legitime. The writer goes on to say that the policy of the United States toward Hayti is identical with that pursued in Chili. The dispatch refers to Egan's visits to Balmaceda, and says that Balmid the defense of despotism against liberty. Civilized nations were supremely interested in knowing whether Americans approved applying the formidable navy to the support of an anarchical policy.

To Settle All Claims.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—A dispatch from Valparaiso says: The excitement over the Baltimore sailors' incident is subsiding. The presidency of Chili will be formally offered to Jorge Montt. Congress reopens on Nov. 16. The bulk of the political prisoners have been released. The government is disposed to satisfy legitimate claims made by foreigners for losses suffered during the revolution.

The Newark Ordered Ready.

BOSTON, Nov. 3.—Commander Selfridge, of the Charleston, has received instructions from Secretary Tracy directing that the cruiser Newark be made ready for sea by Nov. 10.

A Rejected Lover Suicides.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 3.—Henry Balles, a stone cutter working for J. Spure, of Newark, shot himself at Vailsburg last evening and died in the road. He left a letter in which he said he could not live any longer after being rejected by the girl he loved.

Why He Could Buy.

A thankful manager who had a limited purse, and consequently a limited company, occasionally compelled some of the actors to "double" parts. "That is, play two or more parts in the same piece.

"Lancaster," he said one morning, addressing a very serviceable utility man, "you will have to assist three parts in 'The Silent Foe' tonight—Henderson, Uncle Bill and the Crusher."

"You can't do it? You won't do it? Why?"

"Because it is impossible," returned the indignant actor; "No human being can play those three parts at the same time. In the first scene of the third act two of them have a fight, and the third fellow rushes in and separates them."—Detroit Free Press.

Strong Measure.

Converted Sal: "Ave yer tried 'eaping coals of fire on 'is 'ead?"

Meg: No; I can't exactly say as 'ow I 'ave; but I've tried bilin' water often.—London Judy.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

At Georgiana, Ala., Tom Shepherd, aged eighty, and his wife were found in their bed drained with an ax. This is the fifth murder there in ninety days.

Burglar Charles Schmidt, sentenced to state prison for fifteen years at San Francisco, committed suicide with morphine a few hours after being placed in his cell. Word has reached San Francisco that three German missionaries have been murdered by natives at New Guinea, and that Alexander Gunderson, a white trader, has also been killed on the north coast off New Ireland.

It is said that George A. Armour, of Chicago, a wealthy relative of Phil Armour, who recently left the Presbyterian for the Episcopal church, has donated several hundred thousand dollars to the latter denomination, and will return to the old fold.

A violent clubbing of Anastasios Colombety, a Greek, by a policeman, aroused so much indignation among the Grecian colony at New York that $1,000 was raised to bring suit.

A fire in Lorillard's tobacco factory, in Jersey City, created a panic and caused $50,000 damages.

ROBBED OF WIFE AND MONEY.

That Was Betts' Reason, He Says, for Shooting Blisch.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 3.—Charles F Blisch, proprietor of the Eagle hotel in Peekskill, was shot and killed by Henry E. Betts, of Brooklyn. The shooting was witnessed by D. S. Searle, clerk of the hotel, and Thomas Feehay, of the Peekskill Democrat. Blisch was seated at his desk in the hotel, when Betts entered with a flushed face and excitedly exclaimed as he walked up to Blisch, "You have broken up my family and robbed me of $100,000!" At the same time Betts drew a revolver, and pointing it at Blisch fired. The bullet struck Blisch in the breast. Betts fired a second shot, which lodged under the left shoulder blade, the wounded man having fallen forward on his face.

Betts then walked toward the door and did not make any attempt to escape. Blisch died without regaining consciousness a few minutes after being shot. Constable Herschel arrested Betts, who told Herschel he had killed Blisch because Blisch had broken up his family and had robbed him of $100,000, on which forty-eight was formerly connected with the Pierpont House in Brooklyn and the Doolittle House at Oswego, N. Y. He purchased the Eagle hotel ten months ago from Ambrose Parsons.

During the past summer Mrs. Betts frequently came to Peekskill and stopped at the Eagle hotel. She manifested much interest in Blisch and his business. It is said that Betts some time ago transferred a large sum of money and property to his wife, and the common rumor is that Mrs. Betts was Blisch's financial backer. Mrs. Betts is now in South Dakota for the purpose of obtaining a divorce from her husband.

A WONDERFUL MAN.

HEFFELFINGER, YALE'S GIGANTIC FOOT BALL PLAYER.

He Weighs 402 Pounds, Is Over Six Feet Tall—Handles Himself Perfectly, and Can Lick Any Man on the Field and Keep His Temper Doing It.

The name of a foot ball player who wins distinction on the field by certain remarkable qualities in his make-up, or by a particularly brilliant play, becomes, invariably, a by-word to all who follow the game. And you will always hear him familiarly spoken of by the nickname which he has acquired at college.

W. HEFFELFINGER.

William Heffelfinger is a type of such a person, and in spoking of generally as Old Heff the Reliable, and more particularly in New Haven as The Brute. He is now taking a graduate course, and will be found this year in his old position at left guard. He came to college at the age of twenty, and was graduated in the class of '91, Sheffield Scientific School. When a freshman he won distinction as a foot ball player, although he had never before seen a foot ball. In fact, his only recommendation to the claim of athlete was a high school reputation as a good backstop and batter in base ball, but in this he stands of a distinction to be proud of.

However, from first day of his donning a canvas jacket to his progress in the science of the game was marked, increasing each year, until he finally won the just title of King of Guards. Indeed, friend and foe alike concede to Heff superiority over all others, both past and present, as a rusher. His good qualities are so marked and varied as compared with the general run of men who have won notice in the position of guard that he forms a worthy subject for example.

His average weight in training is about 310 pounds, but this year he will probably play at 305. A few of his measurements may prove interesting. He stands 6 feet 2 inches in his stockings, and not an ounce of fat is noticeable. His chest measurement is 45½ inches; around the biceps 16 inches; calf, 16½; arm, biceps, 18½, and thigh, 25. But these large proportions do not seem to hamper him in the least, for he is the most active of players and one of the fastest runners on the team.

He may have an equal in interference, but there are many who doubt it. The marvelous feat he performed in this line in the Yale-Princeton game last year, running a distance of forty yards, blocking off nothing less than six players from the ball, and then carrying the ball over for a touch down, will be recorded in foot ball history as one of the most brilliant performances on record.

In tackling, too, Heffelfinger is Brutelike, going at his man low and hard every time, and it is a rule with him to make every man he tackles fall toward his own goal.

He is not an aggressive player in the sense of plugging, and will stand all manner of indignities without retaliating. He believes in adhering strictly to the rules. The man who is constantly slugging cannot play good foot ball. By doing so he loses many an opportunity to make a good play, and becomes only a detriment to the success of his team.

Trotting Records Broken.

Three records were broken on the kite-shaped track at Stockton, Cal., recently. The kite-shaped track is estimated to be about three seconds faster than what is known as the regulation track. The speed on a kite-shaped track is gained on the home swell of the round end. The stretches are so long and the turn so easy that there is no friction. On the oval track there are two short turns, much sharper than the single fall turn of the kite-shaped. It is thought that at least two seconds are lost in rounding these turns. About 400 yards of straight-away is gained on the kite-shaped stretches. This also adds materially to the speed of the track. The records which were broken were the 2.09¾ of Maud S., the yearling record, 2.23½; the two-year-old record, 2.16¾. Palo Alto broke his own record of 2.12¾, as did Bell Bird and Arion. The former made the mile in 2.11¾. Bell Bird trotted in 2.26¾ and Arion in 2.14½. The latter performance is amazing. That an animal which had no existence for twenty-four months previously should trot a mile in 2.14½, is startling in the extreme. Well may veteran horseman exclaim, "That record will never be beaten by any other horse." Orrin Hickok exclaimed: "If ever a horse reaches the two-minute mark Arion is that horse." On the Stockton track during the week Captain Thorn, record 2.30¾, paced a mile in 2.18¾. Guide, by Director, reduced his record of 2.17¾ to 2.16¾. Lida W., pacer, went down from 2.26 to 2.16¾. Mount Vernon, by Hatwood, went from 2.18¾ to 2.16. Horse, by Hawthorn, lowered his record from 2.20¾ to 2.17¾. Hazel, by Clay, made a record of 2.28 in a match with Hallerton, by Anteo.

Another Western Finger Billiardist.

The west, that produced "Yank" Adams and Mayer, the second best billiardist, has another prodigy. He twirls billiard balls brilliantly with his fingers. His name is Perry, and Jake Shaefer says that he can beat either Adams or Mayer at any game on the table. He has been giving a series of exhibitions in Chicago at Sanford's rooms. He is a boy of 16 or 17 years. The champion says that some of the shots Perry executes are marvelous illustrations of the odd effect of "English" on the ivories.

The National Horse Show.

Entries for the approaching horse show at Madison Square Garden are so numerous that an extra force of clerks has been employed to enter the names. Assuredly the work has been an all night affair. The quality of the exhibits is of a higher order than at any previous show.

AN APPLIANCE FOR SWIMMERS.

A Modern Genius Presents for Approval a Web Mitten.

Some genius has invented the glove or mitten illustrated herewith. Rural New Yorker explains that this is to be used by swimmers that they may enter the water on terms of equality with a duck or a Newfoundland dog, it being generally conceded that these animals owe their swimming superiority to the web foot and web hand.

A RUBBER WEB HAND.

When a man undertakes to swim too much of the water "slips through his fingers." This flat rubber glove is supposed to stop this and give him more "purchase" in his stroke against the water.

Big Belts Made of Paper.

The Sun calls attention to the paper belts that have the reputation of being superior in many respects to those of leather. These belts are made from pure linen stock, and are of any desired thickness, width or length, having also a driving power equal to any other from an equal surface, and while it is not claimed for them that they are adapted to all kinds of work, they are found to serve well as straight driving belts of not less than five inches in width. Where they have been tested side by side with leather belts for strength and durability they are alleged to have proved equally satisfactory, adhering very closely to the pulley, generating no electricity while running, being also flexible and unaffected by temperature within ordinary limits, though there is one place in which they cannot be used, and that is where they have to run in water, or where they would be constantly subjected to moisture.

The Laughing Plant.

The laughing plant grows in Arabia, and according to The Medical Times, is so called by reason of the effect produced upon those who eat its seeds. The plant is of moderate size, with bright yellow flowers, and soft, velvety seedpods, each of which contains two or three seeds resembling black beans. The natives of the district where the plant grows dry these seeds and reduce them to powder. A dose of this powder has similar effects to those arising from the inhalation of laughing gas. It causes the most sober person to dance, shout and laugh with the boisterous excitement of a madman, and to rush about cutting the most ridiculous capers for about an hour. At the expiration of this time exhaustion sets in, and the excited person falls asleep, to awake after several hours with no recollection of his antics.

Another Use for Iron Cakes.

A new use has been found for tubes produced by the Mannesmann process, says the London Ironmonger. At the funeral of Genral von Moltke the troops were equipped for the first time with bowed the shafts of which, instead of being solid, as usual, were formed of very light steel tubing, made at the Mannesmann works. The tubes are, it is said, naturally lighter than wood, while at the same time possessing much greater elasticity and strength. The only drawback appears to be less secure grip which the metal surface offers as compared with wood.

To Temper a Spring.

The country watchmaker more than his city confrere is called upon to temper a soft spring. This, explains The Horological Review, can be done by preparing a lead bath, that is, a quantity of lead in an iron pot, raising it to such a heat that the lead is red. Into this plunge the spring, and keep it in for a sufficient length of time; then when hot enough quickly plunge into cold water or lard oil. It is necessary next to give it the right temper, which is done by dipping the spring into a small vessel of boiling linseed oil for a few seconds and then into cold oil.

Waste in Handling Gold Coin.

It has been shown by careful experiments made at the United States mint, says the Iron Industry Gazette, that five dollars are lost by abrasion every time $1,000,000 in gold coin are handled. The experiments were conducted with bags containing $5,000 each, and it was shown that the mere lifting of the 200 bags making up $1,000,000 to a truck to be removed to another room caused the loss above stated, and that their transfer from the truck again made a second similar loss.

Destruction of Birds by Railway Trains.

An English exchange has recently called attention to the destruction of birds and insects by railway trains in motion. The front of a locomotive is frequently covered with dead insects, and sometimes one can see upon it the marks of blood from birds which have been killed. Partridges and grouse, startled by the noise of the approaching train and whirring across the line, are occasionally killed, and fall either on the engine or between the tracks.

A Hint for Mechanics.

Most mechanics know that by drilling a hole at the inner end of a crack in cast metal its extension can be prevented. But to find out the exact point where the crack ends The Revue Industrielle recommends moistening the cracked surface with petroleum, then after wiping it to immediately rub it with chalk. The oil that has penetrated into the crack will, by exudation, indicate the exact course and end of the crack.

Suggestions About Pulleys.

Pulleys should not be placed too far from the shaft bangers, says The Engineer. It springs the shaft, causing a waste of power, if it does not bent the journals. Small pulleys are objectionable, however used; they cause a loss of power on account of the belt usually having to be strained very tight. The small arc of contact would otherwise cause the belt to slip, producing irregular speed.

Pickled Cauliflower.

Select good white heads of cauliflower for pickling, break them into small pieces and scald in strong salt and water for ten minutes. Skim the pieces out of the water and let drain well. When cold, pour over them scalding vinegar in which has been boiled a few cloves, allspice, pepper and sticks of cinnamon tied up in a cloth.

SLUMBER PILLOWS.

That Tempt to Sleep with the Odor of Dried Sweet Blossoms and Herbs.

"Slumber pillows are among the latest fads and nothing can be more attractive," says The Decorator and Furnisher, which describes them as follows: "Many of them are made of white linen in order that they can be laundered easily. They are usually embroidered in wash linens or silks, and have on them some appropriate quotation and spray of flowers. A dainty one has maidenhair ferns gracefully embroidered on it. On another is wild Prince. This last named one is filled with rose leaves gathered during the rose season and is very fragrant. One is filled with sweet violets and has a bunch of them on the cover. Others are filled with dried hops, herbs, grasses or down. Some of them are round, with a puff of the same all around and laced with a cord over the puff. Others are square, with the corners coming together on one side with a puff underneath. All sorts of odd and quaint shapes and styles are seen.

"Afghans or slumber robes are needed the year round to throw over one while taking a nap or settling in for a long read. Very attractive ones can be knit of two contrasting colors in stripes and put together with a crocheted cord. They can be finished with a fancy edge or a tied fringe.

"Others equally pretty are crocheted afghan stitch, and have alternate stripes of plain black and Roman ones. These are put together with a fancy cord showing the shades of red, green and black and finished with a heavy fringe, which is tied with dark cord. Stripes about 5 inches wide are used. For a child's afghan five is sufficient."

A Crocheted Afghan.

An Afghan which goes off very fast is the working in alternate shades of red Germantown. The Ladies' Home Companion gives the following directions for working it: "With a very coarse hook chain 126 stitches. Work in double crochet (insert hook in stitch, draw yarn through, then through two stitches on hook); work always into back part of stitch to give a ribbed effect. At the seventh stitch of the chain work two stitches into one stitch; at the fourteenth, miss one. This alternate widening and narrowing gives a vandyke effect. Finish with heavy fringe. Crochet shells on the sides. White and pale blue makes an effective afghan for a baby; make three stripes white and three stripes blue, alternately. If a softer effect is wished, used saxony."

Cross Stitch Embroidery.

In cross stitch embroidery the great thing is to cross all the stitches one way and evenly. The manner of executing this simple work is described as follows by The Housekeeper: "From the left hand corner of one of the squares bring up the needle and thread; then in a slanting direction, that is taking it across the square to the top of the right hand side, you pass the needle down, this forming the first or under part of the stitch. Then comes the upper stitch, forming a cross, from which it takes its name, which you do thus: Bring the needle up to the top of the left hand corner and pass it down through the right hand corner, when you will have formed the complete stitch, and this, through being repeated in delight and producing effects, forms most attractive and suitable for cushion decorations."

"One of the prettiest cushion made with cross stitch is a burnam cover of white flower linen something like satin. For a dozen of eighteen inches above the end every third thread in each direction is pulled out, leaving a background of small squares two threads deep and two threads broad. This represents a canvas on which the design is worked in rope silk from flax, blue and brown, with a little pale silver green—the colors being mingled and arranged so as to imitate the work seen in Cretan and Turkish embroideries."

Novelties in Menu Cards.

The skeleton at the feast has been replaced by the bogy man. After having the bogy man dinned into our ears we are now to have the bogy man as dinner. It is only on a menu, however. Another is a menu of a creepy, crawly character, "The Spider's Web" (see cut). The appropriateness of the design appears to lie in the fact that the spider is bent on making a meal of every little fly. A design of a prettier character is on an artistic rough edged card—a really beautiful etching of an Old World Quaker looking couple.

There is a card for a military dinner which bears in the corner a handpainted figure of a fencer. A card for a sporting dinner has the picture of a jockey on the course, whether the first or second I won't undertake to say. A quaint menu is of a Chinese character on Chinese paper. I don't know for what special class of feasters the menu covered with golden bees is intended; but the card sprinkled with diamonds, spades, hearts and clubs is evidently intended for a quiet little party of artful cards. There is a reminder of the almost forgotten Stanley on a card which bears on it some pyramids and a palm tree and some camels and a setting sun.

Fruit Pastes.

A very nice paste is made from apple juice, with enough of quince to give a pleasant flavor, boiled to a solid jelly, with but little sugar. Let it boil in stoneware, then simmer and finish in a covered dish over a stove. The English method of making fruit pastes is to thicken the crushed fruit with sugar and scald it only and dry on platters set in an oven but slightly warm, or in the sun. Stripe slabs from the clear fruit juice are especially delightful, and grape juice boiled down to a nice, clear syrup is an excellent thing to stick teas. A jug of the fresh made is a good strainer used with a wooden hand grape. Nothing is used but the pure juice, which should be boiled down till it becomes quite thick. Jars, corks—heat in the oven, as stoneware holds the heat—and there is less danger of bursting the contents than with any other ware.

Republican Primaries.

The Republican voters of the city of Plainfield will meet at the places and dates mentioned below to elect delegates to the city convention to be held at the Association Hall, East Front street, Monday, November 9th, p. m., for the purpose of nominating three Councilmen-at-Large, Assessor, Collector, Treasurer, two Freeholders, two Commissioners of Appeal and one School Trustee.

The First Ward will meet at the Republican Association Hall, East Front street, Thursday, Nov. 5, at 8 p. m., and is entitled to ten delegates.

The Second Ward will meet at the Bryant School Building, East Sixth street, Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 8 p. m., and is entitled to twelve delegates.

The Third Ward will meet at the Casino, Seventh street and Arlington avenue, Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 8 p. m., and is entitled to eleven delegates.

The Fourth Ward will meet at Carey's auction rooms, 76 West Front street, Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 8 p. m., and is entitled to thirteen delegates.

Each ward will nominate one member of the Common Council, Constable, one Justice of the Peace and three members of the City Executive Committee.

C. A. BLISS, Secretary. E. N. ERICKSON, Chairman.

BREVITIES.

—The number of patients in the Morris Plains has reached 1,000.

—In the interest of good government attend the Republican primaries tonight.

—The New York Flower bloomed last night, but the frost was too heavy for Plainfield's blossom.

—The Republican primaries will be held to-night. Don't fail to attend and see that good men are chosen.

—After a horse is nine years old a wrinkle comes on the eyelid at the upper corner. This is an infallible sign.

—Did you ever before see a Fall where the flowers bloomed outdoors till October 30th without being killed by the frosts?

—There will be no meeting of the W. C. T. U. to-morrow in consequence of the convention of the Union County Sunday-School Association.

—The great Temperance lecturer who (better known as Joe English), will deliver one of his characteristic addresses at Reform Hall, on monday evening next.

—Delegates will be elected to the city convention to-night. Go to the primaries and see that good men are chosen. We have had enough of the other kind to last a lifetime.

—The Union County Sunday-School Association will hold its twelfth annual convention in this city to-morrow. The convention will hold its sessions in the First Presbyterian church.

Amateurs to Perform at the Casino.

Much interest is felt in the fashionable circles of Plainfield in the coming amateur dramatic entertainment to be given under the auspices of the Union County Country Club, in their pretty theatre on November 19th. It is somewhat unusual for amateur actors to devote several evenings a week for more than two months to the preparation of a play as has been done in this case. In consequence of the customary reluctance of amateurs to give up the necessary time, and to do the needful preparatory hard work, such performances usually show the lack of proper rehearsal and are therefore often painfully crude and incomplete.

The ladies and gentlemen interested in the above-mentioned performance, however, having undertaken the rather ambitious task of producing the well-known four-act comedy, "Esmeralda," have worked most energetically, and spared no pains to make its performance a smooth and perfect one.

A gentleman who was connected with the original production of the play at Madison Square Theatre in New York, some years ago, was engaged last September to direct the rehearsals, and consented to do so only after securing a pledge of earnest work from each member of the cast. He has since then come from the city at frequent intervals to note the progress made, to correct faults, and improve the performance generally.

The first rehearsal of the entire piece was successfully given last Saturday evening, and those present predict that the performance of the 19th inst. will be the best that our amateurs have given here. The complete caste, printed below, includes some of our cleverest performers.

Marquis de Montresaint—"An Adventurer" ..... Mr. H. Black

Suzette—"A Parisian Maid" ..... Miss Cortes Esmeralda—"A Mountain Flower" ..... Mrs. Wm R. Saunders

The leading female role, that of Esmeralda, gives an opportunity for emotional acting, of which Mrs. Saunders will take advantage, while Mrs. Bowers, as her hard-hearted mother, has a rather disagreeable part, calling for strong dramatic work. The comedy rôles will be in competent hands, being played by Mrs. Mason, as a young and vivacious society girl; Mr. Cock as Old Man Rogers, and Mr. Kauffman, as a facetious man-of-the-world.

Mr. Joseph Mason has arranged some elaborate stage-settings, and in one act, in which the stage represents a conservatory, a profusion of palms and flowering plants will be effectively used, while handsome and appropriate costumes and accessories will help to make the performance complete in every detail.

THE STATE ELECTION.

THE GOOD RESULT IN THIS VICINITY.

Increased Republican Majorities in Both City and Borough.—Kyte of Union, Republican, Re-elected to Assembly.—North Plainfield Gives Dilts of Somerset, Republican, a Majority of 77.

The election in this city and North Plainfield yesterday passed off so very quietly that one would scarcely know it was election day. Democrats and Republicans alike were apathetic, and notwithstanding the favorable conditions of the weather, an unusually light vote was polled. There were 2,772 votes registered in Plainfield and only 1,652polled.As usual the Republican candidate carried the day by handsome majorities. Kyte's plurality in this city was 263, majority, 208.

The results in detail are as follows:

Plainfield.

YESTERDAY'S BICYCLE RACES.

Interesting Events on the Plainfield Course.

The Brooklyn Bicycle Club held their annual ten-mile handicap road race on a two and a half mile stretch of road midway between Westfield and this city yesterday afternoon. There were ten starters in the event. John Schoefer, although on scratch and penalized 1½ minutes for riding a pneumatic wheel, won easy. The men finished in the following order: J. M. Schaefer, scratch, first, time 32 minutes 26 1-5 seconds; C. E. Quinby, thirty seconds, second, time 34 minutes 49 2-5 seconds; George Perrin, six minutes, third, time 41 minutes 33 2-5 seconds. R. Williams dropped out at two miles.

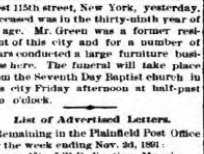
Ten-mile Championship—Won by F. Ellingham, B. MacBain second. Time 35 minutes 30 seconds.



Mrs. Eliza Stevens of Linden avenue, North Plainfield, is slowly recovering from a severe fall.

A card party was given at the residence of Mr. Charles Hunter on Union avenue last evening. A large number of people were present and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Frank C. Green died at his home on West 115th street, New York, yesterday. Deceased was in the thirty-ninth year of his age. Mr. Green was a former resident of this city and for a number of years conducted a large furniture business here. The funeral will take place from the Seventh Day Baptist church in this city Friday afternoon at half-past two o'clock.

A Boy Injured.

Louis Tallamy, a carrier for THE NEWS, accidentally caught the index finger of his right hand in a portion of the gearing of a press in this office last evening and the top of the digit was crushed.

FOOT BALL YESTERDAY.

The Bryants of Brooklyn 21; Crescents of this City 16.

The Bryant foot ball team of Brooklyn, N. Y., composed mainly of Columbia College men, defeated the Crescents of this city on the latters grounds yesterday afternoon. Cartwright, Prince, Bacon and Duffy helped to make the Bryant's touch downs, and Bacon, Lewis and Stanton scored the points for the Crescents. Just before time was called, and when the score stood 16 to 16, Lichtenstein kicked a pretty goal from the side of the field, thus winning the game. The score was: Bryant, 21; Crescents, 16.

LEAL'S VS. P. RI.-CLUB.

The Leal Foot Ball team played a game of foot ball on the Crescent grounds yesterday against a team made up from such members of the Bicycle Club as could be got together, and defeated them. The early part of the game was in favor of the bi-boys, but want of practice then began to show itself, all but three of the bi-team breaking down from the muscular cramps in their thighs through the sudden over-exertion. The Leal team practice daily, this told in their favor, as they tired out their adversaries and had an easy victory, after the bi-boys were disabled. Some were so broken down that it was necessary to help them from the field, they being unable to walk without assistance.

A Painful Operation.

Michael Gill, the driver for Mr. Harry Marshall, the proprietor of the American Steam Laundry, was compelled to undergo a painful operation to-day. A short time ago Mr. Gill while attempting to alight from a wagon, slipped and fell and fractured his right arm in two places. The fractured bones were set and yesterday it was ascertained that unless the arm was again broken it would always be stiff. Mr. Gill consented to undergo the operation, which was performed to-day and the arm was re-set.

Jumped Off a Fast Moving Train.

An unknown man jumped off a car on the Jersey Central at Elizabeth yesterday noon while the train was running past the Union station at the rate of nearly forty miles an hour. He was carried up like a ball when he struck the ground and came within a few inches of being cut to pieces by the train. His face and hands were badly bruised. He was taken to the nearest saloon and cared for. He was going to Bound Brook. He said the conductor told him that he could change cars at Elizabeth, but the train did not stop.

The Body Brought Here.

The remains of Emma, the two-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Seibel, who died at the home of her parents in Hightstown, Sunday morning, from burns received while starting a bon-fire, Saturday morning, took place from her parents' residence yesterday. Interment was made in the First Presbyterian cemetery in North Plainfield. Mr. and Mrs. Seibel formerly resided here and have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Notified to Take Out a License.

The proprietor of the merry-go-round, which is holding forth at the rink, was last night notified by Acting-Captain of Police Lynch to take out a license before he attempted to continue his carousal this evening. Mr. Charles H. Hand, the owner of the building, says he will not take out a license until every hall in this city where entertainments are held procures a license. A law suit may follow.

Babbett's Condition.

Special Policeman James Babbett, who was shot in the right arm by a companion while gunning for rabbits near Netherwood Monday morning, is now a patient at the Muhlenberg Hospital. Yesterday Babbett was taken to the second ward polls in a carriage, where he voted. His injuries are more serious than were at first reported and he may lose his right arm.

—The daintiest stockings to be worn by a bride are of fine white silk with a medallion of Valenciennes lace set in the instep, the design being one of orange blossoms. They are as frail as the proverbial cobweb, however. LOVE FOUND THE WAY.

Edward F. B. Perrine, cashier of the Third National Bank in Jersey City, about a year ago took a room in the house of Brewster S. Mapes, at No. 34 West Hamilton place. Mr. Mapes is a broker doing business at No. 132 Pavonia avenue. He has a daughter, his only child, named Nannette. She is nineteen.

Perrine and the young woman often went to theatres, receptions and balls, and their friendship developed. They were engaged. Mr. and Mrs. Mapes soon objected to Perrine's attention to their daughter. They had nothing against the cashier, it is said, but they thought it would be well enough for their daughter not to marry at present.

At last Mr. Perrine was gently requested by Mr. Mapes to vacate his room. Perrine went to Brooklyn.

Miss Mapes told her mother Sunday that she was going out to visit a school friend and would be gone several hours. She went to Brooklyn. She was met in the city by Edward F. B. Perrine, and within an hour they were quietly married by a clergyman near the South Ferry.

Mrs. Perrine has notified her parents that she is married.

Mr. Perrine was a former resident of this city and is a graduate of the class of '88 Plainfield High school.

A Colored Man's Trip South.

Mr. W. E. Johnson of this city recently made a trip through the southern states. He thinks the Plainfield public would be interested in the matter and sends us the following account with a request for publication:

I was free born in Manchester, Va., March 16, 1856, and continued to live there until I was about twenty-seven years old, during which time I made a good living; but believing from reports that I could make more money in the North, I left home February 1st, 1878, and arrived in New York Feburary 4th following, and succeeded in getting a situation as waiter after two days' time. I remained there three months and then succeeded in getting employment as a barber, and have succeeded in getting steady employment up to the present time. Now, after nineteen years' absence from my native home I concluded to pay a visit to my daughter (who is teaching school in Manchester) and also my brothers and sisters and old friends. Upon my arrival in Manchester I scarcely knew it the place was the same, so changed was it from a straggling little village, into a large prosperous city. But what pleased me most was to see the rapid progress the colored people have made since '78. There were signs everywhere on every side of prosperity, education and wealth. And I would like to say here that as a rule the best element of the colored people of Virginia do not come North. They also have social societies of which no person can become a member who is up to the required standard. In Richmond a paper called The Planet is published and edited by a colored man, and The Richmond Dispatch, and the Manchester Leader showed a liberal willingness to notice my visit. In Manchester they have a school exclusively for colored children and they are soliciting pupils of white men (some of whom fought in the late rebellion) appoint competent colored teachers to instruct their children, being very anxious that these children should all be well trained for they say being nine months, both for colored and white. I also visited the colored National Bank of Richmond, all the officers of which are colored men. This bank has a capital of $200,000. When I left Manchester they were erecting 250 colored men and women owning real estate in that vicinity, but now the Assessor informed me that there are 2,250. It is comparitively easy now for a colored person to obtain real estate, as the white property owners will sell it to him on the instalment plan, allowing him from one to five years in which to pay the full amount in, and there are no fines in case the money is not paid promptly as they specified in the agreement. I also visited a grocery store operated by a Joint Stock Company composed of colored men, my brother being President. They are doing a thriving business, having recently bought in larger and more extensive premises of their former business. There are no colored men selling liquor in Manchester, as the white business men say they do not desire to engage in such a traffic, however, they would be detrimental to their progress. In '73 Manchester contained but one colored church. Now there are eight, six Baptist, one Methodist, and one Episcopal. White people aid very largely in the religious and educational work of the colored people. This marvelous progress being due to the expulsion of the carpet-bag rule, and every man of the South has an equal chance to reason one with the other. Every mechanical department of labor is open to the people of Virginia, and colored girls are now employed as typewriters, which is a new thing. Need I say the opportunity, and they will prove that they have the ability. While I was in Manchester the Legislature of that State was in progress. White citizens had contributed several thousand dollars to make it a success. One other marked feature is that the people are doing more to invite Northern capital than they were in '78. Our white fellowmen have built fine brick blocks all through Manchester, and nearly all the electrical cars in Manchester are being operated by Northern Capitalists. These things have greatly improved conditions and commercial interests in Manchester, and while the white people are legislating and doing new things, the people are getting education and accumulating property so that eventually they will be capable of filling the places of honor and trust which have been so long withheld from them.

But isn't it higher in price than the others?

EDITORIAL NOTES

Republicanism in France.

Modern Direction has lived in France fifty years. He has therefore watched the career of the third republic with some critical and sympathetic eye as an American and a republican, and he is the judgment of it in The Arena. He thinks that France has glaring faults and weaknesses, some of which menace her very existence as a government of the people, yet, nevertheless, "it is to be noted that the various royal and imperial pretenders, their children and their children's children will live and die without ever being able to set foot again in France on the throne of the Bourbons or that of the Bonapartes."

The third republic in France has already lived twenty years, longer than that of any other government since the days of the Stuarts of a century ago, though its first years were really more monarchical than democratic.

The fatal weakness Mr. Stanton points out as clustering about the present system of administration he says is that the statesman on any French government, and are therefore not to be set down especially to the blame of the republic. The greatest peril that confronts republican France is Boulangism, demonstrations and adventurers. There is no real warm, hearty union among the republicans any more than there is in the Home Rule party in Ireland. The party of the opposition, monarchy, royalists in force and what it means in England and America, but it signifies absolutely the overthrow of republican government and the substitution of an empire or monarchy. The opposition party in the French legislative houses is composed of monarchists and imperialists, and it counts today more than a third of the members of the chamber of deputies.

This republican minority is constantly attacking the government and endeavoring to overthrow the cabinets, which have actually been changed eight times since 1870. This has led Jules Ferry, premier to turn their eyes to the system in the United States, where the president's cabinet is independent of congress. Breaking with the Catholic church was a grave error of judgment for the republican government, considering that five people are Catholics. Another serious embarrassment is the great redress of military chiefs the presidents of France are surrounding themselves with. This as unlike our simple democratic forms as possible. This parasitic military household would be a tool to the detriment of true republicanism.

Most unfortunate of all, however, is the annually increasing financial deficit of the republic. Taxes go higher and higher, adding grievous burdens to the already hard pressed French people. There is in France, Mr. Stanton says, at present a tendency toward a high protective tariff, which it is hoped will relieve the people's burdens.

Another grave danger is found in the fact that what is considered as social high life in France holds itself absolutely aloof from the republic, granting it neither sympathy nor recognition. On this point Mr. Stanton writes:

> The striking in the best on the part of the republicists has in it something worse than their simple absence from all official social circles. The talents, experience and independence of this elite are almost wholly lost to the country and to the government. Both the ministries, the judiciary, the foreign embassies, the professorships and the rectorships of the small universities they are necessarily confided to the ablest nobles of the old regime, with its wealth and traditions, and the younger nobility of the Third. Second Empire, the Blue with bourgeoisie, especially of the provinces, while the aristocratic ladies of all classes turn their backs upon all that savors of reform, or the new order of things, and sigh for court and king or emperor.

A straw showing which way the wind of manifest destiny blows is to be noted in the formation at Stony Point, in the province of Ontario, of the Continental Union club, whose object is to agitate for political union between Canada and the United States. "The old Continental club of ragged revolutionists" performed nearly a century ago, and perhaps the new Continentals can do as well in the field of peaceful agitation. A public meeting openly advocating political union was also held at Stony Point. If any Canadian royalist with the impossible dream of imperial federation before his brain charges that this sentiment across the border in favor of political union is being stirred up by the secret emissaries from the United States, he is hereby informed that he is mistaken. There are no such emissaries. We need none.

The largest gun ever made in the United States was put together at the Watervliet arsenal, Troy, N. Y. This monster is 30.16 feet long and weighs 60 tons. Its caliber is 12 inches, it takes a charge of 440 pounds of powder and a projectile fired by it weighs 1,000 pounds. The rest of it is that in the whole United States army there is not any kind of suitable smokeless powder which will send a ball at its highest velocity from the throat of this big cannon.

"Thank heaven for nerves!" writes that good man Joseph Howard. Thank heaven for nerve, Joseph, is what you should have written.

Isn't it about time to let up on the tramp joke awhile? It is rapidly falling into the class with the stovepipe and mother-in-law jokes.

VICTORY FOR M'KINLEY.

He Defeats Campbell for Governor in Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS WIN

Gregg, Morrison and Matthews All Elected—Iowa Very Close and the Returns Slow in Coming In—Democrats Successful in the State of New Jersey.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 4.—William McKinley, Jr., has been elected governor of Ohio by a majority of about 15,000 on one of the heaviest votes ever cast in the state. The new system of voting has greatly delayed the counting of the vote, but McKinley's election is conceded by Chairman Neal, of the Democratic state committee. The election of a Republican majority of the general assembly is also conceded. A remarkable feature of the election in the vote in Hamilton county, where it was expected that Campbell would be elected. Instead of that he has run from five to twenty votes ahead of his ticket in almost every precinct in the city.

His defeat is due to the heavy vote brought out by the fight with which the campaign has been fought on both sides, and to the failure of the farmers in the heavily Republican districts to desert McKinley on the tariff issue to the extent that had been expected. The returns indicate that Campbell made large gains in the manufacturing towns and cities. He also gained in the Democratic districts in the northwest.

Major McKinley voted at his home in Canton and remained there to receive the returns. Governor Campbell left Cincinnati on an early train for Hamilton his legal residence, where he cast a straight Democratic ticket, including himself. He always votes for himself when running for an office. Experience has taught him the value of such votes.

The first time he was a candidate for the nomination for governor he was beaten in the convention by one half of a vote, and when he was nominated the first time he had barely a majority of the convention.

From Hamilton the governor went to Columbus, where he spent the day quietly with his family.

Ohio electors for the first time made use of the Australian system of voting. The law establishing this reform was passed last winter after a fight lasting two years.

A blanket ballot is used, but each ticket is printed upon it separately, in parallel columns, separated by heavy black lines. At the head of each ticket was a pictorial device and beneath it, in large type, the name of the ticket. There were the five tickets, and the ballot was nearly as large as the page of a newspaper. The Republican ticket was headed by an eagle, the Democratic ticket by a rooster, the Prohibition ticket by a rose, the People's party ticket by a plow and mine and the Veteran Republican ticket by a soldier.

The arrangement of the booths and polling places was similar to that in New York. Each voter was allowed five minutes in the booth to mark his ballot. Reports indicate that the new system made a favorable impression.

IN NEW JERSEY

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 4.—New Jersey's election resulted in an expected and conceded victory for the Democracy. State senators were elected in seven of the twenty one counties, that is in Burlington, Cape May, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Passaic and Somerset counties, and to fill a vacancy in Hudson county, where Congressman E. F. McDonald had resigned his legislative office. A complete house of assembly will be chosen and a few county offices were filled.

It was a foregone conclusion before the polls opened that the Republicans could not capture control of either the house or the senate. Forty of the sixty assembly districts are Democratic and nine Democratic in five Republican and seven hold over. The Democrats, had, therefore, to elect only two senators to retain control of the senate, and it was absolutely certain that they would not lose control of the house unless there was a landslide.

There was very little interest taken in the county elections. The assemblymen in New Jersey hold office for only one year, and these elected will not have a vote for United States senator in 1893. Senators, however, hold their seats six years, and those chosen this fall will have a voice in the selection of Hurbs Hudgett's successor.

The polls will not close in New Jersey until 7 o'clock in the evening, and it was well on toward midnight when the returns made it possible to determine how the battle of the day had gone. Complete returns indicate that the next senate will stand—Democrats, 16; Republicans, 5, and the house—Democrats, 40; Republicans, 21; holdover Democrats, 19; Republicans, 20; Democratic, 59.

IN THE EMPIRE STATE.

Flower and Sheehan Defeat Fassett and Vrooman.

RUSSELL WINS IN MASSACHUSETTS

He Carries the Old Bay State by a Small Majority Over Allen—Russell's Re-election Conceded by Republican Newspapers in Boston.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Tammany Hall is on top! It has elected all its candidates for the senate, with the exception of General McMahon, who was defeated by Lispenard Stewart in the Eighth Senatorial district. In the assembly also the Tammany Democracy carried every assembly district, with the sole exception of the Seventh.

Both congressional districts have been carried by the Democrats. Little being elected to succeed Governor elect Flower in the Twelfth and Cochran being returned from the Tenth.

The new board of aldermen will be a Tammany board by an overwhelming majority, and the elected members of the judiciary are all nominees of the same organization. Tammany has polled in this city a majority of over 30,000, and it is expected that the plurality in the state will be about 20,000. Sheehan ran behind a little ticket in this city, but elsewhere he has polled a vote even with the rest of the ticket. And yet this result was by no means certain from early reports.

At first, indications seemed to point to Fassett's election, and as late as 9 o'clock the question of the successful candidate for governor was in doubt. It seemed then that Flower could not possibly carry this city by more than 50,000 majority, but as later returns from Tammany districts came in, showing great gains, those figures went slowly but surely up to eight and over. The most intense excitement prevailed in the neighborhood of the newspaper offices, where large crowds gathered to read the returns from the bulletin boards. The Republicans had the best of it first, and they cheered for all they were worth, the Democrats maintaining a grim silence.

Then, as the returns showed a consistent gain for Flower, the triumphant cheers of the enthusiastic Democracy rose to the skies. The majority given to Flower in this city, 56,000, is much less than a natural Democratic majority of the metropolis. The falling off is attributed to the action of the County Democracy in resenting the exclusion of their delegates from the Saratoga convention. Kings county and Richmond county and Queens county, however, showed decided Democratic gains. These, taken in connection with the returns from the districts throughout the state outside of New York county, make it seem certain that Flower's majority in the state would be over 30,000.

Boody, Dem., for mayor of Brooklyn is elected by about 10,000 majority. The latest returns indicate that the assembly will stand 84 to 64, and the senate 17 Republicans to 15 Democrats. A majority of 3 Republicans on joint ballot.

Mr. Cleveland Gets the Returns.

EX-President Cleveland received the returns quietly at his home in Lenox, Berkshire, in company with a few personal friends. He evinced much interest in the results in this and other states, but was too intent for a while to say comments on the spur of the moment.

The Tribune claims the senate by two or three majority, and says the assembly is in doubt. The Herald gives the legislature to the Republicans in joint ballot by a majority of 14. The Sun claims that the senate will be a tie, and the Democrats will have a majority of six on joint ballot. The Times says the senate will be a tie and the Democrats will have a majority of eight in the assembly.

GENERAL SPORTING NOTES.

A cheap monument is being constructed in Louisville, Ky., to hold a life-shaped head which they expect to have ready for next year.

P. J. Sinnerton, Boston Athletic Association, has broken the world's record for the 440 yard hurdle race. He did it in 57 3-5 seconds.

Allerton is said to trot his best city without pulling a pound. When he trotted his record of 2:10 his shoes weighed just five ounces in front and three behind.

George Martin, a Versailles turfman, has sold C. W. Williams, owner of Allerton for $25,000 for injunction reserving when the grand stand gave way while attending the race between Allerton and Nancy Hanks.

At a meeting of the American Trotting Register Association the pedigree of Rarus was finally agreed upon. It is now decided that her second dam was by Lexington, and her third dam by Brower's Eclipse.

The sale of American trotting stallions at Littlecote, England, on Oct. 15 was not very successful; only five out of fifteen put up reached the high reserves placed upon them. The highest price reached was for Handsome Boy, who sold for $2,450.

John Mitchell of the New York Athletic Club has been doing some very clever work in lowering the weight records this year. His latest was at the N. Y. A. C. games, at which he put the 56-pound weight 36 ft. 11 in., beating his own record by 4½ in.

It is said to have signed with the Milwaukee club for $3,000 with $500 advance. It was the money, no doubt, that brought this brilliant young player. It was a big offer for a man who had been "out" but one season, and one that many older players would consider a long time before refusing. It can hardly blame Davis for accepting such an offer, for he would have to be with Anson for many a year before he could get anywhere near that money. In 1890 he was playing with the Cobbleskill (N. Y.) team for $60 per month, and he can thank Uncle Anson for getting this opportunity, but I hardly think he will offer to divide his salary with him.

Sunol isn't through by any means yet," said an old horseman in town recently. "Her performance was outstanding when you come to think of it. To be sure, last year she was carted all over the country without a fair chance to lower her record. Yet she trotted a half in 1.02½ at Detroit. She has more speed than any horse ever had. She has been trained by Gov. Stanford a quarter in 30½ seconds. If you don't think she can last look at her three-year-old record of 2.19½; three and half in 1.05 and the last half in 1.05. I know that Marvin has said that he could have beaten 2.10 with her when she was two years old if he had kept her a little longer in training, and that was on a regulation track. This year she was lame and had to be let up, and since she began to train again she has had only two weeks. A horse does not come to perfection in that way. Yet she went the last quarter of her mile in 1.00½ in the 2.08 gait. I begin to think that Gov. Stanford's prediction of 2:03 may yet be seen this fall."

Mr. Isaac Bonner, the owner of Sunol, before he says that he thinks it is time he should be the owner of a trotter to go much faster than Sunol's 2.08½, and to prove

"LITTLE SAMSON."

A Man Who Has Gained That Name By His Wonderful Feats.

B. McCAVILLE.

B. McCaville who, by his wonderful feats in weight-lifting and juggling of heavy dumbbells has become known throughout the country as "Little Samson," was born in La Crosse, Wis., 26 years ago. He is 5 ft. 5½ in. tall, and weighs stripped 140 pounds. His chest measurement is 38 in.; waist, 29 in.; thigh, 20½ in.; biceps, natural, 12 in., expanded, 14 in.; calf, 14½ in.; neck, 14½ in.

Following are mentioned a few of his wonderful feats: Lifting 60-pound dumbbell, single-handed, over head 16 times; 100-pound bell, same conditions, 8 times; 118-pound bell, 5 times; 100-pound bell, 9 hands, from chest over head, 30 times; 140-pound bell, same conditions, 6 times; 168-pound bell, 4 times, and 180-pound bell twice.

Arrangements are being made by Willis B. Troy, the well-known bicyclist, to take an American team of amateur wheelmen to Europe next summer. Mr. Troy anticipates taking a team to consist of A. B. Rich, Wm. F. Murphy, Arthur A. Zimmerman, and probably Hoyland Smith. The men will leave early in January. Their early departure will be based by their desire to become thoroughly acclimated before beginning their training. The poor showing made by W. A. Rowe while abroad some years ago was attributed to the climate. The amateurs will endeavor to avoid a like trouble.

All of the men are members of the New York Athletic Club, and will race under their colors. It is yet unsettled whether the N. T. A. C. will bear the expense of the trip or not.

Zimmerman, who is regarded as a marvel on the wheel, has evinced a desire to have a try at the mile record on the famous Morse Hill track. It is believed he may succeed in riding the mile in two minutes and ten seconds with the trained English pacemakers.

The team propose competing in the championships, returning to America in time for the fall circuit. An effort will be made to induce an English team to return with the N. T. A. C. men.

How to Inoculate Gossiping.

If you wish to cultivate a gossiping, meddling, censorious spirit in your children be sure when they come home from church, a visit or any other place where you do not accompany them, to ply them with questions concerning what every body wore, how everybody looked and what everybody said and did, and if you find anything in this to censure always do it in their hearing. You may rest assured, if you pursue a course of this kind, they will not return to you unladen with intelligence, and rather than it should be uninteresting they will by degrees learn to embellish in such a manner as shall not fail to call forth remarks and expressions of wonder from you. You will by this course render the spirit of curiosity, which is so early visible in children, and which, if rightly directed, may be the instrument of enriching and enlarging their minds—a vehicle of mischief which will serve only to make them narrow and mean.

How to Polish Wood Carvings, Scroll Work, Etc.

Take a piece of soft and pliable wadding and drop on it white or transparent or French polish, according to the color of the wood. Then wrap this wadding in one thickness of linen, holding it by the surplus linen, so as to form a pad. Touch the pad with two drops of linseed oil. As the only object of the oil is to make the pad work smoothly over the wood very little should be applied at a time. While using the pad on the scroll work add another drop or two of oil and then wet it in the polish as observation may show it to be necessary.

How to Make Mother Eve's Pudding.

Take two pennyworth of eggs, when twelve for the groat.

And of the same fruit that Eve had once chosen.

Six ounces of bread dot your maid eat the crust.

The crumbs must be grated and small as the dust;

Six ounces of suet from the stones you must cut neat,

Lest they break out your teeth and spoil all your sport;

Some salt and some nutmeg will make it complete.

Three hours let it boil, without hurry or flutter,

And then serve it up without sugar or butter.

[Note—A groat is fourpence, therefore two pennyworth of eggs is half a dozen.]

How to Become a Dumfying Parson.

A parson in danger of drowning usually becomes pale stricken, and in such condition is very dangerous to handle, because you may be the spiritual adviser who has gone to his rescue. A minister who applies a fire-engine pumpon who has lost possession of mind should not hesitate to knock the man or woman into insensibility. When the minister will have a chance to take the tackle to them. If, however, he struggles with the drowning person in the water he will be very apt to fail in his effort at success and also run a great chance of losing his over his life. Having reached shore the minister should be placed face downward on a barrel and rolled back and forth, so as to force the water out of stomach and lungs and induce respiration. The hands and feet should also be rubbed vigorously so as to start circulation, and these efforts should not be relaxed until a medical man had pronounced it impossible to resuscitate the victim. When animation has been sufficiently revived, the sufferer should be given a plentiful dose of brandy.

How to Extinguish a Burning Chimney

Shut all the doors and windows so as to prevent any current of air, and then throw a few handfuls of fine salt upon the fire which is burning in the grate. The philosophy of this is that in burning salt muriatic gas is evolved, which is a prompt extinguisher of confined fire.

How Mrs. Fry Raised Her Conduct.

That excellent Englishwoman Mrs. Fry, who combined in her character and conduct all that is truly excellent in woman, formulated these rules: "1. I never lose any time; I do not think time lost which is spent in amusements or recreation some part of each day, but always be in the habit of being employed. 2. Never err the least in truth. 3. Never say an ill thing of a person when those cannot say a good thing of him; not only speak charitably, but feel so. 4. Never be irritable or unkind to anybody. 5. Never indulge thyself in luxuries that are not necessary. 6. Do all things with consideration, and when thy path to act right is most difficult, feel confidence in that power alone which is able to assist thee, and exert thy own powers as far as they go."

How and When to Wear a Necktie.

Neckties, that is, narrow bands of muslin, silk or satin, have gone out of use except for clergymen and other gentlemen when in evening dress. A clergyman appears to be privileged to wear either a white or black necktie upon any occasion. But other persons who wish to be in the fashion should never wear them except when in evening dress, that is, when the swallow tailed coat is put on. And then the cravat should always be of plain white muslin without any embroidery on the ends. Sometimes white satin or white silk neckties are seen with this formal full dress. But it is not good form, nor is it the proper thing to wear black satin or silk neckties upon such occasions. In the summer, when conventional rules of dress are much relaxed, a flowing necktie of light material may be worn with a soft coat, but never with a coat with tails. The already made up and to be buttoned over the collar are considered to be very bad form, and are therefore to be avoided.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

He Had Done the Best He Could, but the Result Appeared.

As old Editor Jones Ridge was in bed in a garret of a dodgy, and often considerable inquiry succeeded in locating one. Striding across the street the old chap entered the office of a young M. D., and addressing a man who was reading a newspaper said:

"How're ye, minister?"

"Good morning, sir."

"Say, air ye the feller what runs this for corners?"

"Sir?" cried the M. D. severely.

"I axed if yer the chap what hangs out at this office."

"I am the physician who offices here, sir."

"Oh! Jest so. Thaste what I was doin'in at, so it's all right. It's your business to ding medicine, I reckon?"

"I prescribe remedies for the sick."

"Yer do what?"

"Prescribe medicine. Tell people what to take and how to take it."

"Uh, huh. Then yer the feller I was lookin for. I want some medicine for the old 'oman."

"What kind of medicine?"

"Oh, I hain't purtic'lar 'bout the kind. Jest anything that's convenient and cheap."

"But, man, we must give a remedy to fit the case. What do you think ails your wife?"

"Hain't no idea what."

"Is she very sick?"

"Wal, no, not very. She's jest sorter under the weather."

"Just complaining, eh?"

"No, she don't complain overmuch, but she grunts a power."

"Is she able to get about?"

"Hain't been out o' the bed since harvest time. She was ceremoniously stove up to that time, an made a full hand in the harvest ever day. But sence that she aint been woth shucks."

"She overdose herself, perhaps?"

"Reckon not. I worked right along the side of her, doin ever' bit an grain as much work as she did, an it never got me down."

"Well, what do you think is the trouble?"

"Goshamity, mister, I haint a ghost of a notion. I know, though, she's blamed bad sick."

"How is her appetite?"

"I'm afeerd it ain't mile frastrate."

"Reckon much, you think?"

"It is too shamous. Is the chief mourner of John Smith. I am think he most of it."

"Can I have any name I desire?"

"You can."

IN THE CERTIORARI CASE OF LEWIS VS. CITY OF PLAINFIELD.

The Supreme Court Decides that the City Could Legally Grant the Water Works Franchise to C. K. Moore and Others.

TRENTON, Nov. 5th (Special.)—The certiorari case of Israel Lewis vs. the city of Plainfield in which Mr. Lewis tested the legal status of the franchise granted to Charles K. Moore, was decided by the Supreme Court to-day in favor of the city thus proving that the Plainfield Water Supply Company have a good title as they purchased the franchise from Moore.

The reasons set forth in the document filed by Lewis were that the charter under which the company was organized is null and void, because the law under which it was granted is unconstitutional.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh represented the city.

BREVITIES.

—Services in honor of the Sacred Heart will be held at St. Mary's Catholic church this evening at eight o'clock.

—The petit jurors were again in attendance at the Union county court to-day after a two days' vacation.

—The Somerset County Board of Freeholders will hold a meeting in the Court House at Somerville next Tuesday.

—Mr. A. W. Waldron of this city has purchased a half interest in the livery business as one of Dr. Conklin's partners.

—Prescott League bowling team will roll a game with an Elizabeth team this evening. The game will be rolled at Elizabeth.

—Mr. Franklin S. Smith will give an illustrated talk at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night. Subject. "The Chemistry of Flame." Young men are invited.

—The great Temperance lecturer (better known as Joe English), will deliver one of his characteristic addresses at Reform Hall, on Sunday evening next.

—Clifford Barnes, General Secretary of the Yale University Y. M. C. A., will be one of the speakers at the men's meeting to be held in the M. E. Church on Sunday at 4:15 p. m.

—A quartette composed of members of the Yale University Glee Club will sing at the men's meeting to be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in the M. E. Church Sunday at 4:15 p. m.

—"America, as seen Through French Spectacles," will be the subject of the lecture to be delivered at the Casino by Max O'Rell this evening. The lecture is given under the auspices of the Hillside Tennis Club.

—Mr. L. Warren Randolph's hot soda and delicious syrups are in great demand. The syrups are all prepared by him and are getting a fine reputation for excellence. Hot chocolate and coffee are specialties.

—The members of St. Joseph's Catholic church of North Plainfield are arranging for their first annual Soiree. Thanksgiving night in the Gesang and Turning Society's Hall during the latter part of this month.

—The Union county court has fully vindicated Warden Dodd of the slur cast upon him by the New York papers in reference to the case of Captain Baxter, who is an inmate of the jail charged with murder.

—The First Ward Republican Primary will be held in the Republican headquarters rooms this evening at eight o'clock. Every Republican in the Ward is urged to be present to see that good ones are selected as candidates and delegates.

—At the business meeting held yesterday of the Wide-a-Wake Circle, Miss Bettie Kyte-ting was elected recording secretary, Miss Ida Weigman chairman, lookout Committee, Miss Ella Yaeger, chairman flower committee; Miss Bertha Drier, chairman news committee; Miss Ivy Mattox, chairman social committee.

—The physician who attended Michael Gill informs us that the arm was dislocated at the shoulder and has been reported. There is a stiffness that always follows a dislocation of this character caused by the rupturing of the ligaments. The physician further states that no operation was necessary. Mr. Gill seems to have misunderstood the matter.

—Hon. George Kyte is to be heartily congratulated. Last year his majority was 38. This year the township of Linden (which is about 105 Democratic majority) was thrown into his district by the Democratic gerrymander. Adding to this last year's majority would have given him 363, but the ballots cast yesterday gave him no less than 494. This shows that he ran 200 ahead of the normal Republican majority in his district. Congratulations, Mr. Kyte.—Elizabeth Journal.

—The fame of Union County's splendid roads has spread so one knows how far. Yesterday, Messrs. W. E. Hyde, Samuel Sandford and Henry Lathrop, Commissioners from the city of Dunkirkonville, Conn., were in this city for the purpose of examining our system of road-making. They were appointed a special investigating committee by the Dunkirkonville Council, and will go home to-day. Judicial well able to give a comprehensive account of Union county thoroughfares.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The Union County Sunday-School Association in Session Here.

The twelfth annual convention of the Union county Sunday-school Association is being held in the First Presbyterian church in this city to-day. The meeting was called to order at ten o'clock. Owing to the illness of President M. M. Dunham, Vice President Porter of Summit presided. Every township but one was represented.

The session was opened with a devotional service by Mr. Wm. D. Murray, the Superintendent of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian Sunday-school.

The Rev. Dr. R. F. Sc-tcard, the pastor of the First Presbyterian church delivered the address of welcome. The Rev. N. W. Cadwell of Westfield responded.

The reports of the secretary and treasurer showed the association to be in a prosperous condition. The reports of township secretaries are very encouraging.

The Rev. E. B. Cobb, the pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Elizabeth, delivered an address on "The Word." The address was very instructive throughout and was eagerly listened to by the delegates. At the conclusion of Mr. Cobb's remarks about one hundred of the delegates sat down to a banquet. The convention will be continued this evening.

A CHILD BURNED TO DEATH.

A Bonfire at Dunellen Causes a Terrible Accident.

While her mother was searching for a match of water, a six year-old daughter of Louis Wahl, of Dunellen, was slowly burned to death Tuesday night.

The child had been playing with a bonfire of leaves, and a sudden gust of wind communicated the fire to her dress. In a moment she was a mass of flames. Fright dethroned the mother's reason, and she rushed to the house for a basin of water. While she was absent the child burned to death.

Fred Bennett, a hunter, put out the flames with his hunting coat, and was badly burned about the hands and face.

CITIZENS AROUSED!

UNUSUALLY LARGE ATTENDANCE AT THE REPUBLICAN PRIMARIES LAST NIGHT.

Tried and True Councilman Johnston Re-Nominated in the Second Ward, Ex-Councilman Marsh in the Third and Mr. W F. Bartlett in the Fourth.

The Republicans of the Second, Third and Fourth Wards held their Primary meetings last evening to nominate Ward officers and to elect delegates to the city convention which is to be held Monday evening, November 9th. The result was as follows:

SECOND WARD.

The Republicans of the Second Ward held their primary meeting in the Bryant school house on East Sixth street. A large number of voters attended. Mr. Geo. Dudley was chosen chairman and Mr. C. A. Baynon secretary.

Nominations were then made as follows:

For Councilman—John Johnston.

Constable—Wm. R. Mattox.

Justice of the Peace—Clement W. Nash.

Delegates to the City Convention—Messrs. A. B. Dumont, A. W. Jackson, F. O. Herring, H. C. Squires, Wm. T. Broadway, S. A. Gibbs, Wm. R. Codington, L. N. Lovell, John Johnston, A. W. Duxbury, C. A. Baynon and C. B. Corwin.

The delegates were empowered to fill any vacancy that may occur.

City Judge Wm. R. Codington was the Judge of Election and Andrew Vanderbeek the inspector.

THIRD WARD.

The Republican voters of the Third Ward held their primary in the Casino on West Seventh street. There was a large turn out, fully one hundred persons being present. Mayor Alexander Gilbert was chosen chairman and Mr. O. B. Leonard clerk. Mr. Ernest R. Ackerman was elected judge and Mr. John Titsworth inspector. Ward officers were then placed in nomination as follows:

Constable—James Moffett.

Justice of the Peace—J. Oakley Nodyne.

For members of Common Council there were two nominees, Ex-councilman Francis E. Marsh and Mr. Harry M. Stockton. The vote was taken and Mr. Marsh was declared the nominee, he receiving 53 votes and Mr. Stockton 40.

John W. Murray, W. B. Wadsworth, O. D. Wagner, E. L. Leech, Jacob Kirkner, Roger Murray, D. E. Tuxworth, C. P. Leggett, F. A. Dunham, W. T. Kirk and E. R. Ackerman.

Members of the City Executive Committee—Chas. J. Fisk, E. R. Ackerman and John W. Murray, Jr.

FOURTH WARD.

There was also an unusually large attendance at the Fourth Ward primary. The meeting was held on the second floor of Mr. I. J. Carey's building on West Front street. Mr. F. C. Lounsbury was elected chairman and Mr. Alexander Titsworth secretary. Chief Carey was selected as Judge of Election and Messrs. Abraham Augleman and Robert Loughlin, inspectors. Nominations were then made as follows:

For Common Council—Mr. W. F. Bartlett.

For Constable—Aaron Mattox.

For Justice of the Peace—John King.

Delegates to the City Convention—Abraham Augleman, Amos Brewer, E. P. Clark, I. J. Carey, Martin Crounce, Henry W. Force, Fred C. Lounsbury, Robert H. Loughlin, William Kline, John C. Manchester, Fred C. Morris, Harold Sexton and E. K. Weber.

The following were chosen as members of the City Executive Committee—Chief Carey, Lounsbury, J. C. Manchester and Tunis J. Carey.

Before the meeting adjourned by request Councilman Rushmore addressed the meeting.

Something the Fortune-Teller, Mrs. Bernard, Did Not Foretell.

Some time ago Mrs. Bernard, an old fortune-teller residing on Harmony street, North Plainfield, died suddenly. Previous to this, it is said, the old lady had promised a neighbor that when she died he should have her house and lot, providing he took good care of her husband the remainder of his days. This the neighbor agreed to do, and soon after this the old lady died. Shortly afterward another family moved into Mr. Bernard's house, assuming the care of the aged widower. Much to the surprise of previous persons. It was not long before the latter found out the state of affairs, and ejected the intruders, and he immediately hies himself off to a lawyer to have him draw up an agreement by which he deeded the property and was to give him the house and lot. This the old man signed, unfortunately believed that the party benefitted would provide for him the necessaries of life as long as he lived.

In this he was mistaken, for soon afterward the latter beneficiary moved with his family to another locality leaving the aged Mr. Bernard to care for himself. This part of the affair he has taken much to heart, and in all probability the matter will be taken to the courts, as friends say the house and lot were given for the consideration named by the old fortune-teller.

The Democrats Jubilant.

Last evening Mr. James E. Martine and a number of his Democratic friends celebrated the Democratic victory in New York State by firing off a cannon in the streets of this city. Mr. Martine was all smiles, and pleasantly greeted every Republican he came in contact with, with a gentle reminder of Democratic victory.

AMID SILENT COMPANIONS.—VI.

A Plainfielder's Critical Observations on Poets and Poetry.

No one who has read Carlyle's heroworshipful essay on Dante can ever forget this noble thought, "the thing that is uttered from the inmost part of a man's soul differs altogether from what is uttered from the outer part. The outer is of the day, and of the empire of mode; the outer goes away in swift endless changes, the inmost is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. True souls who looks on this Dante, will find a brotherhood in him." And yet, after the despair, the dolefulness, the sorrow of Dante's mission, Shelley exclaims

"Woe is me!
Whence are we, and why are we? Of what scene
The actors or spectators? Great and mean
Meet as mixed in sea-ch, who reeds wreathed life must know."

And this Dante, in whom we find a brotherhood, emerged from the despair and dolor and sorrow, into the light of love, so beautiful that we often ask, what vision so beautiful? Fie! Fie! O Shelley! no end is so vulgar as you would make it!

When Alexander the Great captured the city Lampsacus, he proclaimed one of them, "Which is the stronger, life or death?" and the answer was given, "Life, because it bears so many evils." Dante was strong, for evil attended him; Dante was strong, for his Beatrice, most pure vision of holy womanhood, arose above him, guided him; Dante was strong, because he followed, amid all the evils affronting him, that beatific vision which led him to the Empyrean.

"In presence of that light one such becomes Impossible to withdraw therefrom for other object.
It is impossible he can consent."

Life is a struggle against temptation, and the road from infinite right to base wrong is as easy as the mere change of spin. In that life is the one occasion for Shelley's "Woe is me!" rather is it a time to cry in joy, "O Splendor of God!" Where Shelley was weak, Dante was strong, in life. All about us lie the means for doing good, they are before us in every thing, they are within our reach; so too are the means for evil. Dante was strong, for all true genius is strong, following blindly that which is good and shunning what is evil with open eyes; Dante was strong as was Milton in adversity, in blindness, in waning spirit to write Paradise Lost. If we look behind us we see evil, which is loss, not loss to ourselves, but loss to the great stock of good which makes this life cry out in joy, "O Splendor of God!" What is life but a tree of which we are guardians. It must be pruned in every season of the soul, as in time my tree is that tree mine. Should the fruit sour, the cry comes, "O woe is me!" but if the fruit is ripe, luscious, sturdy, the cry is "O splendor of God!"

We know not whether there is an hereafter or not; some philosophers set the minds of their disciples into a wavering conviction that there is no future, and that death ends all; yet the luminosity of the soul and the absolute refusal of the soul to the indulgence it came surmount all difficulties. The cold, dank earth, sold and bartered by man is no light final foundation for the soul, whose sanctity alone has kept the name of Dante and the spirit of his poem in high power these five centuries, wherein is shown that the outward and visible life are punished in this world, whereas the evils of the soul receive their condemnation in the next. This is solely from one poem in literature,—the Bible fills as full a third part of the Book, which to God is a mystery even to the wisest." The preaching of Christ was in its mysteries which furnish the skeptic with arguments and also strengthen the faith of the pure in heart. But, O man! you know that sin is punished ere the act is cold,—still ye not therefore follow a fortune which leads you to the brotherhood in this Dante who could cry after passing through the sin, the purgings and the exaltations of the soul, "O Splendor of God!" who tells us as did Job that it is proper to do good, it is the rack to do evil? Like the Inferno which the Chinese set afloat to ignite the vessels of an enemy's fleet, are the temptations set about us to burn, to blacken and sink them ere the light eterne has power to make them pure.

Dante's Inferno is not so much a place as a life; each circle with its attendant punishment is a condition of mind, representing the state of mind through which the sinners of each order as divided from the Empyrean, struggle, struggle and exist. It is the doctrine that to the pure all things about them are pure, thus making earth and hell subservient to Heaven; that the earth is Hades to those who disobey supreme laws, and that having suffered torture resultant from wicked-ness pass onward through purgatorial processes, to be cleansed in sin and Minos promptly sits in judgment upon us; the "spirit evil-born" speaks, hand to hand, the sentence and then is "clown-ward hurled" into depths of despair and wailing and cursing its lot.

"The infernal hurricane that never rests
Hurtles the spirit onward in its rapines;
Whirling them onward and smiting, it shocks,
And maims, and grinds them."

So our minds, galled by the curses upon them, ever hurled about in agonies, evolving from them the torments placed upon them. Instead of making the brain the expressive soul, pure, lofty, noble deeds, we make it the agent we are willing to make it the depository for wrong thoughts and the homes of evil and foul deeds. The inscription on number color * * * written upon the summit of a gate,

"All hope abandon ye who enter in,"

is a warning to all who enter the sinful life. To him who sins no praise is due, neither is there else than everlasting punishment which we bring upon ourselves. Our evil deeds make "up a tummit that goes whirling on

Like the sand-pillar by the desert-side,
Even as the sand doth when the whirlwind sweeps it."

As Virgil guides Dante's guide throughout the infernal regions, Purgatory and Paradise, so is Dante the reader's guide through the world, and the mind is misled while reading the Divina Comedia is intense, but the pain is endurable a second and a third time, for there is in the attraction such grandeur has over the intellect. There is no poem which possesses so great an influence to induce into one a desire to be pure and good, to live truly and to give and to grant unto others the same. The horrors of Dante's Hell are but truths, simple, absolute, undeviating, everlasting, for they are awful: yet humanity suffers them day by day.

Fie! Fie!

By giving a golden deed for every golden moment, we can make this earth a rose-strewn pathway to ease and peace, and banish the hated place of the arch fiend's diabolical lanterns. A pure mind is the root of a noble life: a noble soul for everything.

This is my lesson from Dante who "knocks gravely at the door of the Infinite, and says, 'Open! I am Dante!'"

A NEW PRESIDENT.

Senor Montt Elected President of Chili To-Day.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5th (Special.)—A dispatch from London to-day announces that Senor Montt has been elected president of Chili by the Presidential electors. His term is for five years.

The Secretary of War Resigns.

WESTON, VT., Nov. 5th. (Special.)—The Secretary of War has placed his resignation in the hands of President Harrison to-day. He has decided to accept the appointment of United States Senator tendered him by the Governor of Vermont.

DR. PAUL HAS NOT A BLACK EYE.

As the Result of a Scrap Between Him and Druggist Richards.

The New York Times of to-day has the following:

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 4.—A sensational scene occurred in the drug store of R. J. Shaw, on Front street, last evening, when Edward J. Richards shaw's head clerk, and Dr. Congeys Paul, one of the city's most prominent physicians, engaged in a fistic encounter. Richards says that Paul entered the store and asked for a drink. The bars were all closed on account of election, and when the liquor was refused, Paul became angry and used language which Richards resented by punching him in the face.

The doctor is a much bigger man than the druggist, and the latter got the drubbing he was plucky, he was soon worsted, and Dr. Paul pummelled him unmercifully. The fight was at its height when Proprietor Shaw entered and ejected the doctor on whose shirt front were ruby stains where Richards nose had reached.

Dr. Paul's large clientage of parents are to-day forced to submit to the ministrations of his assistant, while he is at home nursing a bruised jaw and a swollen eye, and Richards deals out tooth powder and Hoosier root with a mournful expression on his court-plaster-covered face.

The above is greatly exaggerated. Dr. Paul has no black eye and Mr. Richards face is not covered with court-plaster. He is attending to his duties and says he still eats three square meals a day.

—Fresh from a New York run of six months' duration the latest production of the realistic school of dramatic literature, "Blue Jeans," has been brought to the Central opera house, Union. No pains nor ever dreamed of introducing upon the stage anything that would compare with the genuine article than this. Straight forward to heighten the effect of an old fashioned country dance in the center about the stage, a bull and a horse are led on, and a substantial fence is thrown upon which two rustic boys climb and over which a young countryman can vault to escape an angry woman. In the next two acts shoes are mended, wood is sawed, part of a barn is painted, bread is kneaded, lamps are filled and potatoes are parved, all in the most natural manner possible, and it seems as if nothing more could intrude. Indeed, Authentic as a saw-mill is shown and a buzz saw is heard and seen dividing boards. Later the hero is left alone in the mill with the unprincipled adventuress and her infatuated admirer, when into the premises comes an officer on one side of the stage. In the struggle that follows the hero is overpowered, knocked senseless and in this condition the adversary places him upon the carriage, starting the machinery. The scene that follows is deeply thrilling. The carriage moves slowly forward to the saw beyond, the unconscious hero forward what is apparently certain death. The heroine is alive to the situation and is battering away upon the door while her husband is being brought nearer to his doom. At last the panels give way, down the flight of steps upon which rests her husband's necess

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Few Englishmen deserve or would get a warmer welcome from Americans than Sir Edwin Arnold will receive when he passes from city to city this winter, giving his lectures and readings from his own writings.

The United States has the largest steam shovel in the world. It weighs fifty-six tons and is used in scooping out phosphates from the earth at John's Island, near Charleston. This gigantic machine can dip down ten feet and scoop 3½ cubic yards of phosphate every minute.

In one of the states of this Union not long since a negro was taken from jail by a mob and tied to a tree. Then a crowd piled wood about him and burned him to death. Let us send good people to distant lands to stop the inhuman barbarity of heathens who quietly drown superfluous girl babies to keep them from overstocking the population, do.

Two ocean steamers have been commenced by the Cunard line that may eclipse in speedy any of the Atlantic racers already on the sea. The immense new Cunarders will carry 2,000 tons of freight and 700 cabin passengers. The vessels will be guaranteed to make twenty-one miles an hour in the open sea. That speed would be 504 miles in a day. At 500 miles a day the Cunarder would cross the ocean in about five days and fifteen hours. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, the Scotch American, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, predicts that before the Cunarders get their racers afloat the Inman line will have built in the United States, on the Delaware, two Atlantic steamers that will outrun anything that ever crossed the sea, except a cable message, and make the Cunarders turn green with envy. Well, we shall see.

Very Silly.

A lady who, since the memory of the present generation, has been earning her living by writing newspaper and magazine articles and to various other ways and is therefore quite as much of a working woman as if she scrubbed floors for a maintenance, writes a paper lamenting the degeneracy of domestic help in the United States, and remarks:

We can never have the "perfect service" in a republic.

Don't dwarf by all means this lady should aristocrat, manifest an humble, to Europe and live there where from the superior heights of writing at a cent a word, more or less, she can look down upon the woman who sweeps up her literary litter and enjoy the "perfect service" which only a monarchy or an empire can yield. Her aristocratic sensitivities are quite too acute for her to tarry longer in her own country, where, as the old man said when speaking to the Sunday school class, "Maybe all these little boys and girls will some day be presidents."

The "perfect service" in the domestic line in America went when women who wanted to introduce foreign ways brought into their kitchen the cap and back door business, and set themselves up as persons of another race than the people who for wages performed their work. Then every self respecting American girl fled the kitchen. Jean of Arc was a leader. What a horrid creature she would have been to this blue blooded magazine lady!

The Chilian Affair.

Oct. 15 a number of American seamen of the ship of Baltimore were attacked by a Chilian mob in the streets of Valparaiso. One American, the Baltimore's boatswain, was killed, another died of his wounds and five altogether were injured. Bayonet wounds on the soldiers' bodies showed that the Valparaiso police had helped the mob rather than those attacked. Oct. 23, one week later, President Harrison sent a dispatch to Minister Egan in Chili, bidding him lay the matter before the Chilian government, also asking whether there was any justification for the act of the mob, and why the guilty parties were not brought to justice. The officers of the Baltimore believe the attack was made on account of hostility on the part of Chilians to Americans because of the belief that the United States sympathized with Balmaceda in the late revolution in Chili, also because the representatives of our government gave relief and refuge at the close of that revolution.

Thereupon English papers, ever ready to criticise in an unfriendly way the United States, began to comment harshly on this government's haste in demanding explanations of the fight in Valparaiso, and bringing up our non action in case of Italy's demand for satisfaction after the New Orleans riot. The fact that the English that largely resident in Chili is also to be remembered. In connection with this criticism it may be remarked that the British government itself made a precedent for the United States to follow in the case where satisfaction was demanded of Brazil in 1863. Three drunken British naval officers in citizen's dress were arrested by the police for street disturbance in one of the Brazilian towns. Satisfaction for this "outrage" and also for a money claim of over $30,000—a claim brought against Brazil by the British dark Prince of Wales—was demanded. When the demand was not at once complied with, a British man-of-war immediately seized and held five Brazilian sailing vessels and one steamer.

ECHOES FROM ELECTION

The President Says the Tammany Issue Lost New York.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S COMMENTS.

He Says Tariff Reform Is a Live Issue, and That the People Cannot Be Blinded Regarding Sound Money—Foraker's Senatorial Aspirations Out in Ohio.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—In speaking of the elections the president stated that the only place where national issues entered into the campaign was in Ohio, and that therefore the election of Mr. McKinley is particularly significant and gratifying. He expressed disappointment at the result in New York, but intimated that he had expected it from the moment that the campaign degenerated into a fight with Tammany as an issue. He thinks that if national issues had been kept to the front the result would have been different. Secretary Foster, who took the stump for McKinley in Ohio, was very happy over McKinley's victory. He said that the result in Ohio was a complete vindication of the principles of protection. "That McKinley bill," he said, "has worked out its own salvation. We were brave enough to fight fairly and squarely on the tariff and the result proves that the people are satisfied with the bill. Protection and honest money were vindicated. Campbell was badly crippled by the Democratic policy on the silver question. That did him cause nearly so great a loss of votes to him as his free trade speeches did, and we will elect a Republican senator, too. I propose to stump for Foraker in the spring."

Secretary Rusk declares that the elections went as he expected. He said he favored restoring the tariff on hides, as the Massachusetts shoe manufacturers, for whose benefit hides were put on the free list, had voted with the Democrats, he believed in a good hides to make them pay more for their hides. Attorney General Miller said if the fight in New York had been made on national issues the result would have been a victory for the Republicans.

What President Polk says.

President Polk, of the Farmers' Alliance, said he was not surprised. In Ohio he saw no reason why McKinley should fail of an election when 870,000 had been sent into Ohio to aid him in his campaign. The following copies of telegrams explain themselves:

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 4.

The President:

The citizens of Ohio have given a magnificent vote for McKinley. His election will be celebrated by all branches of general assembly Republican on joint ballot by from 35 to 37, insuring the election of general McCook from this and Republican to the United States senate.

WILLIAM HAHN, Chairman.
EMANUEL STEINER, Committee.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4, 1891.

William Hahn, Chairman, etc., Columbus, O.:

Thanks for the good news and congratulations. I pride myself and the party upon a victory won by a courageous and patriotic people.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Ex-President Cleveland's Views.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Concerning the elections ex-President Grover Cleveland said:

"Of course every one has a right to put his own construction on the result, and I am not anxious to obstruct my views, but it seems to me some things ought to be no longer doubtful.

"Any man who still thinks that tariff reform is a settled and obsolete issue, or that the intelligence of good and safe money is a question when the people can be blinded, is either willfully wrong or dangerously dull. It seems to me, too, that Democrats ought to be satisfied that a stalk adherence to the principles of their party does not require the abuse of those who show an inclination to help it. Every mind regret the defeat of Governor Campbell. He has been a brave and honest official. This and the splendid canvass he made entitled him to success. While the election of Flower, Russell and Boies ought to cause the utmost rejoicing among the Democrats, they should not forget that with these things comes a new obligation to be true to the people, honest to the solvency of our principles and decent in all things."

Foraker and Sherman.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 5.—Ex Governor Foraker was interviewed in regard to the United States senatorship. Said he: "I stand just where I have stood from the beginning. I don't intend to run after or beg from the senatorship. My friends assure me of the support of more than sixty members of the general assembly. McKinley will not be in the race for the senate, and I don't propose to be a candidate. Had matters gone differently he might have been, but he is a necessarily senatorial, politically, and I don't think he will want anything more at this time. The victory in Ohio means the condemnation of the Campbell administration. It means the most pronounced opposition to American industries and labor."

Mr. Foraker thinks McKinley will be well thought of as a candidate for the presidency in 1892.

How McKinley Enjoys Victory.

CANTON, O., Nov. 5.—Major McKinley is quietly resting at the Hotel Harford in this city. He has received advices from Chairman Hahn to the effect that the majority would be full thirty on joint ballot, and that the legislature would be Republican by upward of 30 on joint ballot. Mr. McKinley has been flooded with congratulatory telegrams. Among those were the messages were President Harrison, Governor Campbell, J. Sloat Fassett, Senator Sherman, Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, Governor Foraker, Secretary Foster and General Alger.

Governor Campbell takes the situation philosophically and says the Democratic party was laboring under too great a handicap because of lack of funds to pay the legitimate expenses of the campaign. He says they made the best fight they could in face of a Republican majority of 21,000 and the combined opposition of the state administration, and feels think as he will want anything more at this time. The victory in Ohio means the condemnation of the Campbell administration. It means the most pronounced opposition to American industries and labor."

He says they made the best fight they could in face of a Republican majority of 21,000 and the combined opposition of the state administration, and feels that it is as much a vote and death struggle with the Republican party. To defeat Major McKinley meant the downfall and disintegration of the party itself.

The governor sent this dispatch to Major McKinley: "I hearthy congratulate you upon your election. I have no doubt that you will serve the people of Ohio with fidelity and honesty."

Governor Campbell received telegrams of sympathy on his defeat from ex President Cleveland and Governor Boies, of Iowa, and the Ran-dall club, of Pittsburg.

What Mr. Platt Says.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Ex-Senator T. C. Platt says:

"I don't consider this a Democratic victory. Tammany Hall, a secret organization, dictated and won this election. The Democratic constituency merely voted for the candidates forced upon them by Tammany Hall.

"Flower is now a bigger man than old Cleveland." In overdoing they brought about the same result. Tammany Hall this year has fooled both Cleveland and Hill. Each thinks that the organization will support him for the presidency next year. Both are fooled, because Flower, with his barrel, will be a strong compromise candidate between the two warring factions.

"Unquestionably it was Flower's barrel that won this election. Look at St. Lawrence county, for instance. It can be looked upon usually to give 7,000 Republican majority. The year it fell nearly 2,000 below that figure. Money accomplished that result. The issue raised by Tammany—the World's fair—had no influence in the campaign. In all I don't believe that 10,000 voters were influenced by that issue. Tammany may, and probably will try to force Hill upon the country for president next year."

THE REVISED RETURNS.

The New York Legislature Still Under Republican Rule.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Revised returns show that Flower carried the state by 45,646 majority. The senate stands: Republicans, 17. Democrats, 15. The assembly is: Republicans, 65. Democrats, 63.

The Twenty fifth senatorial district, which was believed to have returned the Democratic candidate, proves to have elected the Republican, Rufus T. Peck. Two senatorial districts are still in doubt, according to Democratic calculations, the Duchess-Columbia district, where the Democrats claim the election of their candidate, Edward R. Osborne, by between 30 and 80 majority. The Republicans, on the other hand, assert that their candidate, Gilbert A. Deane, has carried the district by a majority of 137.

The returns are about complete in the Sixteenth senatorial district, and John H. Derby, Rep., seems to be elected by about 500 majority. Both Democratic papers of this city give the county to Derby. The Troy Press official Democratic organ has Derby in now 250 ahead and the Troy Times official Republican organ has Derby about 400. Only a few of members of assembly have changed by the latest of yesterday, and to such an extent indicate that the slender Democratic majority has been wiped out and a majority of two votes has been given the Republicans—too small a majority to make General Husted and Tom Platt feel comfortable.

The Republicans claim that the Republicans have elected one of the three members from Oneida county, C. Winfield Scarer, in the third district, all of the members from Onondaga, the defeat of Dr. Rogers in Sullivan county and James A. McKenna in the Second Queens, who is elected, a Republican having been chosen in each district. Official returns given out by Irving Harris, Rep., in the First Westchester district, is declared elected by 20 majority. The Republican figures in the assembly 65 to 63 —continues to hold good the two speaker will be General James W. Husted.

The Republicans claim the senate will stand 20 to 50. Senator Lispenard Stewart was defeated.

New Jersey Democrats Happy.

TRENTON, Nov. 5.—The election in New Jersey by which the Democrats secure a majority of 11 in the senate and 30 in the assembly—a majority of 31 on joint ballot—is claimed by the victorious party as a verdict of approval of the conduct of the state government under Democratic rule. The Republicans did not carry one of the seven counties in which the senatorial contests took place, and the sixty assemblymen nominated they elected but nineteen. There is a loss to the Republicans of three senators and one assemblyman.

Seven senators will also be voted for next year, and with those elected on Tuesday will form a body of twenty-one who will vote for a United States senator to succeed Rufus Blodgett. Of these seven who will come up for election in the Democratic are very certain of securing three, thus reducing control of the senate.

The only counties to come in the republican column that elected Democratic officers were Hudson, Union and Passaic. While the election of Flower, Russell and Boies ought to cause the utmost rejoicing among the Democrats, they should not forget that with these things comes a new obligation to be true to the people, honest in the solvency of our principles and decent in all things."

Foraker and Sherman.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 5.—Ex Governor Foraker was interviewed in regard to the United States senatorship. Said he: "I stand just where I have stood from the beginning. I don't intend to run after or beg from the senatorship. My friends assure me of the support of more than sixty members of the general assembly. Mr. Foraker thinks McKinley will be well thought of as a candidate for the presidency in 1892.

Russell Leads by 6,291.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—The returns received by Governor Russell was 5,291. The Republicans have elected the rest of their state ticket by about the same popularity, assuming that Governor Russell has only 14,000 votes ahead of his ticket. The Republicans have carried both branches of the legislature.

The Globe, Dem., says that Governor Russell may well feel that his detractors have not only been silenced but put to shame. Even the Republican press admits as now a debatable quantity in the next governor. By the election of Flower, New York has given herself in the glorious line of states that are to be counted upon as Democratic in the fight for president.

The Journal, Rep., says: The defeat in this state came from the fact that their platform was weak on the temperance and school questions, and to treasurers of Cragin's frauds. Grover Cleveland has done more than any other man in New York for nothing. Tammany has won.

Gregg's Plurality About 57,434.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Complete returns from all but 3 of the 67 counties in the state, including Pittsburgh and Allegheny, and estimates for the other fourteen counties show a plurality for Gregg, Dem., for auditor general of 57,434 over Morrison, Rep., for state treasurer. Only ten counties in the state have gone Republican, and of the constitutional conventions. In Forty two counties there is a majority of 155,597 against license, the counties in favor. The counties favoring the license are: Delaware, Lancaster, Berks, Columbia, Erie, Fayette, Lackawanna, Luzerne, Pike, Warren and Wayne.

The Ledger says Blaine could carry Maine by 20,000 majority, and Governor Harrison or Major McKinley could do so, too. In New York, however, the result must be left to be decided on as a defeat for President Harrison, whose personal candidate Mr. Fassett was.

The meaning of all this is that the New York Press, Rep., has no doubt that President Harrison will be the candidate for general, and the figures show that he can carry the state. Pennsylvania, Ohio and Nebraska will support either McKinley, Harrison or Blaine. The west, as shown by Iowa, is still restive. There is one man who can certainly recall every wandering state. His name is Blaine.

Boies' Plurality 19,000.

DES MOINES, Nov. 5.—The latest returns indicate Boies' plurality at 19,000. Eighty-eight counties give him 13,906. The now Democratic claim the election of their whole state ticket. The senate stands: Democrats, 35; Republicans, 24; Independent, 1. The Republicans have a majority of 3 or 5 in the house. The Democrats had a regular old fashioned jubilee last night over the success of Boies. Fires were burned all over the state, and Democrats marched the streets. Governor Boies' carriage was drawn through the streets by a great crowd of enthusiastic Democrats.

Brown's Plurality 30,000.

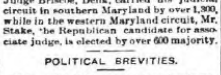
BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Frank Brown, for governor, carried the state by something over 30,000 plurality. The legislature will stand on joint ballot 103 Democrats, 18 Republicans. The senate will have only four Republicans, who are holdover senators. In the house of delegates there are seven Republicans and three Independents. Chief Justice Bricker, Democrat, has judicial circuit in southern Maryland by over 1,300, while in the western Maryland circuit, Mr. Stake, the Republican candidate for associate judge, is elected by over 600 majority.

POLITICAL BREVITIES.

Returns in Colorado are coming in unusually slow. Judge Beem, Rep., will probably be elected chief justice by over 5,000. Dispatches from about sixty-five of the 106 counties of Kansas show that the People's party was successful in not more than 45. All over the state there are large decreases of the People's vote, while the Republicans made heavy gains.

Reports from the congressional election in South Dakota indicate the re-election of Jolly, Rep., to congress by a good vote. The vote for Smith, Ind., is away below what had been claimed and concedes Mr. Jolly's plurality will probably be from 3,000 to 5,000.

The returns from Nebraska state are still very meagre, but careful estimates give Judge Post, Republican candidate for supreme judge, 6,000 majority over Edgerton, Ind., People's.



Riding Habits.

As American women are not only following the English style in their manner of riding but also in the fashion of their habits, the accompanying cut will be of interest to lady equestrians. It shows a riding habit in blue cloth flecked with white and made with a double breasted coat cut with big revers. The coat displays a scarlet cloth waistcoat. The skirt is cut so as to fit the saddle when the rider is seated. The only point worth with this habit is of the same color as the basque. An idea is also given of the style of saddle, livery of the groom, etc.

AN ENGLISH RIDING OUTFIT.

A French habit seen had the skirt in black Melton cloth. The coat basque was in red cloth, crossed with black frogs, while the jacket worn over it was in fawn colored cloth. Mousquetaire gloves, tight boots to the knee and a black silk hat were furnished to wear with this habit.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

New York Loses Roger Connor and Danny Richardson.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Roger Connor and Danny Richardson, who have played first and second base respectively for the New York league team for many years, last night signed personally guaranteed contracts with the Athletics for three years. Here the latter outfielder has also been signed by the Athletic association team.

Corbett Wants $10,000 or None.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 5.—Jim Corbett, who appears with a theatrical company at the Bijou theater this week, received the following telegram from the California Athletic club: "Will give $7,5 for a fight between you and Mitler, the Irish champion." Corbett answered as follows: "It must be $10,000 or no go."

Lord Hawks Well Pleased.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—Lord Hawkes and his team of cricketers arrived at Liverpool yesterday on the City of New York. He expresses himself as highly gratified with his American tour, and says that he will return to the United States in 1893 with another picked team of players.

Death of Tony Hart.

WORCESTER, Mass., Nov. 5.—Tony Hart, the well known comedian, died Nov. 4 in the Worcester Lunatic asylum. Tony Hart was for many years the associate and partner of Edward Harrigan. Subsequently he was removed to the Worcester Lunatic asylum suffering with paresis. He was a clever actor, a jolly, fat, Irish man, who personated negro and Irish women with great humor. He sang well and danced gracefully, and "Squatter Sovereignty" and "Mulligan Guard Ball" and several other of the Harrigan plays owed much of their success to his ability.

Summing Up at Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 5.—No business was done by the senate last night owing to the absence of a quorum. Today the defense is summing up the evidence in the case of the state against Treasurer Boyer, and will endeavor to convince the senate that the charges against the governor have been sustained. Attorney General Hensel will follow in an argument to prove the testimony justifies an adverse to the governor asking for the removal of the state treasurer. Next week the extra session will probably come to an end.

Farmers Fighting the Flames.

NORWALK, Conn., Nov. 5.—The most extensive and destructive forest fire ever known in Western Connecticut has been raging since Saturday. Ten miles north of Norwalk, in Wilton. It has already spread over thousands of acres. The farmers have been fighting the flames night and day.

Smith's Successor Appointed.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The Marquis of Dufferin, formerly governor general of Canada and viceroy of India, has been appointed lord warden of the Cinque ports in place of the late Hon. W. H. Smith.

Coy Held for Murder.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 5.—Coy, the self confessed murderer of Whalen, and George Kelly, charged with being an accomplice, were arraigned in the district court. Judge Tucker discharged Kelly and held Coy to await the action of the grand jury.

The Duke as Co-respondent.

VIENNA, Nov. 5.—The Duke of Orleans was served with a writ in the action for divorce brought by Captain Charles Armstrong against his wife, the celebrated soprano, known as Mme. Melba, in which the duke is charged as co-respondent.

Hacked to Death with a Hatchet.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5.—Sigfried Gosh, a German in South Omaha, murdered both his wife and infant son to death with a hatchet and then hanged himself. No cause is yet known for the tragedy.

THE TRIAL SOON ENDED.

New York Presbytery Dropped the Briggs Case.

THE DECISIVE VOTE WAS 94 TO 39.

When the Result Was Announced the Professor Heaved a Sigh of Relief and Was Warmly Congratulated by His Friends—For Peace and Quiet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The charges of heresy against the Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Union Theological seminary have been disposed of by the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Presbytery of New York, having listened to the paper of the Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D. D., in the case of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America against him, as to the sufficiency of the charges and specifications in form and legal effect, and with set approving of the positions stated in his in sensual address; at the same time, desiring earnestly the peace and quiet of the church, and in view of the declarations made by Dr. Briggs touching his loyalty to the Holy Scriptures and the Westminster standard, and of his disclaimers of interpretations put on some of his writings, deems it best to dismiss the case, and hereby does so dismiss it.

After a Seven Hour Sitting.

This disposal of the charges against Dr. Briggs was reached after a seven hours' sitting. The vote was—yeas, 94; nays, 39. The famous case is now settled, so far as the New York presbytery is concerned, unless the synod or general assembly order it taken up again. The hearing was held in the Scotch Presbyterian church, at 53 West Fourteenth street. The church was filled, and many spectators stood in the gallery. Dr. Briggs sat in a front seat. He appeared nervous and pale. By his side sat Dr. Francis Brown, of Union seminary, and Henry Day, his legal adviser. In front sat Prof. Bridges, the other Charly. H. Woolsley, another of his counsel. The committee on prosecution, George W. F. Birch, H. D. Coddington, sat at a table at the extreme left. Copies of the charges and specification in the case were in the hands of the members.

DR. BRIGGS.

Dr. Briggs' Objections.

After the opening prayer of the moderator and the transaction of routine business, Dr. Briggs rose and said: The moderator's eye and I disagreed first and with a preliminary objection. As he read the clear concise statement of his faith and the objections to the charges, his voice held its fullness and flexibility. Dr. Briggs' reply covered thirty-four pages of a printed pamphlet. In his introductory remarks he said:

I have no objection to the regularity of the organization or to the jurisdiction of the presbytery of New York. It is my desire to be in no manner and in the interest of the order and regularity of the judicial proceedings in the presbytery to object to the form and sufficiency of the charges and specifications in form and in legal effect.

If by any way, directly or indirectly, I have been the occasion of disturbing the peace of the church I deeply regret it. If I have given pain and wound to any brethren in the ministry, or to the people of Christ's church by any utterance in the inaugural address I am very sorry. But as I have stated many times of the address, away from the seat of strife in a foreign land, I stated honestly at that time there are any such doctrinal errors in the address as the report alleges and as the bar of my own conscience I feel myself in regard to the matter of delivering the peace and harmony of the church.

Charges Improperly Formulated.

Dr. Briggs then went through the list of charges, bringing out authorities and logic to prove they had not been properly formulated. Some, he claimed, had set forth "more than one offense." Others had not set forth "the facts behind the charges," while others did not charge offenses against the cardinal principles of the Westminster Confession in the course of his speech Dr. Briggs said:

It is a fact that the inaugural address declares that there are but certain three great doctrines of divine authority in the Bible, the church and the reason, but specification 1 is logical form in that it introduces an inference from the fact to the proposition that cannot be recognized as either true or valid. If the charge is intended that the inaugural declares that the church and the reason are each alike sufficient fountains of divine authority, and that the Bible and the reason are each sufficient to give that knowledge of God and his will which is necessary unto salvation, then I say scripture itself does not have any claim to right to enter from anything taught in the inaugural address.

Pressing on, Dr. Briggs, after a short discussion of parliamentary questions, came to John Stevenson, who answered the objections of Dr. Briggs. At the conclusion of his speech Dr. Henry Van Dyke moved "That, in view of the facts presented, the case should be dismissed." This was the fifth form of the resolution put forward before on. Dr. Van Dyke pleaded feelingly for "peace, unity and purity in the church."

Not Bread, but a Stone.

"What this great city wants," said Dr. Van Dyke, "is the bread of religion; we are giving it the stone of controversy and of a heresy trial." Dr. Van Dyke closed with astrology on Dr. Briggs as a man and a scholar. He was followed by Professor Mcook, Dr. James H. McIlvaine, Dr. Sutton, Dr. Thomas Hastings, Dr. John R. Paxton, the Rev. Sidney G. Law, Dr. Henry M. Field, Dr. George L. Shearer, Dr. William G. T. Shedd and Professor Brown.

Finally the vote on the resolution was reached. When the vote was announced Dr. Briggs heaved a heartfelt sigh of relief. The presbytery remained in session only long enough after the verdict to listen to a parting prayer by Dr. John Hall. Then it adjourned until next Monday. The prosecuting committee can appeal to the synod if it so chooses. After the adjournment Dr. Briggs was warmly congratulated by his friends on the result of the charges against him.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 5.—The car stables of the Rapid Transit line on Bergen street were burned, entailing a loss of about $80,000.

O'BRIEN AND TANNER STONED.

Both Men Were Hit and Their Driver's Skull Was Fractured.

CORK, Nov. 5.—The Parnellites stoned the anti Parnellites from the roof of the Cork market. William O'Brien received a blow on the head, and Dr. Tanner was struck to the ground. The man who was driving the car in which the two sat had his skull fractured. Several Parnellites made an attack on the M. P.'s and their friends with sticks and were stoutly resisted. The hospital is kept busy attending to the injured.

They Denounce O'Brien.

DUBLIN, Nov. 5.—Dr. Kenny and John Joseph Clancy, M. P., both join in denouncing William O'Brien for revealing confidential documents relating to the Boulogne conference. They declare that O'Brien purposely suppressed the fact that he had agreed that Parnell should have the power to veto Irish support of any home rule bill proposed in parliament and the same power over all important legislation proposed by the Liberals in Ireland. Nobody supper if Parnell's retirement would be permanent or even lengthy. Harrington and William Redmond condemned the statements of Kenny and Clancy regarding the proposed power of veto to be bestowed on Parnell.

Thomas, brother of Timothy Healy, has been elected to succeed Wexford, made vacant by the resignation of John E. Redmond, now contesting Cork.

KILLED BY A WILD ENGINE.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 5.—Peter M. Mullen and Francis McGuinness were killed at the grade crossing of the Pennsylvania railroad at Market street last evening. They were members of the board of chosen freeholders of Essex county, and were returning from a meeting of the jail committee in their carriage. A freight train was backing bound passed in front of them, and they were proceeding across the track when a wild engine bound for New York dashed into their carriage. They were thrown fifteen feet, and McGuinness fell in front of the engine. He was terribly mangled, his head being crushed and one leg nearly severed from his body. Mullen was internally injured.

They were taken to St. Michael's hospital and died about three hours after ward. All the members of the board of freeholders were notified of the accident and visited the hospital. Mullen's family and others of friends were at his bedside when he died. Both men were old and well known residents of this city.

Vicar General Cantwell's Jubilee.

A Big Failure in Berlin.

BERLIN, Nov. 5.—A sensation has been caused by the failure of the bank of Herzfeld & Wolff for $10,000 marks. Several royal personages lose heavily, and it is said the failure was influenced by the imprisonment of the banker. Wolff's arrest for criminal bankruptcy is expected.

Andrew Carnegie Home Again.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Among the passengers on the steamer City of Paris, which arrived yesterday, were Andrew Carnegie and wife, Miss Maria Van Zandt, Mr. H. Grandin, a well known Japanese lecturer, and the Yokohama's newspaper. The City of Paris had 2,000 tons of freight.

A BLOW AT CANTO'S LIFE

An Attempt Made to Kill the Brave Chilian.

MARTIAL LAW IN UNEASY BRAZIL.

It Looks as if There Might Be Another Upheaval There Soon Owing to a Quarrel Between the Military and Civilian Factions of the Republic.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via GALVESTON, Nov. 5.—The discovery of a plot to assassinate Colonel Canto created great excitement here yesterday. Canto led the forces of the junta which landed at Quinteros bay, and which, after a series of fights, captured Valparaiso and led to the downfall of Balmaceda. He has as a consequence been the object of the cordial hatred of much of the party hence of the late president, as are still in the country. It was among these that the plot was discovered.

The Italo's Officers Cheered.

The steamer Italo has arrived at Valparaiso and her officers and crew were most heartily received by the populace. Many people visited the water front to get a sight of the famous ship.

The sensational stories which have been cabled to England and thence back to this country, to the effect that upon the receipt of the United States minister and our naval officers, are probably intended more for consumption in Great Britain than in Chili.

In regard to the allegation that our naval officers refused to speak to the Balmaceda officers, the charge is without foundation.

Vindication of Honorable Men.

"It is nothing less," said a prominent American resident here, "than a vindication of honorable men like Admirals McCann and Brown and Captains Sampson and Schley. All of these officers I know personally, and I am certain that they would not act as they are said to have done."

He then said that the American residents here were not only sympathizing with the junta during the war, and that even among our officers, if there was any preference to be shown either side, it was toward the Congressionalists.

Beyond the fact that Admiral Brown visit d Quinteros bay after the flag-ship San Francisco, upon receiving intelligence that the junta troops had suffered a reverse at that point, there was not the slightest ground for anyone in the Balmaceda or the Congressionalists any encouragement for American naval officers to act unfriendly.

Many Warships for Chilian Waters.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—The developments of the past two days leave no room for doubt that the navy department purposes sending a large fleet of our war vessels to the Southern Pacific. In connection with this several ships have been fitted to receive a sufficient supply of coal for long cruises. Rear Admiral Brown, detailed for the West Indies a week ago, had his instructions changed so as to order his fleet to the Pacific instead of to the West Indies. It is understood that the Baltimore will be ordered to the Pacific coast, and that the Charleston, Yorktown and Concord will be ordered to Panama. Reports on short notice.

In addition to the Newark, the Atlanta and the Philadelphia are to follow that the Concord and Bennington are now being fitted out at Mare Island. The Baltimore, the Charleston and the Yorktown are ordered to the Pacific. Two large fleets of Rear Admiral Brown's command for the West Indies a week ago had his instructions changed so as to order his fleet to the Pacific instead of to the West Indies. It is understood that the Baltimore will be ordered to the Pacific coast, and that the Charleston, Yorktown and Concord will be ordered to Panama. Reports on short notice.

It would seem, therefore, that the department has in view the consecration of the fleets of the new navy in Pacific waters. With the Baltimore and the Newark in the Pacific, the Atlanta and the Philadelphia will be ordered to the Pacific, the Atlanta and the Philadelphia will be ordered to the Pacific, the Atlanta and the Philadelphia will be ordered to

WOMAN'S HOME

THE FAMILY HEARTHSTONE.

One Room to a House Which Should Be Furnished Most Comfortably.

No room in the house so perfectly typifies the communism of a family, the truth shining in diversity of the individuals, as the sitting room. It is the center of the social life of the household. It is "mother's room." There easily-offended found in her moments of leisure, ready to hear, to sympathize, to console and to advise. Here the father frowns with his children, here they listen to and story read aloud; here the troubles of the day dwindle and disappear or are softened and lessened by united sympathizing and wedding sorrowings, here tears and tells, jokes are cracked and fresh apples and fragrant oranges lend their flavor and juicy richness to the homely scene, while without the wind blows, the rain falls or the snow flies.

To make this room the real hearthstone, its furnishings should contain elements that appeal to the senses and pour forth the spirit of the whole home in comfort. There should be room, if possible, for favorite chairs and for shelves or bookcases, and room for every one's choice of books and papers, and for the magazines and newspapers, if each has only a chair and footstool, or portion of a drawer or a curtained shelf. Rooms where the studious, the ambitious or the thoughtful can work out their pet projects or keep safely their treasured plans and possessions, ready for the sudden inspiration or the indistinct appeal, which quite as often arises one amid the family chatter as in the solitude of one's own room.

To secure all this will require considerable outlay as well as much unselfish thought on the part of the homemaker. The outlay, however, can usually be modified, adding gradually from time to time as family growth and taste may show them to be desirable. Indeed, the true furnishing of such a room, after a certain point, must be a matter of growth. Given the bare bones of chairs, carpets, tables and curtains, the rounded form and vigorous expression of the sitting room must grow out of the mental and moral life of the family, grow out of that social, intellectual and spiritual food on which the family feeds. Of course furnishing selected with this aim in view will be as varied as families are, for what expresses comfort and gives help and solace to one family would be tiresome, inane or comfortless in others.

Each home writes its own history sooner or later in its furnishings and arrangements, and even studied effects—that elaborated foe of family luxury—cannot prevent the telling of the tale. Year by year slips by, purchase after purchase is made, chapter after chapter is written. What we most desire we lend our circumstances to secure, and therefore the home does express in the long run that we are and what we feel. This being true, let us not be impatient. Let us proceed thoughtfully, unselfishly and carefully, that our home-centered experiences shall prove engineering success or master minds.

The home is for the family and not the world, and there should never be a moment's hesitancy if passers-by cause spoil the furnishing of but one room—a parlor of a sitting room. Let the sitting room come first. It should never, on the other hand, be the receptacle of broken down or useless drawing room furnishings. Good, plain articles, which are yet honorable in their strength and usefulness, can frequently be put into the sitting room when the state of the family finances has allowed something handsomer to be bought for the drawing room.

Too often the sitting room receives but rickety tables, cracked ornaments, spotted upholstery and chairs whose springs are warped out of any comfort-giving proportion they may once have possessed. So in bringing any furniture from the parlor to the sitting room, let the housewife see to it first that it is restored to strength and rendered clean and inviting in all ways. "The best is good enough for my own" should be her watchword. Anything for us and our guests for our callers."—Harper's Bazar.

I do not know a half dozen families in which the members exercise toward each other positive courtesy. I do not mean that I find not people lovable or unkind, but this, that while there is no lack of negative good manners in the family, positive manners are lacking—such manners as are put forth and used without. Ours is plainly a great American fault. It is a fault not chargeable to the oriental races, nor if so, perhaps deeply to the whole European nations. The glory of Japanese home life is tender respect for parents and the utmost regard for the feelings of brothers and sisters. Anything that does not be truly admirable and satisfactory on any other basis needs no argument.

I believe we should insist more on home courtesy. From the earliest years the children should be taught to look with abhorrence on harsh words, or a lack of gentleness. From the earliest years the children should be taught to look with abhorrence on harsh words, or a lack of gentleness. From the earliest years the ones in all common intercourse. Of course I do not argue for the fine flim flam of "my dear" and similar conventionalities. They mean nothing and cover considerable. What I look after is that beauty of childhood and youth which should be and can be cultivated into perfect growth and blossoming.

We have so little of it. The fine faces one sees of ten or twelve are almost all of them bearing marks of ill culture and ill manners, and by twenty or twenty-five they are mainly deficient in every element of beauty. Why shall we have so little glorious manhood and so little glorious womanhood? Is it not because in our homes our ideal is not large and our manners not simple? I understand well that manners may be fraudulent, but they may also carry the spirit and application of kindness and love.—Mary E. Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Girl's Laugh.

Lilian smiled, and such a smile! Dimples deepened in her rosy cheeks, bewitching curves settled about her scarlet lips and mischief sparkled in her brown eyes. Every boy in the room silently voted her charming and envied the one whose sally had set her laughing. "Only her mouth is open," looker grave and slightly shook her head at the girl.

"Why, mamma," Lilian said in astonishment when the visitor had left the door to gether, "I thought you liked me to smile, and that is the reason papa calls me Sunshine. He says that smiles drive away moping and bad temper, just as the sun becomes break up the clouds and dry up the raindrops."

"Yes, dear, but do you remember how one month we longed for rain—how the sun scorched the grass and fruit, and how people suffered for water? And how would you like to have the sun shine all night? The heat of days in excess of our needs are always uncomfortable and often wrong. What was it that amused you so a little while ago?"

"Why, Charlie was telling about Miss French. Her new black wig fell off in school and rolled under the table, and when one of the boys picked it up and handed it to her he said, 'This cloud has a silver lining.'"

"It seems to me that the remark was both pert and cruel, but your laugh made those dimples here think it clever and witty. Every one of them winced that he had said it. Do not use how my poor keen sense of the ridiculous is ruled by your good nature, but it is not a premium on what is wrong."—Youth's Companion.

The Unpopular Woman.

The woman with a brusque manner, whether a social leader or not, is seldom popular—she wins always the caress of life, and she is not to be blamed if much is cruel upon her and pride to one side gentle civilities, sometimes, where this is the result of hard work, necessitated by cruel circumstances, it awakens only pity and a regret that such fine possibilities and she is forgiven by those who know her well. But brusque manners do not draw new friends. The unpopular woman in this country is never popular. Those who know her best wonder how with wealth and all its powers, with everything at her hand to make her a success in society, she and alone so few winning ways, should seek so little to make others happy.

The sharp tongued woman, whose remarks cut and sting, is feared, but not loved. The woman who gives those about her the impression she is laughing at them is not popular, but feared. The woman with no spontaneity, no enthusiasm though highly cultured and prominent in society, is never popular. Some women are born with winning ways.

In a certain neighborhood, where the boys and girls have unusually jolly times, no entertainment was complete without the presence of a certain miss. Others solicited her favor long before the dance. The parents were anxious to know the reason of her great popularity, as she was not nearly so pretty as some others. A boy being asked why she was so liked, stopped a minute, then said, "I'll tell you why; she don't mind when the fun's a-take, and doesn't turn up her nose when we awkward ones ask her to dance."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Teach Children to Drink More.

If you want plump children, or desire to round the figures of scrawny girls and boys, there is a short rule for it. Give them plenty of good drink as well as food. To nourish food must be well ground by the teeth, not washed down. But at intervals of the repast it is grateful to take generous draughts of cold drink. Tempt children to take as much as three cups of drink at each meal. One naturally wants to begin with a hearty draft, another may need an invigorating cup in the middle of the meal, and another if lined at the close. Do not follow these things, but have such tempting variety from time to time that it is based without thought. I am quite aware this is contrary to the general code, but the opinion is framed by wise physical laws. Think it out.

A mother once had breast and drink more than she generally got, and of much better quality. It is obvious that the denunciations for overeating written for the beef and pudding gorged English have been applied to our own nation too far. The sparseness and meagreness of our people have been discussed without coming to the proper conclusion, that they need more to eat. It is the exception among American families which eats too much, and the meager critic who is shocked at the hearty appetites of her neighbors could follow those down to their table.—Sidney Dare in Louisville Courier-Journal.

A well known medical man is writing about nursing says: "It is not absolutely necessary that a sick nurse should be highly educated, but she must possess the qualification of 'common sense'—that is, the knowledge of everyday affairs. She must, however, be able to read writing, and she ought also to have all her five senses in a healthy, active condition—viz., sight, hearing, feeling, smell and taste—sight, that she may be able to read directions or attend to the patient and watch the change of countenance.

"Hearing, that she may catch the faintest whisper or change of breathing. Feeling, that she may detect instantly any change in the heat or dryness or cold of the skin. Smell, to notice at once the least impurity in the atmosphere of the room, or to judge if medicine, and tests, that she may not offer any food to the patient that is not appetizing and wholesome. This is an excellent summary of qualifications, although there are other moral qualifications quite as essential—gentleness, neatness, extreme patience, unselfishness, firmness—in fact, a perfect woman nobly planned" is the ideal nurse."

Are women's feet constructed differently from men's, or is it the fancied protection of skirts which causes their owners, when seated, to place them in such a awkward and ridiculous position? Men, as a rule, either place their feet squarely on the floor or cross them, at varying angles of elevation, while women place theirs, in what, to an observer, is the most uncomfortable way. Among a dozen ladies, seated in a circle recently, only four were beyond criticism in this respect.

One will known Delsarte exponent sat back in her chair, with her feet turned in, unmistakably so. Two sat with one foot on top of the other, to the ground depending on the height of the leather, two more sat with one foot closely coiled around the ankle of the other; the other visible feet were stretched, precisely in front of their owners. Some one should write a few rules on "What Not to Do with One's Feet," and stress them broadcast. It would be an act of kindness to the women who do not conceal theirs.—San Francisco News Letter.

Begin Early to Inculcate Good Habits.

As soon as the babies are old enough to learn anything, teach them to put the playthings in their places. Make them feel ashamed of leaving things for their mother to pick up. It will require patience, far more than to do it yourself and have done with it, but your children will be heedless and careless and forgetful. Do not expect to succeed the first time, nor the hundred and first. But perseverance will conquer in the end; your child will acquire the habit of order and be the better equipped by so much for the battle of life.

Children can be taught to take pride in keeping their little possessions neat and tidy. The mistake we make in their education is in not giving sufficient weight to the fact that constant repetition is necessary to impress firmly upon their minds anything we wish to teach, and that habits are formed by successive daily acts.—Elizabeth Robinson Scovil in Ladies' Home Journal.

Ailing Children.

A word as to the foods of children who are ailing. Just as soon as appetite gets better so as to eat solid food for their cases, they should stop all solid foods and limit the diet to liquids, and preferably to milk. Of course children suffer from starvation during which a rapid restriction of the diet is unnecessary, but it must be borne in mind that of all affections prevalent among the young digestive troubles are the most common; it is a fact, also, that they cause more than 50 per cent. of all the deaths which occur to children under five years of age.

In every case where these derangements exist the diet must be restricted. And in ailments in which the digestive organs manifest such symptoms for a short time cannot possibly do harm, and it may do much good. Therefore, if mothers never do take this rule they will "keep on the safe side." And, while it may be a little severe they will often cut short attacks which would otherwise seriously threaten the lives of their little ones.—Boston Herald.

About Fruit.

It has been said that fruit eaten in the morning is good on, taken at noon is safer, but deferred till night is fatal. The reason for this is that early in the day exercise brings the digestive organs into play. Also, if eaten on a comparatively empty stomach the digestive organs can attend to this alone and not have to "wait" for their share. For this reason it is not well to take when one is fatigued and the digestive organs are in need of rest.

Too acid, too sweet or too watery fruits are the most indigestible. Berries, oranges and grapes are the easiest of digestion, because there are no tough fibers and too excessive amounts of juice. Large, ripe, juicy pears, if cooked, baked or roasted are first on the list; then stewed, then boiled. All fruits are better for having the skins taken off previous to eating.—Homemaker.

Mutton Tallow.

Pure mutton tallow is one of the most useful and inexpensive of medicinal agents. For that it can be had in all localities for a mere song, healing application is indicated its value is beyond compare. Many an obstinate sore or ulcer has been healed perfectly by pouring the tallow, in its simple method. Wash thoroughly, but gently, once or twice a day with warm water and castile soap, dry with a soft cloth and cover with a coating of tallow. This should be spread upon a piece of linen or cotton, the tallow being sufficiently thick to prevent the cloth from adhering to the wounded or diseased surface. The importance of the utmost cleanliness in dealing with all troubles of this nature cannot be too often or too much emphasized.—Good Housekeeping.

A Screen That a Child Can Make.

Screens are now very fashionable articles of furniture, and the same can be made and for conventional styles that no one cares for. Not any clever boy or girl can make one for their own room, but would be a big forever, by using a small wooden clothes horse, such as is used in a nursery, filling in the panels with dado or neutral paper, and pasting down one side pictures or portraits cut from newspapers or magazines; upon the other, colored prints or Christmas cards.—Cor. Homemaker.

How to Make Meat Tender.

Those who have worn down their teeth in masticating old, tough beef will find that carbonate of soda will remedy the evil.

Cut the steaks, the day before using, into slices about two inches thick and rub over them a small quantity of soda. Wash off next morning, cut it into suitable thicknesses and cook. This same process will answer for fowl, leg of mutton and any other meats that are tough. Try this plan and you will have delicious, tender meat.—Detroit Free Press.

How Some Women Get Their Ideas.

In a newspaper clipping place on Nassau street a rubbed young gentlewoman clips and pastes the latest designs in dresses, cloaks, mantles, hairdressing, millinery creations, and, in fact, all feminine fancies, from London magazines. She mails these to fashionable women. And with such a resource on hand to choose from, why wonder that some American women are so versatile in dress?—New York News.

Dickens' Daughter.

Miss Mary Dickens, the novelist's favorite daughter, is a pleasant little specimen of London. She is a woman past middle age, but never has a vivacity of manner that makes her appear much more youthful. She has spent all her life in very many interesting anecdotes of her father, which will furnish very entertaining reading when given to the public.—Exchange.

Among dishes which must be forbidden children are lobsters, crabs, liver, sausages and all salads. Pies and pastry, plum and suet puddings are also unfit for them. Rice and milk, cornstarch, or some other equally light pudding should suffice for dessert.

If tablespoonful of kerosene is put into four quarts of tepid water, and this is used for washing windows and mirrors instead of pure water, there will remain upon the cleaned surface a polish that no amount of friction can give.

Whitman county, Wash., has what is believed to be the smallest woman living west of the Rocky mountains. She resides three miles from Pine City, is thirty-one years old, is twenty nine inches high and weighs exactly 30½ pounds.

Specialty writers are the ones who are making the most money today. Many women are engaged in this work and journals published in our large cities, and are doing creditable work and earning good salaries.

Apropos of the trailing skirt, Marie Bashkirseff wrote in her childish diary that she in much social hubbub has been a good plan for Dante to have had trained dresses as one of the tortures for the Inferno.

A Frenchwoman thus epitomizes the recipe for keeping young: "A smiling woman, with an expression of repose, always appears years younger than her age."

Here is a pointer for the Anglomaniacs. The discomfort of Eve is frequently seen in the streets of Brighton with her baby, Lady Victoria Duff, actually in her arms.

When any recipe includes the juice of one lemon, two tablespoonfuls should be four teaspoonfuls, as both the size and juice of lemons vary.

Was in a Hurry for a Messenger.

"The devil take the old machine!" he roared, as he pulled down the lever for the district messenger call for a third time. "It never works when a man's in a hurry."

Then he pressed up and down the room, pulling the lever in his hand, and saying talking things about the instrument, the company and the boss.

"If it be too late sir!" he exclaimed, as he pulled the lever for the four-a-time "and if it is I'll see the manager about wages. I'll teach 'em to keep their old machines in order if I have to go to the supreme court to do it."

Then he heard a war dance in front of the instrument, and pulled the lever down several times in quick succession.

Suddenly a happy thought struck him and he rushed to the telephone and called up the messenger office.

"Why don't you answer my call?" he demanded.

"Have answered it," came the reply.

"Well, it's about time," he exclaimed "I've been working it for half an hour."

"Have not," was the response. "What is it—a funeral or a wedding?"

"What!"

"Oh, of course it's none of my business but I wondered what you wanted of so many cars. There are eight on the way over now. I'm just starting the ninth."

He rang off and ran to the call box. And for half an hour the messenger who called the indicator from "messenger" to "sack."—Chicago Tribune.

THAT LATEST DECISION.

HISTORY OF THE CASE AND HOW THE CITY HAS BECOME INVOLVED.

Another Decision of the Supreme Court will be Necessary to Save Us From $100,000 Liability Because of the Combine's Stupidity or Cupidity.

The decision in favor of Plainfield in the case brought by Israel Lewis of Jersey City makes opportune a short reference to the circumstances which brought the law suit about. C. K. Moore, prior to the days of the combine, had submitted to the city the most favorable proposition of all received in answer to the city's advertisements for proposals to erect in this city a first-class system of water works. The plans proposed by Mr. Moore was to organize a stock corporation with such men as Samuel Knox, J. Herbert Johnston, Col. Moore's father (the latter as incorporators and directors). The Common Council referred the matter to the Water Committee, of which Mr. H. B. Newhall was chairman, and Messrs. E. K. Erickson and Watson the other members. This committee probably held more meetings and did more work than ever was done before in Plainfield on any similar committee in any one year. The contract was finally agreed upon between this committee and the representatives of this company. It was then printed, and citizens were invited to criticise. Certain criticisms were regarded as suggesting valuable improvements and these were made. At last the contract was approved by the Common Council of 1890 and was duly executed by the late Job Male in behalf of the city and the company at the same time furnished a $50,000 bond with satisfactory sureties for the faithful performance of the contract. Work was then begun under the contract subject to the supervision of the chosen engineer of the city. Rudolph Hering, and was progressing favorably when the mal eity of the present Common Council, at least one member, sought to remove Mr. Hering and put another in his place. They accepted that responsibility at the people headed by Mayor Gilbert in remonstrance against the proposed change. This action of the people of the history is too fresh in the memory of the citizens of Plainfield to need recounting at this time. Suffice it to refer to the fact that Mr. Hering did not go, and the man who headed the remonstrance and acted as spokesman for the people was called to be the people's official head for the next two years. For some reason Mr. Moore's company did not proceed rapidly enough with the work to suit Mr. Hering and on February 4, although $1,000 per month were paid by the company to the city pretty regularly for several months. The city threatened to sue the company and its sureties on the contract. It was at this point that Col. Lewis of Jersey City acquired a writ of certiorari from the Supreme Court. This writ required the city to send to the court the contract with the company and the minutes and resolutions of the Common Council and all matters relating to the Water Company matters. Lewis alleged that the Water Company had been unconstitutional and that the contract with the city was null and void.

The first thus begun was triangular, so to speak. Collins & Corbin were the lawyers for Lewis, Senator Edwards for the Water Company, and the then City Counsel Craig A. Marsh for the city. The city refused to force on the issue at that time, and the court after the writ was granted, but was met by opposition from all sides so far as the city was concerned to further time in which to prepare their briefs. At the next term the city was prepared and ready for the hearing, but this time the Water Company represented to the court that the city had changed its attitude entirely on this case and they wanted more time to make adequate preparations. The court granted the Water Company's request.

The following term, the Water Company owning a 99-yr. franchise, which was dated back to the charter, and was in no way void, having meanwhile purchased the Middlesex Water Company, which is now virtually owned by Mr. Moore including the franchise to his company, and having further completed the line declared null and void, abandoned the fight and left the city to do as it saw fit. Then Mr. Moore went to work with Lewis and his attorneys. Elaborate arguments were submitted on both sides, and the case was argued before Judge Depue already announced in these columns, was the ruling the position taken by the city that the contract is legal, and the act under which the Water Company was incorporated is constitutional and valid in all respects. As the company formed the Moore Company are wealthy men, and the bond given is signed by responsible sureties, the city is now in position to enforce the contract.

No matter the way the decision were to go it would leave the city in a bad fix, for, owing to the delay of the Middlesex combine, it will require all the legal ingenuity of the Corporation Counsel to get out of the muddle the combine have got us into. Their blunders have already cost as many thousands of dollars, and will cost as many more.

Had the city lost, we presume Mr. Moore and his partners would have sued for damages from the city, including the money taken from them, because if the law was unconstitutional the act of the city in granting the franchise would be illegal. The favorable decision, however, would go for protection of the city and put it in a position to demand damages but for the later action of the combine in granting a 99-yr. franchise against the remonstrance of Mayor Gilbert and the people. Mr. Moore will then say to Mr. Low & Co. thus jeopardizing the interests of Mr. Moore's successors and assigns.

Now, unless the Supreme Court declares the franchise to J. M. Low & Co. illegally granted, the city will have to pay $5,000 per year to the Plainfield Water Supply Co., for hydrants, and $6,000 per year to J. M. Low & Co. for the same hydrants, or as many more not needed, and this for a period of twenty years, making $100,000 in all to be paid as a result of combine stupidity in this one matter. Is it any wonder the city is eager to get such a stupid gang out of power where they may do no further mischief. The Tribune has the following in reference to the matter this morning:

The rags the blundering of Plainfield's "Big Six" the city is saddled with contracts with two water works companies for city water. When the "Big Six" assumed the control of the city's affairs from the hands of the Republicans the first thing they did was to bargain for a prospective water supply. The water company then in existence was ignored and the democratic rulers granted another contract to J. M. Low & Co. Previous yesterday the Supreme Court entered a decision which annulled the charter granted into by the city before the "Big Six" rule began. The Democratic rulers then have made the city liable for another entire set of city hydrants to Mr. Low, in spite the warnings of Mayor Gilbert and the protests of the five Republican Councilmen. There was indignation expressed in Plainfield last night when the decision of the Supreme Court was made known. The value of the County's decision in this matter in a political way for the Republicans can hardly be estimated. The Republicans have been fighting the "Big Six" and the vindication at the hands of the court will it is believed, result in a complete overthrow of the Democrats at the municipal election next month.

THIS MORNING'S FIRE.

Just before nine o'clock this morning an alarm of fire was sounded from box No. 18, situated at the corner of Front and Richmond streets. The department responded, but when they reached the fire, which proved to be in the bath room of the residence of Mrs. D. O. Wotherspoon, had been extinguished. The loss is estimated at about seventy-five dollars and is covered by insurance.

When Zephyr Hook and Ladder turned the corner of second street and Park avenue, the macadamized roadbed was covered with mud, causing the truck to slide. The tillerman was unable to control it and it collided with a wagon standing near the curb at the City Hotel. The collision nearly upset the Hook and Ladder, and George Mehl the tillerman, was thrown from the seat on the rear, but fortunately escaped injury. Other firemen also had a narrow escapes from being seriously injured.

The truck was damaged and the wagon with which it collided was wrecked. The horse which was attached to the wagon was knocked down by the force of the collision. The rig belonged to George Streets, a resident of Washingtonville. Chief Doane succeeded in settling the matter with him by paying him six dollars damages.

BOLD BURGLARS.

An Organized Gang Robbing the Farmers at Mt. Bethel.

There appears to be an organized gang of thieves in Mt. Bethel and many of the farmers have suffered from their depredations. They rob hen roosts, and steal almost anything they can lay their hands on. A few nights ago twelve chickens were stolen from one farmer, forty shocks of corn from another, a number of bushels of potatoes from another, and several bushels of corn from still another. In one instance they visited a chicken coop belonging to a poor woman whose husband is in the asylum, and stole all her chickens. The residents of the village are up in arms and are endeavoring to ferret out the thieves.

BITTEN BY A DOG.

Tuesday about noon Irving Taylor aged 3 years, son of William Taylor of Board Brook while playing with his pet dog "Rover" was terribly bitten in the face by the savage animal.

It is thought that the little fellow teased the dog and pulled its hair, when the beast became wild and sprang upon the little fellow, biting him in the face and tearing off some parts of the child's scalp.

Little Irving was cared for by Dr. Fisher, who pronounced his injuries dangerous and advised Mr. Taylor to take his child to the Pasteur Institute at New York to have the wounds cauterized. The dog was shot at once.

Judgment for $200 in Tort.

The case of Chas. T. Vail vs. Wm. J. Nelson, M. D., yesterday occupied the attention of Justice V. W. Nash and a jury from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. The case was brought by the plaintiff Chas. T. Vail for $200 damages against the defendant for the alleged unlawful taking and appropriating to his defendant's use certain personal property belonging to plaintiff. The plaintiff's witnesses swore that a plan and specification was executed, whereby said property had been taken from the barn and premises of plaintiff on Sunday, Oct. 18th. Several Piscataway parties had participated in the affair, and may yet be called upon to answer to criminal charges which may yet be made. The jury were out only two or three minutes when they returned giving the plaintiff a judgment for $200 in full as claimed.

Union County Sunday-School Convention.

The closing session of the twelfth annual convention of the Union County Sunday-school association occurred last evening at the First Presbyterian church. A praise service, which was heartily joined in by all present, preceded the business of the evening. Reports of committees and election of officers followed. Rev. D. H. Martin, of Newark made a very happy address on "The Teacher as an Evangelist," which was replete with anecdote, witticisms, and sound common sense. A collection followed the exercises, and the gathering was dispersed with the benediction.

Fined Fifteen Dollars.

James Garrity was a prisoner in the City Court this morning charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct and indecent exposure. Garrity pleaded guilty to the charge, said that he was a married man and the father of a family and that this was the first time he had ever been arrested. Judge Codington reprimanded him and then gave him the choice of paying a fine of fifteen dollars or of spending ten days in the county jail.

MAX O'RELL'S LECTURE.

"AMERICA AS SEEN THROUGH FRENCH SPECTACLES."

A Casino Audience Convulsed With Laughter Listening to his Funny Reminiscences.—What Queer Creatures Americans are!

Max O'Rell, as he is called—that observant, slightly cynical Frenchman, whose witty way of putting his observations before the public in writings and lectures has given him an international reputation, was in the Casino last evening, under the auspices of the Hillside Tennis Club to lecture on "America as seen through French spectacles."

As might be expected, a large concourse of people greeted him.

Mr. O. P. Melliss introduced the distinguished lecturer, who then entertained the audience for an hour and a half.

Mr. O'Rell spoke with a marked accent, and his gestures—well, he is a Frenchman.

One lady, after the lecture, was overheard to say, "He has two words, puts in the gestures—and you laugh at the joke."

The "typical American," as he described him, was at times a very impertinent fellow. For instance, Mr. O'Rell was on his way to one of the large cities by rail. Before boarding the train he bought a book. When seated in the Pullman car he laid the book by his side. A "typical" sat opposite and entered into conversation. Soon this specimen picked up the book and glanced through it. It apparently pleased him for he took it to the little "smoker" at the end of the car. The journey took six hours, it took the man four of the six to read the book. When he came back and picking it at Mr. O'Rell said, "Have you ever read this?"

"Well, you you do—It's great!"

The mimicry and gestures of the speaker, of course, gave added life and wit to his stories.

Jonathan of Germany, England, "Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan" and "Miss Jonathan" were all humorously portrayed. An occasional rub was given Germany. Even a German would have laughed at these sallies, for

What man would think of standing in the doorway of a crowded horse car, right in the draft and sing in human nature? That's one of Mr. O'Rell's ways.

His talk showed that the humorous side of everything upon which he touched his observant and retaining faculties—and to his original way and marked ability of diverting others. Speed observations the Casino's audience last evening owe a pleasant ninety minutes.

A WESTFIELDER INJURED.

James Sparks Jumped From the 6:38 Train Last Night.

James Sparks, a resident of Westfield, is a commuter between that village and New York. Last evening he boarded the 5:30 train from New York en route for his home. On his way out he fell asleep in the car and was carried past Westfield. As the train was leaving Netherwood, Mr. Sparks discovered his mistake and before he was fully awake he jumped to the platform of the train and jumped off. The train was going at the rate of about thirty miles an hour at the time. Mr. Sparks was thrown violently to the ground and was badly cut about the head and legs. He was then carried to a house about the body. He was assisted to the Netherwood station where he was then temporarily dressed and he took the 7:08 train from the city for his home in Westfield. An attendant at the station says that Mr. Sparks had a narrow escape from death.

FIRST WARD REPUBLICAN PRIMARY.

Mr. Elias H. Bird Nominated for Councilman.—A Big Turnout.

The Republicans of the First Ward held their primary meeting at Republican Headquarters on East Front street last evening. A large number of voters were present and the liveliest interest was manifested in the meeting. Mr. Joseph B. Coward was elected chairman and Mr. Richard Cordell secretary.

Mr. Harry Dunn was then elected as Judge of Election and Messrs. William Addis and Frederick Bird as inspectors.

Nominations were made as follows:

For Councilman—Elias H. Bird.

Constable—Stephen R. Hopper.

Justices of the Peace—Lewis Peterson.

Members of City Executive Committee—Messrs. J. B. Coward, O. L. Jenkins and J. Fred MacDonald.

Delegates to the City Convention—Messrs. Richard Cordell, Wm. Addis, O. L. Jenkins, Frederick Dunn, James McMurray, John Rowland, Joseph B. Coward, Charles W. Lee, E. E. Anthony and G. F. F. Huntsman.

A Lecture by Mr. Smith.

At the Y. M. C. A. rooms last evening "Chemistry of Plants" was the subject of the talk by Mr. Franklin S. Smith, who is the teacher of chemistry in the High School. A singing flame, different colored flames, and nearly colorless flames were shown, and upon bringing them together under water, sugar, phosphorous, chlorate of potash and sulphuric acid, a series of tiny submarine flashes followed.

Four Tramps Convicted.

Peter McCann, Wm. Ryan, Wm. Hennessy and Michael Gill, a quartette of tramps, were arraigned in the city court this morning charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct. McCann pleaded guilty and was sentenced to six days in the county jail. Ryan, Hennessy and Collins pleaded not guilty. After hearing the testimony City Judge Codington adjudged them guilty and sentenced them to ten days each in the county jail.

Bowling Last Night.

The Crescent League bowling team visited Elizabeth last night and defeated a team composed of members of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum of that place by a score of 1579 to 1550. The game was an interesting one and was witnessed by a large number of spectators.

DR. PAUL IMPRISONED.

HE SWORE AT REPORTER CLARKE FOR LIBELING HIM.

He Is Arrested.—Another Warrant Out for Him To-day.—A Seeming Attempt at Persecution of a Respectable Physician.

Tuesday (election day) Dr. Paul, probably feeling the need of it, called at Shaw's drug store for a drink of whiskey.

Dr. Paul suffers with asthma, and had an attack on the occasion referred to. He required a stimulant to get relief from choking when the attack comes on, and requires it quick.

The clerk, probably not considering that the doctor needed the liquor medicinally, and it being late and he ill at otherwise, refused to oblige the physician.

Dr. Paul considered the refusal a reflection on him, and expressed his opinion of the clerk strongly enough to arouse the clerk's anger.

The clerk in his anger struck the doctor in the face. The doctor, being the better man of the two, returned the clerk's blow with interest, causing the latter's nose to bleed, and putting his head in chancery according to accounts when the proprietor, who happened to be absent when the fracas began, returned.

The proprietor was a bigger man than the doctor, weighing 200 lbs., to the doctor's 160, and the clerk's 140. He, however, refrained from taking advantage of his superior physique, and simply ordered the doctor out, considering him responsible for the disturbance.

Now that would probably have ended the matter, but a reporter of another paper was also a correspondent for a New York paper, got hold of the story, and sent it abroad greatly exaggerated, giving the doctor his account a black eye and covering the clerk with court plaster, all of which was absolutely untrue. The doctor probably resented the intended it as a joke.

Naturally the doctor felt deeply hurt, and went to the office of the paper and expressed his opinion of the reporter as for deemed proper. Coffee latter did not strike the doctor as the clerk had done, and let it end at that, but got a policeman who read the doctor into the common jail, just as his name-sake, St. Paul, was cast into jail 2000 years ago. For two hours he languished there in great distress of mind, until Justice Nash came forward with bail, and put him out.

The doctor was bound over to appear this morning to answer to the charge of using profane language. Even that appears to have been done in the heat of passion, while the doctor was justly incensed at having been called by an inconsiderate reporter to public ridicule unjustly for a hasty remark.

The reporter, Mr. Clarke, had Mr. A. L. Force, his employer, managing editor Dominie, and another employe named Cook, were present in the court room to testify. Dr. Paul was present with Counsel, but Mr. Clarke failed to be in attendance and the case was postponed.

The court postponed the case for a week. Dr. Paul asked that it proceed, as he was anxious to get over it, and he did not care to be kept under the strain for a week.

Dr. Paul is a Doctor, in self-protection, will probably bring action for criminal libel. He feels very badly over the matter, and his friend in the News' reporter. "Let him down as easy as you can." We do. Since the above was written Clarke went before Justice Nodyne and swore out another warrant charging Dr. Paul with assault.

Verily, this is much ado about nothing. Most people will consider that the doctor is more abused than anything else in the matter. It doesn't appear that he even succeeded in getting his drink.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Industrial Prospects.

Charles Stewart Smith, in The North American Review, scans from his point of outlook as president of the New York chamber of commerce the industrial and financial situation of his country. He calls our attention to the fact that the commercial panic that was predicted some months ago did not arrive. He attained sway because the business world expected it and got out of debt as rapidly as possible, and, second, because of the enormous crops of all kinds that found ready sale in Europe and brought back commercial confidence. Mr. Smith quotes incidentally from a letter written by a citizen of Kansas, in which the statement is made that a year ago thousands of farms in that state could have been bought outright for a smaller sum than the crops alone raised on them realize this year. But the trouble is that mankind does not seem to learn from experience. Farmers and others ought this year if possible to lay aside a small sum for the hard times and scant crops that may come again next year or any year.

The industries that Mr. Smith mentions in his paper amount to something enormous. Our textile fabric interests are worth not less than $900,000,000, the largest part occupied with cotton manufacture. The cotton corporations, notwithstanding trusted clerks and officers, have had average success, and come up with their usual half yearly dividends. We also draw encouragement from the fact that American sheetings and drills are preferred in the Chinese market to any manufactured in Europe. Mr. Smith says that although labor in this country is 20 per cent. higher than in England, we are still able to put upon the market the low and medium priced cotton goods as cheaply as the British mills can. This is owing to American inventive genius in the field of labor saving machinery. We are, moreover, the largest producers of carpets in the world, and our goods, as before, in the low and medium priced grades, equal anything made in Europe. In the matter of clothing, a suit of common American cassimere will not cost in New York more than 15 per cent. above what the same kind of suit would cost in London.

The woolen industry is depressed, while the iron manufacturers have done well. In iron industries of various kinds there are invested in this country now $450,000,000. Iron manufacturing has increased two and a half times in the last decade and coal mining has increased in proportion.

The only cloud Mr. Smith sees in the financial sky and the only thing that will prevent the reign of splendid commercial prosperity is the question of silver coinage.

A

Real Miracles.

Modern mechanical science can work miracles that do not need any humbooziing of "occultism" to supply a background. They are such miracles as would have caused those who work them to be burned for witches a couple of centuries ago. Even now in some parts of the world—China, for instance—the magicians would be driven out of the country and their plans and lives spoiled.

A railway train on the road between New York and Buffalo recently accomplished one of these modern marvels. It traveled at the rate of an average of 58 1-3 miles an hour. At its best speed this flying train made seventy miles an hour, thus equaling the best time made on the best railways in Europe, those of Great Britain. One famous train in England goes from London to Edinburgh, a distance of 400 miles, at an average speed of not quite fifty-two miles an hour, year in and year out. This is one of the best long runs in Europe. It is a matter of perfect roadbed, good car and engine construction and lavish coal consumption. But it is gratifying to know that we are making such progress in railway speeding in the United States, and we may confidently look forward to the time when all the leading railways of the country will do as well as this.

The other real miracle to which modern mechanical science may point is the fact that the ocean steamer Teutonic has crossed the Atlantic eastward in 5 days, 20 hours and 3 minutes, thus surpassing her own best record by 19 minutes. Really the four day ship does not seem so far off.

Reports come that the Mormons who went to Mexico five years ago, so as to marry all the wives they wanted in peace, are flourishing. They have pleasant homes, fertile farms and all that they want. It appears that Mormons, like Chinese, can always flourish. Brigham Young held the whip over them like a taskmaster and taught them hard work and economy, and these virtues go with them wherever the Mormons go and make the lands blossom.

No sooner does a naval vessel come before the world as the biggest and most dangerous of its kind than it is at once shoved aside to make room for one still greater and more formidable. The largest, swiftest and most powerful cruiser afloat is now believed to be the British vessel Blake, which cost $2,500,000. Her engine force will, it is claimed, reach 20,000 horse power, and she is expected to travel nearly twenty-five miles an hour.

WHITE CAPS CONVICTED.

Parson Dill Gets Even with His Enemies.

POETRY, PAINTING AND PISTOLS.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Nov. 6.—The county court room at Morristown, N. J., was crowded when the men indicted on complaint of Parson Dill, former pastor of the Presbyterian church in Sterling, were brought to trial. In the audience were many fashionably dressed women. The defendants included Herbert Grey Torrey, chief United States assayer of New York city, the latter's son, Clarkson B. Moffatt, who is a justice of the peace in Sterling, and two of Justice Moffatt's sons, as well as half a dozen young men of the village. Judge Francis Child presided, and Senator George T. Werts appeared as leading counsel for the defense. Willard R. Cutler represented the state.

He Read Poetry to the Girls.

The story of Parson Dill's tribulations has been frequently printed in detail. Briefly it is as follows: Two years ago Parson Dill was called to take charge of the Presbyterian church at Sterling. Herbert Gray Torrey, an elder in the church, leased the call. Parson Dill was and is still a bachelor, about twenty-six. He went to board with Miss Catherine Boyd. He used to read poetry to young women in the congregation from the pulpit. The young women though this was novel and delightful and joked it. The young men hated it. Parson Dill became very unpopular with the young men. The parson disagreed with Elder Torrey on church matters and Torrey resigned his office. Out of this grew a Dill and an anti Dill party. The latter was led by Elder Torrey.

It Scandalized the Neighbors.

Then Miss Catherine Boyd gave her house to Parson Dill. She continued to live in the same house, though she had no other boarders. This state of things scandalized the neighborhood. As Leigh Parson Dill's enemies began to torment him. One night while he was reading poetry to willing female listeners, the young men took his horse to a secluded spot and painted the animal red, white and blue, then tied it to a tree and vanished.

On July 4 last a party of young men with blacked faces went to the parson's house, called him many vile names and scared him by firing at him as they were about to leave. The parson then resigned his position.

Parson Dill suspected the defendants in this case and their arrest followed. They retaliated by having Dill arrested, charging him with making false statements about them.

About this time a tall, clerical looking young man appeared on the scene who wanted to preach in Sterling at five dollars a Sunday. He turned out to be a very eloquent preacher. He visited his parishioners a great deal in order to become well acquainted. All this time there was something besides money jangling in his pockets. It was a pair of handcuffs. This eloquent young preacher was a detective whose purpose it was to gather in the White Cap party. He got them.

Miss Boyd on the Stand.

The first witness yesterday was Miss Catherine Boyd. She is a trustee, under forty, and of rather pleasing appearance. She made a good witness for Parson Dill. She and Parson Dill still occupy the house in Sterling.

John Ferris, who made the affidavit on which the detective arrested the gang, was the most important witness. He said that he met Abe Cooper, one of the prisoners, July 4, and Cooper told him they were going to drive Dill out of town that night, and to meet them at Moffat's at 8 o'clock.

"I was on time," he said, "and when I got there I found Cooper, Travis, Abe Cooper, Fred Moffatt, Dick Thomas, Herbert Grey Torrey and Frank Moffatt."

"There was some talk as to what they should do with Mr. Dill. One proposed to blindfold him and carry him off in a wagon. Another proposed tar and feathers. After a while we all went over to Mr. Dill's house."

When Dill came they chased him into the house after telling him he must leave town. Several shots were fired.

Dill tells His Story.

There was a flutter when Parson Dill was placed on the stand. He is about thirty-five years of age and good looking. He said that on the night of July 4 he was prepared to meet an attack. For a quarter of a mile before he reached his home he carried a pair of revolver in his hand.

Reaching the gate, several disguised men rose up before him and he immediately presented his weapon in their faces and remarked, "I am ready for you, gentlemen." He then, considering discretion the better part of valor, cooked into the house. A moment afterward a number of shots were heard.

Six Men Convicted.

Senator Werts said it was only a Fourth of July joke. The prosecution did not ask for any conviction in the case of Herbert Grey Torrey and Clarkson B. Moffatt. The jury brought in a verdict of guilty in the cases of Ford and Frank Moffatt, Anthony Schumacher, Abe Cooper, Clement Kouptze and Richard Thomas. Sentence was deferred.

Rev. Sutherland Fined $500.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—In the United States circuit court Rev. A. T. Sutherland, of Hamilton, Ontario, was convicted of mailing obscene publications through the mails, was called up for sentence. The court stated that inasmuch as the defendant had been prosecuted in the state courts for libel, which suits had cost him over $7,000, the court thought a $500 fine would be sufficient punishment.

An Insult to Bishop Brooks Resented.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—The parishioners of the church of St. John the Evangelist, with whom the Rev. Father A. C. A. Hall was connected, regard the latter's recall as an insult to Bishop Phillips Brooks, and in a communication to the Rev. Mr. Longridge, the superior of the order, they informed him that they could not consent to remain under his administration.

A Cow's Remarkable Adventure.

BIRMINGHAM, Conn., Nov. 6.—Samuel French while out hunting discovered a cow stuck in the mud. She had been in that position for five weeks, and had lived on weeds that flowed down the stream. It required two yoke of oxen to drag her out.

NOT CURED BY THE GOLD CURE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—For nearly a month newspapers all over this country have been reprinting an article written by Colonel John F. Mines, LL.D., for the October number of The North American Review. It was the most authoritative article that had yet appeared regarding Dr. Leslie E. Keeley's bichloride of gold cure for drunkenness. It was written by a man of unusual ability, who frankly confessed that he had been for years subject to attacks of drunkenness and who proclaimed the efficacy of the cure.

He was new born, he said, and all the old passion for drink had gone. He had tested himself in every possible way, but not a drop of intoxicating liquor had passed his lips since a day in April last, when his treatment was beginning.

Colonel Mines was generally accepted as the champion of the Keeley cure. He was so quoted from ocean to ocean, that it is hardly exaggeration to say that the faith of nearly every druggist in the land who hoped to be reclaimed was pinned upon the cure of this man, who had been a drunkard at intervals for twenty years.

Colonel Mines began a prolonged spree ten days ago. He was found drunk in the gutter on Wednesday last, was committed to the workhouse on Blackwell's island and died there yesterday morning of alcoholism.

Mines was taken to Blackwell's island with four other prisoners from the Yorkville prison. He was received by Clerk McCaffrey, who recognized him. McCaffrey got him transferred to the homeopathic hospital on the island.

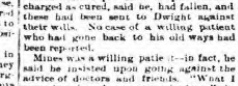
There Dr. R. H. Hutchings saw him at 3 o'clock. "He came up to me," said the doctor, "as soon as I entered the ward. He appeared dazed, and stepped as if suffering from vertigo. I treated him for alcoholism. An hour later he had a convulsion. With applied remedies, and he seemed more comfortable. At 5 o'clock this morning the convulsions seized him again, following each other at about half a minute intervals.

"His condition was undoubtedly due to alcoholism. The convulsion was not necessarily the result of drink, but the condition of his system made him liable to the attack."

"The Keeley cure, as it is generally called, had been widely known even before Mines wrote about it. So strong is the faith in the 'graduates' of Dwight that they have formed the Bichloride of Gold club. Mines said of this in his North American Review article: 'In one year 27,000 men had signed the rolls of membership, and of these only six had come under discipline and had their names stricken from the rolls.'

"Less than 1 per cent. of patients discharged as cured, said he, had fallen, and these had been sent to Dwight against their wills. No case of a willing patient who had gone back to his old ways had been reported.

"Mines as a willing patient—in fact, he said he insisted upon going against the advice of doctors and friends—'What I saw, heard and experienced there,' he writes, 'is the best of all arguments for the treatment of the alcoholic appetite as a disease and for belief in its cure. He believed that drunkenness was a disease. Mines was a well known newspaper man.



WATERPROOF GARMENTS.

Wraps for Rainy Weather Which Are Becoming to Fair Pedestrians.

No lady's wardrobe is complete with out a waterproof wrap of some sort. There is a vast difference in these particular garments, but the best are always the cheapest in the end, and perfectly satisfactory. Shower proof cloaks may be more becoming and prettier of aspect, but when it comes to hard service there is nothing like the veritable mackintosh, especially as the manufacturers can ensure that there is no smell whatever. The water proofs of a season or so ago were made with distinct skirts and capes. Now there are waterproofs with the skirts attached to front pieces, which are slipped over the shoulders, thus diminishing the weight. The capes are ainsie breasted, for if they do open they show only a scant of rest of the same waterproof. Double wrapped capes are also made, showing no buttons and lined with silk. The waterproofed material is often a pretty checked woolen, so that with the silk lining the cloaks can be made to answer the double purpose of a wrap.

GARMENTS FOR WET WEATHER.

Some of the new capes are shaped on the shoulders, and high collars are almost universal. Many of these collars are drawn in to the figure at the back, and some have a couple of plaits, which take away from the appearance of the waist line. The great recommendation of the waterproofed garments of the present day is that they are becoming as well as useful. In the cut are shown two such wraps. One is of dust colored tweed lined with crimson and fashioned with a deep cape and hood. Most of the hoods, by the way, are movable. The second figure represents a stylish mackintosh. It is made of tartan, the plaids of which are skillfully cut and planned.

Waterproof rugs and jewel cases for traveling are made for both ladies and gentlemen, with a series of small pockets capable of holding a great deal. Hats are sold impervious to wet, and are a great boon. Gloves also.

OTTAWA, Nov. 6.—It is officially announced that the Hon J. A. Quimet, M. P., ex-speaker of the house of commons, has accepted a position in the cabinet. It has not yet been decided what portfolio Quimet will assume.

HE ROBBED THE CORPSE

The Ghoulish Deed of General Campo Serrano.

RIFLED A DEAD WOMAN'S DRESS.

The Miscreant Then Comforted Her Husband, Wept at the Funeral and Pawned the Jewelry—He Has Now Confessed His Guilt to the New York Police.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—El Senor Don Julio Campo Serrano, brigadier general in the regular army of the South American republic of Colombia, and nephew of ex-Vice President Jose M. Campo Serrano, is a prisoner at police headquarters in this city, the self confessed perpetrator of one of the meanest crimes of which man can be guilty. This South American don, of high position, of excellent family and of more than usual culture and education, has confessed to Inspector Byrnes that as Mrs. Charles H. Traitteur lay dead in her bedroom, 115 East Twenty-eighth street, this city, last Thursday, he tore open the bosom of her dress and stole a large amount of money, some railway bonds and valuable papers. Incidentally he robbed a bureau drawer of diamonds, jewelry and valuable papers.

Then Consoled with the Husband.

To put a characteristic touch to his crime, this polished officer and gentleman consoled with the bereaved husband almost with tears in his eyes, and then carried off the booty in a satchel and peddled it around to pawnshops. He returned afterward and made bold to attend the funeral. He was grieved as often, however, and now his proud relatives will know of his crime.

Imposed Upon General Howard.

He came to this country about a year ago and boarded for a time with Mrs. Boies at 72 North Grove street, East Orange. He, by means of false letters and statements, imposed upon a general of the United States army well known in this city, and the latter gave him a note of introduction to Mr. Traitteur as a South American general and ex-commissioner from Colombia to the World's fair.

This well known soldier is supposed to have been General O. O. Howard, now stationed at Governor Island, who ranks second in the army. The general was evidently misled by Campo, as the Colombian commissioners have not yet been appointed.

How the Robbery Was Done.

On the morning of Oct. 29 Mrs. Traitteur went up stairs after breakfast to put her room in order. Campo was in the next room asleep, it is supposed. Mrs. Traitteur sent the servant girl down stairs, but when she was half way down the girl heard a heavy noise calling her. She rushed back and found Mrs. Traitteur lying on the bed gasping for breath. She called Campo, who ran for a physician.

Before the latter could arrive the patient died, and after waiting while Campo called a messenger boy to send to Mr. Traitteur the doctor left. Then Campo went into the room with the dead lady, and the cook and servant girl followed him. "You two go into my room and make up my bed," he said. The girls obeyed. While they were gone Campo took from the body a small bag containing money and bonds which Mrs. Traitteur always wore in the bosom of her dress. He also went to the bureau, ransacked the top drawer and took a large quantity of jewelry. He then went back in his own room.

The Ghoulish Robber's Hypocrasy.

The ghoulish robber next wrote a note to Mr. Traitteur, saying that Mrs. Traitteur was very ill. Mr. Traitteur hastened home and found his wife dead.

Campo was there with words of friendly sympathy on his lips. In all of Traitteur's manly grief in the few days that followed Campo was the sympathizer and counselor. He even his expressions of sympathy and almost tearful sorrow he crept out of the house with a bagful of stolen jewelry and then walked it about from one pawnbroker to another.

Mrs. Traitteur was buried in Brooklyn on Sunday. Campo was there as one of the sorrowing friends, and in his pocket was some of the money that he had taken from the dead woman's bosom.

When the undertaker's woman went to prepare Mrs. Traitteur's body for burial, Mr. Traitteur asked a lady who was a close friend of Mrs. Traitteur to go into the room with her, as he knew that his wife always carried from $300 to $700. Mr. Traitteur was then informed that there was no money on Mrs. Traitteur's body. He knew then that she had been robbed. He suspected Campo and detectives arrested the ghoul.

At police headquarters early last evening Campo made a full confession. He said that, in addition to the diamonds, jewelry and money, he had taken two certificates of deposit of $1,000 each on the Park bank; deeds to two pieces of mining property in Montana, and some Louisville and Nashville railway bonds. He promised to tell where these articles could be found.

KILLED AND CREMATED.

Young Mrs. Foote Says Her Lover Murdered Her Aged Husband.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 6.—This neighborhood is greatly excited over the brutal murder of one of its oldest citizens. On Saturday morning last the barn of Richard Foote, in the town of Windsor, was destroyed by fire. The following morning the charred remains of Foote were found in the ruins. Foote was an old man and his wife is a young woman. The neighbors became suspicious and an investigation was instituted.

Mrs. Foote has confessed that her husband left the house about 9 o'clock Friday morning and went toward the barn. A few minutes later John Furman, a former lover of Mrs. Foote's, came into the house with blood on his hands and clothes and told her he had killed Foote with a club. She went to the barn with Furman and saw Foote lying dead in a manger in the barn. Early Saturday morning Furman procured some kerosene and after mistreating the victim's clothing with it, set the barn on fire. Mrs. Foote and Furman have been locked up.

FONSECA NOW DICTATOR

Brazil's President Ready to Maintain Order.

BACKED BY THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Rio Janeiro Declared to Be in a State of Siege for Two Months—Fonseca Says He Will Govern According to the New Republic's Constitution.

RIO JANEIRO, Brazil, via GALVESTON, Nov. 6.—President Deodoro de Fonseca has been proclaimed dictator. The troops are now guarding all the streets and public buildings. A strict censorship of all telegraphic messages has been established, and details of the state of affairs are not allowed to pass.

The federal capital, Rio Janeiro, and the town of Nietheroy, or Praia Grande, five miles east of the capital, have been declared to be in a state of siege for two months.

Fonseca, Defends Himself.

The president has been provoked to take these steps by the proceedings of congress and by the efforts of the promoters of a restoration to overturn republican institutions.

Fonseca, in a manifesto issued to the nation, declares himself to have been fully justified in the steps he has taken to save the army and navy support the government, and public tranquillity, according to the official announcement, is perfect throughout the states.

Ready to Keep Order.

In conclusion, it is said that the government is ready to maintain order by every means that the constitution will be respected and that the government will also be answerable for all national engagements. Fonseca, in his manifesto, says that he will govern in accordance with the constitution. The National Guard has been mobilized in the province of Rio Grande.

An Outbreak Feared.

The troops are in their quarters. An outbreak is feared, owing to the influence of the opposition. Commercial interests in Rio are not affected.

EACH IS CHILI'S PRESIDENT.

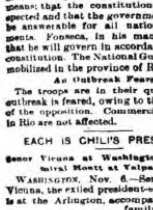
WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Senor Claudio Vicuna, the exiled president-elect of Chili, is at the Arlington, accompanied by his family and by Balmaceda's minister to Europe, who has been in the city for two days, but his identity was not known. He has received no recognition as the visiting ecclesiastic of a foreign country and has seen neither the president nor Secretary Blaine. Neither has the Chilian legation extended any recognition.



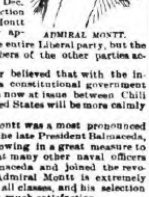
SENOR VICUNA.

It is understood that he regards the newly formed government as unstable and that he is looking for a restoration of the old regime, which would establish him as president, to which office he was elected to succeed Balmaceda, but was never inaugurated. He probably has hopes that should the new government prevent the United States to war he might have his rights acknowledged and yet be president of Chili.

The Vicuna entire party will sail from New York for Europe on Saturday. Mr. Vicuna declined to say anything concerning the trouble growing out of the killing and wounding of the sailors from the United States steamer Baltimore, but expressed the hope that it would be satisfactorily settled.

Admiral Montt Elected.

VALPARAISO, Chili, Nov. 6.—The Liberal victors met in caucus yesterday and nominated for president of Chili for the ensuing five years Admiral Jorge Montt. The nomination is equivalent to an election. The ceremonies in connection with the inauguration of the president elect will be held at Santiago on Dec. 18. The selection of Admiral Montt is not only approved by the entire Liberal party, but the leading members of the other parties acquiesce in it.



ADMIRAL MONTT.

It is further believed that with the institution of a constitutional government the questions now at issue between Chili and the United States will be more calmly discussed.

Admiral Montt was a most pronounced opponent of the late President Balmaceda, and it was owing in a great measure to his action that many other naval officers deserted Balmaceda and joined the revolutionists. Admiral Montt is extremely popular with all classes, and his selection is hailed with much satisfaction.

They Don't Like Egan.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—Senor Don Eduardo Matte, a member of the Chilian congress, is a letter from Santiago, dated Oct. 8, to a friend in this city, says: "The opinions views the United States minister, Egan, with marked distrust, and anathematize his interference in the head by Chilians of both parties—the Congressionalists because of Minister Egan's favoritism and partiality to Balmaceda's cause, and the Balmacedists because he ill advised Balmaceda and buoyed him up with false hopes of victory, thus prolonging the strife. He will be served the same way as Argentine's representative, by having his recall demanded."

At War on the Union Question.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—Another break between the railroad coal operators and miners has occurred, and about 1,000 of the miners have refused to return to work because of the operators refusing to recognize the miners' union. The miners say that their organization will be recognized or another general strike will be ordered.

Robbed a Bank of $6,000.

CALEDONIA, Minn., Nov. 6.—The Bank of Caledonia was robbed by burglars, who blew a fine burglar proof safe to pieces. About $6,000 in cash was secured. The burglars next stole a fine team of horses and a carriage belonging to Asa Dapprague, the head of the bank, and fled toward Le Sueur. Sheriff Dewey is in pursuit.

John B. Ransley has been adjudged in sane at Cincinnati and a guardian appointed against the protest of his wife.

R. E. Dowell, of Chicago, and L. L. Osborne, of Garnett, Kan., president and secretary of the Cherokee township and colony, have been arrested at the Ponca agency, charged with obtaining money under false pretenses.

Dr. Mott Smith, of Hawaii, will represent the government at Washington until a duly accredited minister is appointed.

The officers of the Golden Seal Endowment order have agreed to pay back 60 per cent. of the money taken from the certificate holders and to wind up the affairs of the order.

THE CONDUCTOR KILLED.

READING, Pa., Nov. 6.—Two cars on the Mount Penn gravity road got beyond the control of the conductor and brakeman last evening and jumped the track near the station in the Somerstech. Irvin Houck, the conductor, was instantly killed by the collision of the car with a huge rock. Anthony C. Keeley, the brakeman, was fatally crushed. Keeley assisted in building the road and came here from Kentucky three years ago. Miss Mary Beck, of 602 Spring Garden street, Philadelphia, was hurled upon the head and body, but her injuries are not regarded as fatal. Frank Klemmer, her companion also from Philadelphia, sustained a fractured skull and has hardly recover. T. W. Ganter, of this city, was cut about the head and body.

The failure of the employes to hold the car, it is said, was caused by a bad rail and wet leaves which became wedged between the brake liners and wheels. The injured were taken to the Reading hospital. George Johnson, of this city, a passenger jumped from one of the cars just previous to the crash and escaped injury. No others were injured. Mr. Klemmer and Miss Beck were to have been married in a few days. They were making a pleasure trip to Reading at the time of the accident.

IS IT CHICAGO, INDIANA?

A Rumor That the Hoosier State May Get the World's Fair.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 6.—The Indiana and Ohio boundary line question is assuming startling aspects. It is rumored that a move is made will probably establish the fact that the true Ohio line begins twelve miles west of the present boundary line, making a strip of Indiana 200 miles long and of an average width of six miles to which the state of Ohio lays claim.

Should this claim be enforced, Indiana on the same ground would have cause of action against Illinois. If Indiana loses on the east, it would by the same ruling is entitled to a slice of Illinois, and there would give the Hoosiers Chicago and the World's fair.

Gilbert Pleads for Peace.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 6.—Lyman A. Gilbert addressed the senate for four and a half hours in behalf of State Treasurer Boyer. His argument was almost exclusively confined to the evidence. Attorney General Hensel will make the concluding argument in the case. He will first meet the argument made by the counsel for the defense, that the senate has no jurisdiction, and will then review the evidence. At the conclusion of his plea the senate will adjourn until next week.

A Big Brewery Lockout Probable.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—The Chronicle says there will probably be a lockout of brewers affecting 4,000 men in a short time. The plan is to discharge all union men and replace them with non-union workers. Ten of the largest breweries on the coast are controlled by an English syndicate which has combined with out side breweries to reduce wages.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS.

The New York Legislature Still Republican on a Joint Ballot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—There is every prospect of the fiercest kind of a fight breaking out between the Republicans and Democrats for the control of the state legislature. Both sides claim a majority in each house. Each side accuses the other of attempting to seize that control. Agents of the leaders are now at work in the counties where the election of senators and assemblymen are in dispute. Democrats say that they will have a majority of four in the senate and six in the assembly, or ten on joint ballot. Republicans say they will have four majority in the senate and four in the assembly, or eight majority on joint ballot.

Both sides claim J. T. Edwards, the Independent who defeated C. P. Vedder in the Thirty-second Senatorial district. Democrats say they have assurances that he will act with them, and the Republicans say that he has been a life long Republican and is sure to vote for all their political measures. Three senatorial districts are in dispute, the Fifteenth, Sixteenth and Eighteenth. The Fifteenth is composed of Putnam, Dutchess and Columbia counties. Gilbert A. Deane, of Columbia county, twice elected to the senate, is the Republican candidate, and Edward B. Osborne, of Dutchess, who was an assemblyman last year, is the Democratic candidate.

The Democrats claim no positive result, but they have defeated Gilbert Deane that, they are guarding the court house where the returns are deposited. They claim that the Democratic plurality is fourteen votes. The official count will be required to settle this.

Mr. Edwards, who defeated Vedder, can be counted as a Republican. Defining his position in a dispatch to The Tribune he said that he could be classified as an Independent Republican.

The Democrats had figured up to yesterday that Michael F. Collins had been elected in the Rensselaer-Washington district. His opponent, Reuben H. Berry, has a plurality of something like 700 votes. Mr. Derby was at the Fifth Avenue hotel last evening and appeared satisfied that he was elected.

The official returns give Harvey J. Donaldson, Republican, a plurality over his Democratic opponent, Mr. Hoyt. Donaldson has 852 plurality in Fulton and 616 in Saratoga. To offset this Mr. Hoyt has a plurality of only 502 in Schenectady and 98 in Montgomery. Hamilton county, with two Republican towns to hear from, gives Hoyt 258 plurality. It seems, therefore, as though Mr. Donaldson would have a plurality of about 300.

It would seem, therefore, that the Republicans have sixteen senators whose title will be undisputed. Counting Dr. Edwards they would have seventeen. If Deane is elected they will have eighteen. In this event there would be but fourteen Democrats in the upper house. The official canvass yesterday showed that Dr. George Beaks, the Democratic candidate for Assembly had been elected by one majority. This would indicate that the assembly was a tie, each party having 64 votes.

Governor Hill Rejoices.

ALBANY, Nov. 6.—Albany's representative Democratic organization, the Buffalos, celebrated the big victory by serenading Governor Hill last night. Governor Hill said: "The magnificent returns from the rural districts show that the silly cry of 'the Tammany tiger' was without effect. It was an issue between the party fight upon the issues raised between the Democratic and Republican parties, and the people decided in our favor. I believe that we have fairly secured a majority of fifteen in the legislature. If our victory shall be complete, the people will have a just representation in the senate and assembly. We shall have a constitutional convention, an apportionment, congressional reapportionment, and a much needed revision of the excise laws." The governor predicted Democratic success in 1892.

Ex-Governor Waller's Views.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 6.—It is the impression among New Haven Democrats that the result of Tuesday's election points unmistakably to Grover Cleveland as the party's candidate for president. In this opinion ex-Governor Waller coincided. He said that the result in New York had fixed the party's choice, while the result in Ohio had fixed the issue—the tariff.

While he regretted that Campbell had not won in Ohio, he still found some comfort in the result. If McKinley had been defeated the Republicans would hedge on the tariff issue, and thus weaken the Democratic position on that question.

A Story About Hiscock and Fassett.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 6.—The Palladium has received information from a friend from what it terms a source of undeniable authority to the effect that President Harrison has offered Frank Hiscock, United States senator from New York, the portfolio of secretary of war, to succeed Redfield Proctor, of Vermont, who enters the United States senate, and that J. Sloat Fassett is to succeed Mr. Hiscock in the senate.

The Pennsylvania Figures.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Complete figures from every county in the state show a plurality of 16,835 for Gregg, Rep., for auditor general, and 58,764 plurality for Morrison, Rep., for state treasurer. While Morrison's plurality is over 3,000 less than that of Gregg, he carried every county that gave a majority to the head of the ticket, with the exception of Erie county.

The Nebraska Returns.

OMAHA, Nov. 6.—Nebraska returns are slow coming in. Post, Rep., for supreme judge has 6,000 majority, with thirty-eight hereto fore strong Independent counties to be heard from.

The Latest from Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Unofficial figures from the whole state make Russell's plurality 5,898. Russell last year had a plurality of 9,053.

Died That He Might Sleep.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Margaret Coughlan has lived at 26 Prince street, and for a year had been a helpless invalid. Her husband could get no rest at night after returning from his work. This affected his health, and his wife, after vainly praying for death, committed suicide to end his vigil.

Lynched the Colored Porter.

VICKSBURG, Miss., Nov. 6.—A band of twenty-five masked men boarded a train at Lake, Miss., and took Bob Wallace, a colored sleeping car porter, from the train and lynched him. On his previous trip Wallace assaulted Station Agent Gilmore at Lake.

Mr. Forsythe's Daughter Weds.

FORT RILEY, Kan., Nov. 6.—Last evening Colonel Daniel Keche, U. S. A., and Miss Bessie Forsythe, daughter of General Forsythe, of Wounded Knee fame, were married at the post.

Messrs. Carney Bros. have been repairing my lawn mowers for a number of years past. When returned they are as good as when new. WM. MADDEN, head gardener for J. T. Cha-ese

Messrs. Carney Bros. have sharpened and repaired our lawn mowers to our entire satisfaction. WM. MCCLARY,

Head gardener for J. T. Johnson.

My experience has shown that Messrs. Carney Bros. have no superiors in sharpening and repairing lawn mowers.

ERNEST LOUIS CONRAD,

Head gardener for ex-Mayor Cooley.

There is no need to send your mower to any factory while Carney Bros. do the repairing. They understand the mower.

HENRY HESS, Landscape gardener.

Messrs. Carney Bros. have for several years repaired and sharpened my mowers always to my entire satisfaction.

THOMAS CLARK, Landscape gardener

They have had good job of our mower as any one could wish. PATRICK KELLY,

Head gardener for Mr. Lawrence Myers.

The above are but a few of the pleasant words we get for our efforts to please our friends who have entrusted their mowers to our care, and it shall be our endeavor to merit and every mower home so sent right and perfect as can be. Believing we can satisfy the most particular owner of a lawn, as far as sharpening and repairing goes, we remain the public's obedient servants,

QUESTIONING.

If there be a doubt in your heart to-day
That somehow has shadow across to me,
If you cannot look in my eyes and say,
"My trust is perfect and full and free,"
For the sake of today that would work us woe,
I pray you pity and tell me so.

When you look into my eyes and kiss my face,
And hold me close to your throbbing heart,
Is there ever in it a hint or place
That tells you we could in the future part?
Then a doubt, as false as a shadow, banish.
Suppose a parting that was not banished?

Dear love, search so deep in your heart, I pray,
That its dimmest corner shall come to light.
Then look me straight in the eyes and say
The truth, as truth seems just and right.
If your love can change—ah, love does I know—
I pray you pity and tell me so.

—C. Marion Manville.

MEAN JOHNSON'S MULE.

"Whar's yo' gwine?"
"Who, me? I'se gwine t' town."
"No! Sho?"
"Yaas, I is."
"Better luk out fur dat 'ere mule!"
"Why?"
"'Kase he favor Mean Johnson's mule too much t' suit me."
"Hyah, hyah, hyah! Yo' allus was fon' o' foolin, Mister Rambo. How's de family?"
"I'se yate, t'ank yo', Mis' Brown. How's all yo' folks?"
"Gittin' 'long purty smart, t'ank yo, Mister Rambo. Well, good day t' yo. I gotter ha mosyin' on."
"Good day to yo', Miss Brown. 'Member me t' yo' fambly."
"I will, t'ank you, Mr. Rambo."
The old woman drove on, and Uncle Rambo leaned back to smoke his pipe in the stillness of the August noon.
But the children had been lurking behind the old man's cabin during his conversation with his neighbor. They had heard his allusion to Mean Johnson's mule. And the rushed upon him in a body with the demand that he relate to them the story of Mean Johnson's mule.
"What story?" replied the old man, "The story about the mule," chorused the children.
"But dey ain't no story," said Uncle Rambo.
The children made no reply. Sallie and Tom began vigorously to pinch the aged negro's arms while little Rufus climbed upon his knee and pounded him in the chest.
Rambo Rambo bore the punishment for a minute or two. Then he cried for mercy. The children having gained their point, became wonderfully quiet. Uncle Sambo settled his pipe, lighted the fresh tobacco and began:
"'Bout fawty year ago, fo' de new co'te house was built, dey was a man named Johnson who lived 'bout two el'arin' abuv Cunnel's place strip. His right name was George Washington Francis Marion Christopher Columbus Johnson, but he was mostly dat ev'body done call him "suffin," but Mean Johnson. He was de meanest man en Robinson county. He de Lawd 'ud a tib him all de t'ouzen on de Blue Bellow Judruk — 'case he warn't all sawded 'n sawed 'n plied.
"En de Lawd done punish him fur his meanness. Ev'y mule wot Mean Johnson bought done die on his han's fo' de week was out, so't arter a while he done stop buyin' mules, an' hed t' pen' on a yoke ob oxen to do de hawlin'.
"One day, arter he las' mule done died, Mean Johnson went t' town wif a load o' turnips. He had t' go mighty slow, kase de oxen wuz so pore 'cause o' not gittin' nuff t' eat dat dey 'ud jes' crawl 'long'n no more. Jes 'z he wus gwine froo de piney woods on de oder side o San' Bar, he seen somebody callin' he name.
"'Johnson! Hey, Johnson! Mis-ter Johnson!'
"He stopped de cyart 'n lukked 'roun', but he didn't see nobuddy. Den de voice come ergin:
"'Johnson! Mister Johnson!'
"Mean Johnson lukked 'roun' ergin, but still he didn't see nobuddy. Den, kes's he wus 'bout t' dribe on, he seen a mule come gallopin' 'roun' a ben' en de road.
"'Mister Johnson?' says de mule, mighty perlite.
"'Dat's me,' says Mean Johnson.
"'I'se b'en lukkin' fur ye',' says de mule.
"'I see yo' is,' says Mean Johnson. "'I'se b'en lukkin' fur yo' all ober de State,' says de mule.
"'Wot yo' want wif me?' says Mean Johnson.
"'I hearn 'z how yo' wan'ned a mule,' says de mule.
"'So I duz,' says Mean Johnson.
"'How'd I do?' says de mule.
"'How much duz yo' eat?' says Mean Johnson.
"'Fo' bushels ob oats a day,' says de mule.
"'Yo' wud'n do fur me,' says Mean Johnson.
"'Yes, I wud,' says de mule.
"'How wud yo?' says Mean Johnson.
"''Kase of yo' hires me I'll do all de wuk so'z yo' kin sell yo' oxen 'n do nuffin yo'se'f all day,' says de mule.
"'Kin yo'? says Mean Johnson.
"'Yes,' says de mule.
"'I'll hire yo',' says Mean Johnson.
"'Fo' bushels ob oats a day,' says de mule.
"'All right,' says Mean Johnson.
"So Mean Johnson done hire de mule 'n sole de oxen 'n do nuffin all day but lay 'roun' de house. Folks wud cum by'n see Mean Johnson layin' 'roun' doin' guffin' 'n dey'd say:
"'Better luk out, Mean Johnson! Yo' crap'll done spile ef yo' don't ten' t'em.'
"But Mean Johnson 'ud laugh 'n keepon doin' nuffin', 'n bimeby de folks 'ud get tired o' demonstratin' wif him 'n go off. En de meantime de mule 'ud get up en de middle ob de night 'n ten' t' de sraps 'n do all de oder wuk.
"Ev'ything done go off all right fur de fust year. Mean Johnson nebber did no wuk, but he craps wuz allus fine 'n de house was allus kep' neat 'n a pin.
"But en de beginnin' ob de secon' year, Mean Johnson c'mence t' scheme how he cud cheat de mule. He wus gittin' rich mighty fas', but ef he cud sabe a couple o' bushels ob oats ev'y day he'd git rich all de quicker. So he done fill de bushel measure wot he measure out de mule oats wif so't hit 'ud measure on'y half a bushel stid ob a bushel. De mule discivered de reception de fust day, but he didn't say nuffin'.
"So de time pass by tell hit come t' de end ob de secon' year. Den one Sunday Mean Johnson druv de mule into town, fur Mean Johnson allus went t' church. He hitch de mule t' a bran new wagon, an' he done put on a new suit ob store clo'es. He bed a beaver hat an' a new pair o' rawhide boots, n' he ca'led his coat on he arm so's folks cud see his new red galluses. En t' top hit all off he ca'led a big red umbreller wif a green glass han'le. Mean Johnson done say'z how he gwine be de stylishes' man en de county dat day.
"W'en de service begin, Mean Johnson walk up de aisle wif he big umbreller tucked unner his arm, lukkin like he own de hull State o' Georgy. De congr'gation tunned 'roun' n' luk at him as he come up de aisle, but he wuz too proud t' notice anybuddy. He jes' sot down en de pew 'n luk at de ceilin' all de time.
"Arter de sermon de pastor 'n de congr'gation begin t' pray dat all de sinners en de chu'ch 'ud git religion on de spot. Dey prayed 'n prayed. Den Mean Johnson jumped up 'n yelled:
"'I'se got religion! I'se got religion!'
"De pastor 'n congr'gation jumped up 'n hugged 'emselves 'n shouted:
"'Glory t' de Lamb! Glory! Glory!'
"An' Mean Johnson yelled:
"'I'se got religion! Glory t' de Lamb! I'se got religion! Glory! Glory!'
"An' de pastor 'n de congr'gation 'n Mean Johnson jumped up 'n shouted 'n yelled, 'n while dey wuz all jumpin' 'n shoutin' 'n yellin', de door opened 'n dere en de doorway stood
wif de false bushel measure in his han'.
"De pastor'n de congr'gation dropped t'deir seats, but Mean Johnson jes' stood dere speechless, lukkin' at de mule sayin' nuffin'.
"'I'se sorry t' 'sturb de meetin',' says de mule, 'but I'se got a little business to ransack wif Mister Johnson.'
"Den de mule tu'n t' Mean Johnson 'n says:
"'Mister Johnson.'
"'Sir?' says Mean Johnson.
"'Whar's dis I seen in my han'?'
"'It's a bushel measure,' says Mean Johnson.
"'How much'll it hol'?' says de mule.
"'A bushel,' says Mean Johnson.
"'No, it won't,' says de mule.
"'Mos' sholy it do,' says Mean Johnson.
"'How much'll it hol'?' says de mule.
"'A bushel,' says Mean Johnson.
"'No, it won't,' says de mule.
"'Ef it don't hol' a bushel, what does it hol'?' says Mean Johnson.
"'Nuffin,' says de mule.
"'Nuffin?' says Mean Johnson.
"'Yaas, nuffin,' says de mule.
"'Now, Mister Johnson,' says de mule, 'be keerful. How much'll it hol'?'
"Mean Johnson lukked at de mule. Den he lukked at de flo'. Den he lukked at de mule ergin.
"'Once mo',' says de mule, 'how much'll it hol'?'
"'Half a bushel,' says mean Johnson.
"'Aha!' says de mule.
"Den de mule dun tu'n t' de pastor 'n congr'gation 'n says:
"'Ef all hearn how Mister Johnson done 'knowledge dat de bushel measure on'y hol' half a bushel. He done cheat me outen two bushels ob oats a day fur a hull year. Dat makes seben hun'red and thurty bushels. An' fur dat Mr. Johnson is gwinter roas' en de bad place fur seben hun'ned 'n thutty thousan' years. Dat's wot he gits fur meanness.
"Den de mule's 'pearance c'mence t' change all ob a sudden. His tail growed longer, an' a red-hot sticker 'peared an de end ob it. His legs tuk a human shape, 'cep'n dey wuz a hoof on one ob 'em 'stid of a foot. His front legs change t' arms, wif long claws on de fingers. His eyes begin t' shoot fire an' two long horns come out on he forehead.
"Den ev'ybuddy saw twuz de ol' boy hisself.
"De pastor 'n de congr'gation c'mence t' pray 'n call deyse'fs misable sinnahs. De mule, er de ol' boy, lukked at 'em 'n laughed, 'n say:
"'Needn't git skeered brudrin. Yo' tu'n ain't come yit. Ise gwine be busy wif Mister Johnson now.'
"Den de ol' boy tun t' t' Mean Johnson 'n say:
"'Mister Johnson, is yo' ready?'
"Mean Johnson didn't say nuffin' but groan' 'n groan' 'n t'ar he hair.
"'Mister Johnson,' says de mule ergin, 'is yo' ready?'
"Mean Johnson try t' pray, but he cudn', kase he wuz too mean to' l'arn how wen he wuz a boy, les' he own de w'ar out he tongue. All he cud do wuz t' t'ar he hair 'n say:
"'Oh, Mister Satan, spar' me!'
"But de ol' boy say:
"'Hit's too late, Mister Johnson. All de prayin' en de wori' wudn' put dem seben hun'ned 'n thutty bushels ob oats back en my stummick. Hit's too late. Yo' gwine git.'

A Cute Remark.

A well known Alexander street resident recently grew suspicious of the honesty of his iceman and, borrowing scales, weighed the daily supply for several mornings. His little seven-year-old daughter watched the operation with interest and when her new baby brother was taken down to be weighed a few days later she startled the nurse by exclaiming: "There, Pepsee Dod's been cheating on the baby."—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

Good Health

THE TONGUE AS A RESPIRATOR.

One Plan to Follow When Facing a Cold East Wind or Breathing the Night Air.

A writer in The Lancet says: "It is not generally known that nature has provided each of us with the best respirator always at hand in the tongue. For years I have personally relied on this alone, and have recommended this proceeding to many patients. When facing a cold east wind or breathing quickly the night air I never quite close my mouth, but purposely keep the lips a trifle parted and at the same time curl up my tongue toward the roof of my mouth until the tip reaches as far back as the soft palate, and I gently press the arched under surface of the tongue in some degree against the hard palate (a little practice soon makes it easy to do). The cold air then, as it enters the mouth, strikes against the under surface of the tongue as well as the floor and sides of the mouth, and is made to pass in a somewhat circuitous manner between the sides of the tongue and the buccal mucus membrane of the pharynx, being thereby warmed in the course. By this means time is reaches the larynx it is nicely rid of chill and does not excite cough and catarrh. At the same time a certain quantity of air is forced through the nasal passages to the chest, and it is obvious that a larger quantity of cold air can be effectually warmed by this method of proceeding than by relying on either the nose or mouth alone. That the large blood supply of the tongue renders this organ an excellent air warmer must be obvious to all."

Treatment of Tender Feet.

Tender feet are very commonly complained of. Harper's Bazar recommends the following treatment: "The first consideration for this difficulty is absolute cleanliness. Friction, what is called the 'Roman bath'—elbow-grease rubbing, cannot be had thoroughly into every joint—a quick rub over with alcohol, to some cases a cold spray at bedtime, all are useful; while, should the difficulty seem serious and chronic, the best relief is afforded by wearing firm cotton (not silk) stockings, and shoes or boots made for the comfort and support of the feet. Cotton stockings are the best for all these cases. Where cold water agrees with the system an excellent method of strengthening the feet is to hold it in a basin, and, dipping a towel into the cold water, to squeeze it from a height of three or four inches above onto the feet, rubbing afterward with unusual force and energy. One must be borne in mind that to some constitutions the application of cold water on the feet induces a rush of blood to the head. Cold feet, accompanied with flat feet and around the ankles at night, we may mention in passing, frequently act as a 'sleep bug' (guaranteed to well-known Cockney ears), from unusual worry suffered greatly with insomnia, but to be cured in by this means, while the application referred to strengthens his feet. Some constitutions do not agree with hot applications. Quite a knowledge of the system and its idiosyncrasies can determine this for us, but a little experimenting will teach one what is best to do."

Artificial Eyes.

Celluloid artificial eyes are cheaper than those of glass and have a good appearance; but Dr. Meurer, of Lyons, says that after three or four months they are liable to cause serious irritation, probably as the result of some chemical change. He has repeatedly seen this inflammation allayed by simple antiseptic treatment after the removal of the celluloid, but reappearing, however, as soon as the old eye was reinserted, though remaining absent if a glass eye was substituted.

Things to Try.

Cranberries for malaria.
A sun bath for rheumatism.
Ginger ale for stomach cramps.
Clam broth for a weak stomach.
A wet towel at the back of the neck for insomnia.
Hard cider—a wineglassful three times a day—for ague and rheumatism.
A hot, dry flannel over the seat of neuralgic pain and renew it frequently.

ETIQUETTE

FIVE O'CLOCK TEA.

Hints About Correct Form in Costume, Invitations, Card Leaving, Etc.

For a 5 o'clock tea a reception dress or dinner gown is the approved costume for the hostess and ladies receiving with her, according to Good Housekeeping, though a simpler afternoon dress, or even an especially pretty tea gown is often substituted. The guests, on the other hand, invariably come in street dress, retaining bonnet and gloves, and if the rooms are crowded and the call is to be but a brief one, oftentimes even the cloak is not laid aside. A dressing room should always be provided, however, with a maid at hand to assist the guests with their wraps; and the woman who has a care for her health will gladly avail herself of the opportunity to throw off her cloak. Many a severe cold was contracted last winter by neglecting this precaution. The American drawing room is very apt to be overheated, and it stands to reason that a room tempered to the comfort of ladies in reception dress will be insufferable to the guest who has retained her cloak and has swallowed a cup of hot tea. She will be fortunate should she escape a chill on returning to her carriage.

A series of these informal teas often proves a most convenient means of introducing a guest to one's friends, says the author already quoted, when the invitation will read thus:

Mrs. Ralph Prentiss
Thursdays in October
Five o'Clock Tea
No. 31 Grove Avenue.

It is not incumbent upon those attending the tea to call afterward in acknowledgment of the hospitality extended them. Either on entering or leaving the house the card should be placed upon a salver in the hall provided for that purpose. The invitation to tea is treated like an invitation to call, and the obligation rests with the hostess to call upon her guests afterward. In case of a series of teas, should one be unable to attend any of them, a card should be sent to the last of the number, and a call should be paid the hostess as soon as possible thereafter.

BREVITIES.

—Quartette—M. E. Church, Sunday—4:15 p. m.

—The Democratic City Convention will be held next Tuesday evening.

—Services in honor of the Sacred Heart were held in St. Mary's church last evening at eight o'clock.

—The drivers for the United States Express Company have completed arrangements for a ball.

—The building of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum was wired for electric lighting this morning.

—An unusually fine assortment of fur shoulder capes is now being offered at Edsall's at popular low prices.

—Leal's foot ball team and a team from Elizabeth are contesting a game of football on the Crescent League grounds this afternoon.

—The members of Perseverance Lodge No. 74, Knights of Pythias, held a meeting last evening, when the first rank was worked on three candidates for membership.

—Vespers and benediction will be held in St. Mary's church to-morrow afternoon at half-past three o'clock instead of at eight o'clock p. m., as heretofore been the custom.

—Dr. Paul was arrested this morning, taken before Justice Nadyne and held in $150 bonds to keep the peace. The complaint was made by Walter Irving Clark, the Press reporter.

—Mrs. Drake was a prisoner in the police court this morning. She was charged with disorderly conduct. She pleaded guilty and will be given a trial next Friday morning.

—Messrs. Marsh, Ayers & Co., are at work on the interior of Mr. H. G. Runkle's home on Eighth street. The parlor's beauty will be enhanced by white and gold decorations.

—Will H. Runyon and Fred. W. Yates will be with the Yale delegation at the M. E. Church to-morrow afternoon. The former will sing several base and the latter will be one of the speakers.

—Mr. J. C. Allen is constantly advertising some new specialty for sale in his large store. His increasing business is a natural result of his enterprise. He has a "specialty" advertised to-day. Read the advertisement.

—The case of Fred VanArdale vs. H. C. Drake, on appeal, was decided by the Union county court Wednesday in favor of the plaintiff. Martin and Drake for $41 due for rent. The verdict was for the amount claimed with costs.

—Special Police-man James Babbett, who was accidentally shot in the right arm last Monday is rapidly recovering from his injuries. He left the Muhlenberg Hospital yesterday morning and expects to be able to use the arm soon.

—The Rev. Father Smyth, the pastor of St. Mary's church, had a reception tendered a reception to all who assisted in bringing to a successful termination the recent fair for the benefit of St. Mary's church. A very enjoyable evening was spent. Refreshments were served in abundance.

—There were 238 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 205 in the preceding week and 151, 248, 177 and 203 in the corresponding weeks of 1890, 1889, 1888 and 1887, respectively. The total number of failures in the United States January 1st to date is 10,221 against 8,502 in 1890.

—The Rev. Dr. J. J. Yerkes of the First Baptist Church, will preach a sermon to-morrow morning especially for young men, and appropriate to the day, which has been set apart for prayer for young men. There will be no services in this church in the evening, but a union service will be held in the Methodist church under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

—On Oct. 23d an advertisement was inserted in The News for a lost gold thimble, valued as an heirloom. It had been lost ten days before the owner, who thought it was mislaid about the house, decided to advertise its loss in The News. Shortly after the advertisement was inserted the thimble was returned by a woman who found it in the street.

—Look out for a swindle that has been invented and put in practice to get the best of such farmers as do not read the papers. It has been successfully adopted in some parts of Mercer county, but has not yet reached the upper part of the State. It is in the shape of a patent lamb wire fence machine, which does its work handsomely and which the sharpers take orders for, at the same time taking the purchaser's note in payment of part of the purchase money. They then get the note discounted, pocket the proceeds, but never send the machine.

—The difference between the attendance at the Democratic and Republican primaries was very noticeable last evening. There has never been such a large attendance as was at the Republican primaries this year, and the reason who show they are above the dirty style of politics and politicians. They were distinctly a class of representative citizens of which any city might feel proud. The attendance at the Democratic primaries, however, was conspicuously the other way. Of course there were some respectable Democratic gentlemen present, but they were very few, even among the few present.

BOROUGH COUNCIL.

A REGULAR MEETING HELD LAST EVENING.

The Water Works Contract Executed. John Stine Appointed a Special Marshal.—Other Business.

The borough Council met in regular session last evening. Mayor Place and Councilman Buckle, Hegeman, Hummer, Needham, Powell and Sebring responded to roll call.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A communication from Mr. Frank Bergen, the President of the Plainfield Water Supply Company, stating that twenty-eight fire hydrants were ready for use and would be charged for according to the contract, was read and ordered filed.

A number of the residents of Manning avenue petitioned Council to have a side walk laid from P. Duffy's house on that thoroughfare to Westervelt avenue. The petition was referred to the Committee on Streets.

The residents of Summit avenue petitioned Council to accept the northern end of that thoroughfare as a public street. The petition was referred to the Committee on Streets.

D. C. Allen	7.25
T. Rutledge	37.50
J. Coddington	8.12
Plainfield Electric Light & Gas Co.	6.30
H. H. Baker	8.80
Thos. MacDonald	36.72
N. Plainfield Electric Light Co.	341.50
John Seufert	10.00
A. W. Johnson	3.50
Thos. McCann	5.00
P. Kerlegher	6.25

Mr. Sebring offered a resolution to the effect that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps be empowered to purchase 800 feet of new cotton jacket hose the cost not to exceed 80 cents per foot for the use of the fire department. After some discussion the resolution was laid on the table for one week in order to ascertain whether or not the financial condition of the borough would permit the purchase.

Mr. Needham offered a resolution rescinding the Commission of Louis Conrad as a special borough marshal, he having moved out of the borough. The resolution was adopted.

By resolution John Stine was appointed special marshal.

The mayor and clerk were authorized to execute the Water-Works' contract.

A motion to the effect that when the Council should adjourn it would be to meet again next Friday evening, was adopted.

Chief Engineer Fairchild reported that the fire hydrants had been tested and found to work satisfactorily. The report was ordered filed.

Councilman Powell moved that the special committee on Water Supply be discharged. So ordered.

Councilman Needham reported $5.75 received from the Knights of Pythias for special marshal's services.

A resolution introduced by Councilman Hegeman, and adopted, authorized the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps to inspect the new hydrants to see if they were what the contract called for.

The Committee on Streets reported that not over one-half the assessments due for the macadamizing of Grandview avenue had been paid.

The meeting then adjourned.

The Fastest Team in the State

"Rachael" and mate, considered the fastest team in New Jersey, owned jointly by Messrs Smith and Vanliet of Elizabeth, were in Plainfield this week.

Mr. VanVliet formerly resided on Prospect place.

Their time for a mile together is said to be less than 2:20, and many tempting offers have been refused by their owners.

A Small Fire.

Shortly after one o'clock to-day an alarm of fire was sounded from box 25, situated at the corner of Seventh street and Broadway. The department turned out and easily extinguished the fire, which proved to be a manure heap on the property of Mr. Sullivant on Broadway. No harm on the premises was scorched by the flames. The alarm caused a large crowd of persons to assemble near the fire.

Pinned Between Car-Bumpers.

William E. Slocum of Long Branch, a brakeman on the Central Railroad, was seriously injured yesterday at Elizabeth while coupling cars. The train broke loose at Cherry street and Slocum was pinned between the bumpers while connecting the separated portions of the train. Slocum was removed to the Elizabeth Hospital.

A Narrow Escape.

A few days ago, Mr. William Brown, a former employe of the Wood Machine Tool Works in this city, had a narrow escape from death. He was working at a bench in a machine shop at Bridgeton, N. J., when the counter-shaft fell and, barely missing him, struck the floor with a deafening thud.

The Corner-Stone to be Laid.

The corner-stone of the new church building now being erected for the First Unitarian Society will be laid to-morrow at three o'clock p. m. by the Rev. D. W. Moorehouse of New York. The building will be on Park avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets.

—Zephyr Hook & Ladder truck was taken to the shop yesterday for repairs.

Messrs. Elmore D. Moffett, Arthur T. Gallup and Michael Flynn, were appointed a committee to fill any vacancies that may occur.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL.

Mrs. S. S. VanArsdale, of Salt Lake City, is the guest of her son, Mr. Morris J. VanArsdale of Westervelt avenue, North Plainfield.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Frank C. Green took place from the Seventh-Day Baptist church yesterday afternoon at half-past two o'clock.

Mr. Harry Werner, the proprietor of Werner's Clothing House, is slowly recovering from the operation performed on one of his toes by Dr. Field, last Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Asa Collier, has been honored with an invitation to the annual dinner of the New York Jewelers' Association, which is to take place at Delmonico's, Nov. 19th at half-past six o'clock.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Mrs. Wm. L. Jones, took place from the residence of their daughter, Mrs. H. B. Bannard at Long Branch, yesterday afternoon at three o'clock.

Mr. C. W. Opdyke of Broadway is, as all good horsemen should be, a lover of fine horses. His latest purchase in that line is a trim-built Kentucky saddle horse, which, he says, is just about perfect.

Mr. R. F. M. Chase of Edgeview was out driving this morning, having so far recovered from his accident of a few weeks ago, when one of his ribs was fractured, another indented, and his leg badly wrenched.

At the entertainment of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Hope Chapel, given Thursday evening, Mr. Henry B. Newball presided. Mr. M. C. VanArsdale rendered a solo. Mr. and Mrs. John Voehl recited. Mr. Struthers sang and Mr. Squiers delivered an interesting address.

The funeral services over the remains of Ida, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Irwin, who died at her home on Orchard place Wednesday morning, took place from the late residence this afternoon. The Rev. Dr. Yerkes conducted the funeral services. Interment was made at Flemington, N. J.

Miss F. Kaeding and Mr. Wm. J. Eakins were united in marriage at the residence of the bride's parents on Wilson avenue, North Plainfield, last evening. The Rev. F. Koechli, the pastor of the German Reformed church, performed the ceremony. At the conclusion of the ceremony the happy couple received the congratulations of their many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Eakins will reside on West Fourth street.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Walsh of Arlington avenue were tendered an agreeable surprise last Wednesday evening, when twenty-five members of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum visited their home and presented them with a handsome parlor chair. Mr. Thomas Carty, the president of the Lyceum, made the presentation speech, after which refreshments were served and the remainder of the evening was passed very pleasantly.

JOHN'S BIG SCHEME

A prominent Republican said to a News reporter to-day:

"At the Third Ward Republican caucus a resident, (whose name he gave, but whom we will call John for short) was noticed as a particularly active worker.

"Last evening after the adjournment of the Democratic caucus, the very same John was seen stealing under cover of darkness into Hetfield's office, where a party had met to name a candidate in the Third Ward with the hope of perpetuating the existence of the combine. It is reported that a Mr. Curtis of Eighth street was decided upon, though it is not known that he had any hand in the combine's scheme.

"Evidently John has got a heavy load of politics on his shoulders this Fall endeavoring to run both parties, as he seems trying to do.

"The Republicans will need to be on the lookout, however, as will also all good citizens interested in reclaiming the city, and be particularly wide-awake for the combine's schemes. We can't afford to have our city disgraced another two years by such a gang.

"There isn't much likelihood that it will be if all our citizens do their duty on election day."

Services at Holy Cross.

Following will be order of music at the church of the Holy Cross to-morrow:

Recessional, 493	LeJeune

The hour of the afternoon service has been changed from five to four-thirty o'clock. All strangers are welcome. The service to-morrow afternoon will be the finest musical service that has ever been given in the church.

Justice Wadsworth's Singular Proceedings.

Half-past seven o'clock last evening was the hour set for the First Ward Democratic primaries. Justice Louis F. Wadsworth was the only Democrat from that Ward present at that time. Nevertheless, he elected himself chairman of the meeting. He also acted as secretary, judge and inspector. He then nominated Walter L. Hetfield as a candidate for Councilman from the First Ward and declared the nominee the unanimous choice of the meeting. The Judge then elected four delegates, including himself to the city convention and then declared the meeting adjourned. When the voters from the First Ward began to arrive and were informed what had occurred they declared the meeting illegal. One of the party denounced it as an outrage and the denunciation angered the Judge. He immediately began searching for a piece of paper to issue a warrant for his arrest. After the Second Ward Democrats had concluded their meeting, the First Ward primary reassembled and nominated a regular ticket.

Mr. Kyte's Plurality.

The Union County Board of Canvassers met at Elizabeth yesterday afternoon and canvassed the vote of the recent election. The official returns place the Hon. George Kyte's plurality for Assemblyman at 504.

The Westfield Standard of this week has the following:

Out of 296 votes cast for assemblyman, our popular townsman, Hon. Geo. Kyte, received 232, showing that his neighbors in both parties believe in his integrity and the large local vote cast in his favor emphasize the fact that they approve of his efforts to have all local ordinances enforced.

Mt. Bethel.

Mr. M. E. Blazier has almost entirely recovered from an illness covering a period of eight months.

Mr. George Kirsh has sold his farm in this place to a gentleman from New York, where about the fifteenth of this month he will embark in the grocery business.

ROVER.

Probably the richest display of cut glass to be seen anywhere is at thirty-six Murray street, New York. It is Dorflinger's American cut glass.

—Joe English, the temperance lecturer, always so popular in this city, is to address the Reform Club meeting at Reform Hall Sunday evening.

—At A. D. Van Sciver's on North avenue, an assorted stock of wall papers is constantly on hand. To decorate a room properly, tasty wall paper is essential. Call and examine the stock.

—Van Emburgh & White say that all in search of bargains should visit their store this coming week, as they will offer goods throughout every department at reduced prices, to make room for holiday goods. See what they have to say in their advertisement.

Two of the Combine Nominated.

The Democrats have done the citizens of Plainfield a great service in nominating two members of the combine at their primary last evening. The people will now have a chance to express an opinion at the polls of the combine methods, which have brought so much disgrace on the city during the past few years. In the Fourth Ward Moffett was not renominated. He was not even mentioned. But when some one else had nominated Mr. Frazee, Mr. Moffett, though secretary, jumped up saying: "I nominate Mr. Vincent L. Frazee as my successor."

We cannot afford to take any chances this year. A large number of our best citizens of both parties have said that rather than submit to combine rule another two years, they would move out of Plainfield altogether and sell their property.

Do we want such a thing?

Is it not our policy to attract rather than repel citizens?

Do we want a gang over us who have no regard for the rights of the people, and have plunged the city into 80 end of litigation.

We've heard of a man who wouldn't eat oatmeal at all because he couldn't get

H.O.

Was he foolish?

EDITORIAL NOTES

"I believe we can build faster steamers in America than they can in Great Britain or in Germany," says Mr. Andrew Carnegie.

In connection with the statement made by Edison not long since that he believed he could send a message to a long distance station and that Henry Villard was about to put in a special remark made to Mr. Villard himself will be of interest. The readers, reported from Spokane in the Pacific states of the Northwest, will before long be operated not only by electric power."

Edison is enthusiastic over his new long distance electric motor. It will drop out of sight altogether the heavy steam engine, and the man with the nerve to undertake the disparagement is Mr. Henry Villard. Being an ex-newspaper reporter, Mr. Villard may be expected to make news enough for running. The time when steam will begin to go down before electricity on long distance trains will be during the World's fair, 1892, the railroad between Chicago and Milwaukee. The wife of Edison, who pays from a stationary engine to a rotating rail, thence to the motor. So Edison says.

More money is coming from Great Britain to be invested in the United States. Englishmen, in especially the northwest, in the vicinity of Puget sound, where Great Britain and the United States come together, so to speak. One American agent has $7,000,000 British money to invest in real estate and the improvements in that region. Since their bad break in Argentine securities British investors turn with willing and wait ing glances to the green coupons north of the latitude. If this is a belief among some of the northwestern investors that a canal across the isthmus will be finished in five years.

Wage Workers Pay the Taxes.

Every month two or three of the current magazines have essays on the misgovernment of the American cities. Theodora Murat Halstead, in The Cosmopolitan, has his knack at the question. His remedy is the "self education of the workingmen," and the opening of their eyes to the fact they are the ones who pay the taxes. When once they realize this fact, for fact it is, then they will rise in their strength and sweep as with a new broom political jobbery and politicians from American municipal administration. Mr. Halstead says of the workingmen:

> If they could only come to the conclusion that they pay on the taxes and they do on the outside of the rent, and that they are the ones who practically pay the interest on the bonds they create, the mortgages and their whole municipal debt, they would be the greatest conservatives and would rise then if they were not they are misguided. We do not ask one man to be in politics and one of the great political parties. If the party, no matter what its profession and pretension to local affairs is, is controlled by the organization of a state, it is misgovernment. There is a taint in the politics as well.

If the workingmen of all nationalities and all grades of the social scale could only be educated to the point of seeing that they are the ones who pay the taxes, which is the tribute levied upon the people, then the cross fire of reverence for the old political shibboleths would be broken down, and the deepest, darkest passion of the republican form of government, the political bosses, that all of our evils are bosses, and that public clients are their prisoners.

America's Greatest Stump Speaker.

A newspaper correspondent furnishes some interesting facts about famous stump speakers in this country in recent years. There is much difference of opinion, of course, as to who was first. Mr. Blaine thinks Henry Clay was the leading orator of the Whig party during all the years of its existence, while in the judgment of Roscoe Conkling, who himself owed his success to his power of popular oratory, Tom Corwin of Ohio, was the most brilliant speaker that ever addressed a political assembly in America.

But Chauncey Depew believes that America's greatest stump speaker was Abraham Lincoln. Now as men are beginning to look back over his history, it is apparent that Lincoln was really the most sagacious and farseeing statesman of his day. It looked, indeed, as if he dreamed always of the time when he himself should be called to be a leader of men. In the little log lying town in which he practiced law at first, he learned the eloquence—the marvelous power and purity of English expression which characterized his later messages and speeches. The writer mentions how he used to lie flat upon the floor of his house, without shoes or coat, studying hour after hour Shakespeare and the Bible, logic and Euclid—grammar, too, poor soul, for his early education had been neglected. Even the plodding, overcome by such fits of melancholy that at times his friends feared for his reason, till his hour struck. It sounded when the great joint debate between Lincoln and Douglas began in 1858.

> It was a high water mark of public campaigning. The two champions threshed out their ideals and purposes personified, but Lincoln had more prophecy, while Douglas had more explanation to make before those audiences. In the results it was stupendous. It and none, perhaps two, other speeches made Lincoln president. It split the Democratic party, for the south would not support Douglas after this debate, and the north would not support Lincoln. It was the first time the north ever found its slave holder. It was the climax of the American political career of oratory and stump speaking can probably never reach such a height as it did at this meeting.

SENATORS HEAR HENSEL

The Attorney General Sums Up at Harrisburg.

HIS REVIEW OF THE TESTIMONY.

The State's Counsel Claims That the Evidence Shows Incompetency, if Not Actual Guilt—His Argument on the Power of the Senate in the Proceedings.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 7.—Attorney General Hensel entertained the state senate for four hours and a half in opening the impeachment trial of State Treasurer Boyer, claiming that the extraordinary session under misinterpretation of the constitution as to the meaning of executive business, and that the body had no jurisdiction to impeach under the charges made by the governor against the state treasurer and the auditor general. After citing precedents to show that the senate had taken jurisdiction at certain times, and maintaining that it had jurisdiction assumed jurisdiction at the session, the attorney general said that the defendants' lawyers virtually said to the senate:

His View of Their Argument.

First—You are not legislators and law fully assembled here as senate. But being legislators, you might be judges sitting in equity. Third—But having proceeded and concluded an inquiry, you have no legal to pronounce a judgment.

He denied Attorney Shipley's allegation that the present session had disclosed no evidence which was not known when the legislature was in regular session and when the house of representatives could have exercised its constitutional prerogative to impeach, and added:

> The premature and unwarranted payment of $150,000 of the state money by the extension of the treasury authorities with the auditor general was only in part the fact that Philadelphia or Pittsburgh banks had lost $82,000 by the alleged payment to John Bardsley of his share of the school appropriation for 1890, but the fact that the banks at and since the confession of the state treasurer had the payment had been made to Bardsley for the purpose of shifting and avoiding the sinking fund law had not yet reached the counties with

The utterances of the auditor general and the state treasurer to enforce the law of 1885, he said, had been publicly admitted, the appearance of the personal payment to John Bardsley of large sums of money to some of known and undisclosed persons with the general return of counties from the auditor general, and as Bardsley had not made his and it was not known that he intended to say that the explanation subsequently made that the letters of thanks received on the part of such persons for the payment of bounties and other trusts in connection had been furnished to a charitable and confiding public.

Sarcasm for the Press.

The memorials exhibiting the disposing of the state's capital stock in the form of the profits had so far done little or nothing, the attorney general said, to disabuse the public mind of the impression that the payment of the money had been for their benefit. Referring to the press, he said:

> Whatever losses had occurred to the public through the payment of the money to Bardsley it was a matter of which the people were entitled to be informed. Some newspapers had not failed to do this, and others had not failed to do it. Some had not done it, and others had done it in part. Some had done it in full. Some had done it in part and others had done it in full. Some had done it in part and others had done it in full. Some had done it in part and others

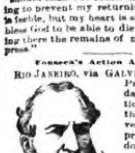
DOM PEDRO WOULD RETURN.

What Brazil's Deposed King Says of the Present Crisis.

PARIS, Nov. 7.—Dom Pedro, ex-emperor of Brazil, is at the Hotel Bedford. He is not in good health. He says he is watching events, but passive.

"If the people of Brazil," he adds, "should choose to recall me, there is nothing to prevent my returning. My health is feeble, but my heart is strong. I should thank God to be able to die in Brazil, taking there the remains of my beloved empress."

Fonseca's Action Annoyed.



DICTATOR FONSECA.

RIO JANEIRO, via GALVESTON, Nov. 7.—President Deodora da Fonseca's action in assuming the dictatorship is very generally approved here. Little doubt exists that a conspiracy existed for the purpose of overthrowing the government and it was realized that only such severe measures as were taken would be sufficient to frustrate the schemes of the conspirators. While martial law is in force in Rio everything is as quiet here as it was before the trouble.

In President da Fonseca's manifesto explaining the cause of the change in government and the dissolution of congress, he charges that the actions of congress were due to personal animosity to him.

His administration, he says, has been considerably embarrassed, and many of its functions have been suspended by the reactionary projects of the opposition.

Each one of the projects have raised the restoration idea, he charges, in the mining country especially for the purpose of stirring up the populace into openly attempting the destruction of republican institutions.

He alleges that there has been a wide spread conspiracy by which many of the adherents of the old imperial regime have been permitted to return to the country.

Da Costa Not Alarmed for Brazil.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Senor Da Costa, secretary of the Brazilian legation here, left Washington today for New York, where he will sail for Brazil. Senor Da Costa does not regard the situation in Brazil as very serious. The president, he says, is not an ambitious man and there has been no difficulty in establishing martial law, as it was taken in the belief that it was in the interest of the country. Da Costa thinks quiet will be restored as soon as a new congress is elected.

CHILE IS NOT SO COLD NOW.

SANTIAGO DE CHILE, Nov. 7.—Wild stories have been in circulation here for several days to the effect that a conspiracy had been formed among the refugees in the American legation for the assassination of Colonel Canto, who so successfully led the Congressionalists during the recent insurrection. As a result of these reports a mass meeting of citizens was held in the plaza to denounce the conspiracy and to take whatever action was deemed necessary.

Minister Egan notified the junta that a threat of an attack upon the legation had been made with the avowed purpose of killing the refugees. In very firm tones Mr. Egan announced that the junta would be held strictly responsible for any damage which might be done to the legation and also warn that might befall any of its inmates. The junta promptly dispatched a troop of cavalry to the United States legation for its protection. At the plaza many manifestations of sympathy were made, and the United States legation and its troop of wounded conspirators were severely denounced. Just before the close of the meeting government officials distributed a circular among the crowd when announced that the conspiracy stories were the result of an old hoax. This had a soothing effect upon the excited citizens, and they dispersed.

There is a decidedly more friendly feeling here between the Americans and Chilenos. The intendente of Valparaiso has addressed an official communication to Captain Schley, of the Baltimore, requesting that the wounded sailors be permitted to appear before Judge Foster and give their testimony. A feeling of extreme cordiality now seems to exist between the officers of the vessels of the United States naval officers, and there are frequent interchanges of courtesies.

A WAR GOVERNOR GONE.

Death of the Hon. J. Gregory Smith, of Vermont.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Nov. 7.—Ex-Governor J. Gregory Smith died last night after an illness of several months. He was born here July 2d, 1818, was admitted to the bar in 1845 and afterward became connected with the Vermont Central railroad, of which he was receiver from 1858 to 1862, and president from then until his death. He was one of the incorporators of the Northern Pacific railroad and was its president from 1866 to 1872.

As governor of the state during the dark days of the rebellion he was true to the best interests of the nation. He was the speaker of the Vermont house in 1861 and 1862, and was chairman of the state delegation to the national Republican conventions of 1872, 1880 and 1884. He presided over several state conventions, and had spoken effectively on the stump in presidential campaigns.

Young Betts Defends His Mother.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Charles R. Betts, son of Mrs. Betts, whose husband fatally shot M. Bish, proprietor of the Eagle hotel here, has arrived in this city from Dakota, accompanied by counsel to look after the legal rights of his father. He says his mother was not intimate with the dead man.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 7.—The wife of Dr. D. J. Hill has deserted her four young children and run away with William Cornell. Hill is fifty years of age. His wife is rather good looking and not over twenty-five. The house is almost destitute of food. The authorities have taken charge of the children.

Smothered by a Load of Hay.

LIMA, O., Nov. 7.—While Frank Taylor and John McKernon were driving along the highway near New Hampshire on top of a load of hay, the wagon broke down and buried them into a ditch, with the hay on top of them, smothering them to death.

Fire in an Oil Works.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 7.—Fire in the Standard press house attached to the oil works of Burn & Sprague, near Elizabethsport, last night caused a loss of $60,000.

ELECTIONS IN IRELAND.

Flavin Defeats Redmond for Parnell's Vacant Place.

MANY PRIESTS WERE AT THE POLLS

The Military Were Called on Once, but the Balloting Passed Off in Comparative Quiet—William O'Brien Receives an Ovation from the Women of Cork.

CORK, Nov. 7.—The election which was held today to choose a successor in parliament for the late Charles Stewart Parnell who represented Cork city, passed off quietly. The votes are being counted today and it is believed that the McCarthyite candidate, Mr. Martin Flavin, a butter merchant of this city, has been elected. Mr. John E. Redmond, who resigned as member of parliament for North Wexford in order to contest Cork city as the candidate of the Parnellites, admits his defeat and attributes it to clerical intimidation.

When the sun rose it found the streets of the city already alive with men, women and children who had determined to see as much as possible of the great battle of the polls, where many believed was to decide whether the Parnellites were to remain a power in Irish politics or whether the McCarthyites were to bring about a union of the Irish parliamentary forces before the general election.

Contrary to general expectation, the polling opened quietly. Many priests were stationed about the booths, mingling with the voters and giving them final instructions or admonitions or making appeals before they entered the polling booths. The rival members of parliament of both parties flitted all over the city. Both sides were confident of victory. In order to avert possible disorder the police were strongly guarded by squads of police, who had come prepared for any emergency.

Military Under Arms.

In addition to the precautions taken by the police authorities the garrison of Cork and those of the adjacent fortifications were confined to barracks under arms.

When the returns before noon were several exciting scenes in northwest Cork. Over twenty priests were stationed about the polling booths in that section, which comprises a third of the constituency. The majority of the voters there were McCarthyites. The chief of police called out a detachment of infantry, which surrounded the polling booth and drove back the disorderly Fitzmites.

Homage for O'Brien.

At the close of the polling Flavin was generally credited with a majority of 1,200, but there were Parnellites who believed that the count would show that their candidate had carried the election by a majority of about 500.

It was noticeable that in many alleged riots between the priests and the Parnellites the women, to their credit, sided with the priests. William O'Brien received an ovation from the women, who presented him with flowers and even divested themselves of their shawls for him to walk upon. The secretary of the Irish Home Rule league has written a letter to the journal Ring that the league is anti-Parnellite in its sympathies.

DIRECTOR FRESCH GETS BAIL.

General Butler Said to Have Secured Bondsman Duke Stetson.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Director Thomas H. French of the Commercial Exchange National bank is a fugitive. His bail was reduced from $75,000 to $50,000, and John Boyle O'Reilly, a well known literary man, rejected as bondsman. United States District Attorney Allen intimated in court that he thought French and Potter in default of bail should be held.

But when it became apparent that General French would have to get bail General Butler was invited to the room of the bank examiners, and a few minutes later, on his return, raised the amount of the recognizance and secured sureties and paid up in cash the sum required to protect the bank, which was declared to put his money in no danger.

Inquiries in the Currency Lawyers' office show that the bondsmen cannot be permitted to appear before Judge Foster and give their testimony. A feeling of extreme cordiality now seems to exist between the officers of the vessels of the United States naval officers, and there are frequent interchanges of courtesies.

Negotiating a Loan.

Trotter—See here, that last suit you have charged me fifty dollars for, and you know you never charged me but forty five dollars before.

Peter Maher Matched.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 7.—John Dolan, of this city, and Peter Maher, of England, have been matched to fight before the Rhode Island Athletic club in Onneyville. The exact date has not yet been decided upon, but it will be soon.

HOW RECIPROCITY WORKS.

A Big Increase in Farm Product Shipments to Havana.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—The shipment made by the Ward line of steamers from New York to Havana of articles embraced in the reciprocity treaty for the months of September and October, compared with the same months in 1890, shows an immensely increased use of American land, potatoes, barley, beans, onions, cabbage, beans, hay, apples and other farm products. An example of the increase is shown by the fact that where 50 barrels of American apples went to Havana in September and October, 1890, 7,500 barrels were shipped there during the same months of this year.

The steamship company reports that since the treaty went into effect it has had to charter three extra steamers, besides the regular sailings, and that every ship without exception is overcrowded. The shipments of machinery for the manufacture of sugar have been greater than ever known before. The company reports that the leading products sent out in Havana estimates that when the treaty provisions as to reduction of duty on flour takes place Jan. 1 next the imports from the United States to Cuba will reach 1,000,000 barrels per annum, or more than double the present total consumption.

The Divorce Proceedings Reopened.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 7.—A year ago an absolute divorce was granted by a New Jersey court to Douglas Nash, a former actor, from Mrs. Nash, on default. Mrs. Nash, who still resides in New Jersey has proper. Her attorney proceedings on her application.

Four Dollars for a Five Minute Talk.

LITTLE ROCK, Nov. 7.—The work on the long distance telephone line between New York and Chicago is being rapidly pushed forward. The line is completed as far west as Memphis, Tenn., and New York by Jan. 1. The line will be in operation as far as Little Rock, but for the present talk between Chicago and New York will be four dollars.

General Butler's Book in Court.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—The court has denied the injunction asked for by the G. P. Lowell Publishing company against A. M. Hayes & Co., to restrain the latter firm from publishing General Butler's book, the action of which was based on the alleged unfair action on the part of General Butler and he doesn't firm.

Reduced the Men's Wages.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—The great iron firm of Carnegie, Phipps & Co. has reduced the wages of the 5,000 laborers employed by it from $1.70 per day to $1.55. There was much feeling among the employes over the reduction, but they say they are power less, having no organization and being unskilled help.

Who Will Succeed Gladstone?

LONDON, Nov. 7.—The St. James Gazette says the Liberals are greatly exercised over the question of the succession to the party leadership on the retirement of Mr. Gladstone. Sir William Vernon Harcourt is mentioned by Liberals but thought he cannot become Gladstone's successor.

"SLUGGER" MASON.

THE STRONGEST MAN IN HARVARD COLLEGE ATHLETICS.

In Spite of His Fierce Name, He Is Very Gentle—Has Tried all Sports With Indifferent Success—Is Now a Candidate for Foot Ball Honors.

Harvard College's strongest athlete is "Slugger" Mason, and although he has a ferocious nickname, he is as gentle and mild-tempered as a child.

"SLUGGER" MASON.

Mason entered college with the intention of completing the regular course, but after two years of general study he entered the Law School, and is now doing some heavy weight-lifting in Blackstone. When he first joined the athletic association he did not show much evidence of extraordinary ability as an athlete. His home is in Ossipee, N. H., and until he entered college had but little experience in athletic training. But he was ready and willing to learn. His trainer saw that he had the build of an athlete, and put him through a course of sprouts that has resulted in his present proud position. He tried baseball, but was not a bowling success. In weighing moments he got rattled and the result was disastrous. Still, he was bound to be a ball player. He was tried in left field in the spring of 1890 and did good work at times. He also tried his hand at catching, and did well. Last spring he was left off the regular team, but served as change catcher. During the past summer he has played with various nines in eastern Massachusetts.

Last fall Mason came out as a football player, and at this game he made much more gratifying progress. His short, stocky, compact form made him a good man for opposing players to back against, and as he developed considerable skill as a tackler, he was put on the end of the second eleven's rush line. There he was in his element, and he showed up so well that he would have been offered a place on the regular eleven in Cumnock's place if the latter had not been captain. The latter could not be spared, although his strength and his ability as a tackler were inferior to Mason. It was Cumnock's superior head work that won for him so much fame as captain and player. With Cumnock's head Mason would be a star. He is but five feet five inches tall, and weighs 160 pounds. His muscles are short, and this gives him tremendous strength. The muscles about his chest and back are unusually well developed for a young man twenty-two years old.

England Ahead of America.

W. G. Johnson, the champion amateur 100-yard swimmer of the United States and Canada, has returned from abroad. As a result of his experience with the best talent of Great Britain, he gives it as his opinion that the English amateur swimmers are far in advance of America's best. This candid admission of our champion is certainly to his credit.

THE HOUSEHOLD

FANCY WORK.

Any one who wants to make up small articles for bazaars and church entertainments or for presents and special little Christmas gifts among friends should investigate her collection of ribbons, for there are few materials that can be utilized to such good advantage. Many things can be made of bits of ribbon that are very saleable and popular.

First, there are the small cube pincushions, made in six sides exactly the same size, and each side generally formed of four little pieces of silk stretched over a card and beautifully sewn together, the size of each piece three-eighths of an inch square; the pincushion finished measures three-quarters of an inch. They can be made larger.

Then there are the small round pincushions made in sections, and sewn together with a piece of narrow ribbon between.

Another cushion suitable to a writing table and more novel is to procure a small doll, form the skirt of its dress of the bits of ribbon, sewn together with colored silks, stretch the skirt over several thicknesses of flannel, roll round till these form the petticoats the size of the cushion (a flat piece will be required for it to stand on), put the doll in at the top and add the waist to the dress, if the skirt was stretched on thin cardboard and filled with black sewing silk, it would make an excellent pen-wiper.

Strips of ribbon applied to common ticking, with an embroidered scroll pattern between the strips, are very pretty for satchels, cushions and the like.

A bunch of little scent bags made of scraps of silk or ribbon is effective and pretty, and these bells for sale at bazaars can be arranged as follows: Tie some small bells onto lengths of ribbon, then gather them together in a bunch and fix them to a stick, previously covered in some way, with worsted or ribbon.

Potato Puff.

Potato puff is by many considered an improvement upon the usual way of making mashed potatoes. Stir over the fire until well mixed and hot two cupfuls mashed potato, the yolks of two eggs, three tablespoonfuls of cream, one tablespoonful of butter, with seasoning of salt and pepper. Add gradually the whites, well beaten, stir all well together, place in a buttered dish and bake in a quick oven till nicely browned.

Monograms for Marking Linen.

Ornamental monograms for marking house and table linen, charmingly delineated in Japanese style, consist of letters in designs of bamboo stalks with decorations of birds in various positions, each holding a sprays of foliage and berries. To this device is attached an escutcheon inclosing a smaller letter standing for a Christian name, the whole being reproduced in white or colored silks or cottons, effectively set off with washing gud thread. The colors must harmonize with either the toilet set, bed hangings or dinner service.

These letters are really adaptable to every kind of decorative work where painting and embroidery are called into requisition.

MONOGRAM IN JAPANESE STYLE.

In embroidery there are several ways of executing these initials. Crewel work can be used for the birds, and well padded satin stitch for the jointed stems of the bamboo as well as for the leaves and berries, or in a lighter way the twist stitch outlines the rounded coil and encircles it at intervals, the inside being filled in with the seed stitch; or, again, applique work offers another mode of displaying to great advantage this uncommon design, and in this case the bird may be painted if preferred.

A New Business.

There was a great big fat fly on the corner of the editor's desk and the busy man ceased for a moment the death dealing work of his blue pencil.

"Good morning," said a soft little voice from a bunch of whiskers on a mild little man.

"How are you," replied the editor, without the slightest indication in the tone that he cared a continental how the little man was.

"May I have a few minutes of your time?" inquired the little voice pleadingly.

"What is it?"

"I have something you may need in your business."

"What! Money?" inquired the editor sarcastically.

"No," said the little man, "not money, but something else. Did you ever hear of a neologizer?"

"Something to clean clothes with? To keep out the flies? To destroy cockroaches? To keep paste sweet? To destroy moths?" To make old butter young? To remove freckles or tan? To cure fits? To eradicate hair moles? To"— and the editor hesitated a moment in his sarcasm.

"Go on," said the little man softly; "go on, you are not half way there and I've got a week's vacation."

The editor warmed a little.

"Well, what the deuce is a neologizer?"

"I'm one," said the little man.

"Oh!" groaned the editor.

"Yes, sir, I'm a neologizer—a joke neologizer—neologize from the Greek neos, new, and logos, speech, word discourse. See? I introduce new words for puns and new ideas for jokes. I can"—

"Hold on a minute," interrupted the editor, "I'm not the man you want to see. Let me introduce you to our funny man."

The editor took him back and stepped outside to listen, and five minutes after-ward he heard a dull thud on the floor and a scattering, and then the funny man, with a handful of whiskers, came out and asked the janitor for a dustpan and a broom.—Detroit Free Press.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MAGIC AT HOME.

An Amusing Illustration of a Familiar Law of Mechanics.

Our illustration supplies without the need of explanation the solution of the problem. How to balance a pencil on its point.

BALANCING A PENCIL ON ITS POINT.

You have merely to dig the blade of a half open penknife into the pencil a little above the point, and to open or close the blade, little by little, till you find that the balance is obtained. The combination of pencil and penknife thus placing itself in equilibrium is an illustration of a familiar law of mechanics; the center of gravity of the combination falls below the point of support (the finger, edge of table or the like), and thus stable equilibrium is obtained.

By varying the degrees of opening the penknife, you impart corresponding degrees of inclination to the pencil. When the center of gravity of the two combined falls in the same line as the axis of the pencil, the latter will assume a perpendicular position.

The Charms of the Cicada's Song.

In Nature Notes Mr. R. T. Lewis gives a curious account of the appreciation with which the song of the cicada is heard by insects other than those of its own genus. The correspondent has frequently observed in Natal, Africa, that when the cicada is singing at its loudest in the hottest portion of the day it is attended by a number of other insects with lovely, gauzelike, iridescent wings, whose demeanor has left no doubt in his mind that the music is the attraction. The cicada, when singing, usually stations itself upon the trunk of a tree with its head uppermost, and the insects in question, to the number of sometimes fifteen or sixteen, form themselves into a rough semicircle at a short distance around its head. During a performance one of the insects was observed occasionally to approach the cicada and to touch it upon its front leg or antenna, which proceeding was received by a vigorous stroke of the foot by the cicada, without, however, any cessation of its song. The insects composing the audience are extremely active and so wary that they take flight at the least alarm or the too near approach of any intruder. Some of them, however, have been captured; and on examination those "proved to belong to the same family as that most beautiful of British insects, lacewing fly, which, indeed, they closely resemble except as to size, their measurement across the expanded wings being a little over two inches; they have since been identified by Mr. Kirby at the British museum as Notochrysa gigantea."

A Shark's Miscellaneous Diet.

An English exchange is authority for the following: "A large shark, 13 feet 6 inches long, was caught in the waters of Moreton bay some few weeks ago. On the animal being opened the following miscellaneous collection was said to be discovered: Twenty one sea mullet, a native bear, an opossum, a turtle's fin, an iguana, a wallaby, a carpet snake 3 feet 6 inches in length and several minor articles of commerce."

An Extraordinary Tree.

The accompanying cut from La Nature was copied from a photograph of a beech tree standing in a wood near Metz. Popular Science News gives the following account of this tree:

The tree is several hundred years old and the contortions and irregularities of its trunk and branches are most remarkable. Occasional departures from perfect symmetry can be observed in almost every tree, and it is proverbial that a bending of the young twig leads to the inclination of the adult tree, but it would be of great interest to know the original cause of the manifold twistings and turnings of this tree, and whether they were due to an accidental bending of the young shoots or to an abnormal habit of growth.

This tree, which is probably the most remarkable of its kind, is an object of interest to large numbers of sightseers, and is locally known by the inappropriate name of the Joli-Fou, or Pretty Fool.

Odds and Ends.

The Pall Mall Budget tells that the experiments with the new explosive, fortis, at Liege have been truly remarkable. The substance is considered to have a force of from 30 to 40 pounds per cent. over that possessed by any other explosive known.

Fragments of meteoric iron discovered in Arizona have been found to contain numerous small diamonds.

According to The Industrial World the metal in a five cent nickel piece is worth about half a cent, and fifteen cents will purchase copper enough to make two dollars' worth of cents.

Only a Half Strike.

As a citizen was crossing the Campus Martius the other evening he was halted by a young man in a state of dilapidation, who said:

"Mister, I'm not asking for money to pay for lodgings, for I can sleep on the grass yet, but"—

"But you want something to eat?"

"No, sir. I'm used to going without that. I don't feel the need of eating more than once a week."

"Well, sir?"

"I want you to help me get to Denver, where I know I can strike a job."

"All right—take this—good night," said the citizen, as he passed on.

The young man stood looking at the coin under an electric light, when he was joined by his partner, who inquired:

"How much did you git?"

"Ten cents."

"What did you tell him?"

"That I wanted to get to Denver."

"Jim, what is Denver?" "Denver is only half way to San Francisco. Why didn't you go the hull distance and git twenty out of him?"—Detroit Free Press.

SHOT AT A BICYCLIST.

A Drunken Man Recklessly Discharges a Revolver.

Saturday evening as Lewis Mohring was riding along East Front street on his bicycle, he heard a pistol discharged. Almost immediately something struck his bicycle. He dismounted and after casually examining the wheel he ascertained that one of the spokes had been broken by a bullet. Mr. Mohring notified Policeman Fredrickson and together they went in search of the man who fired the pistol shot. They found him near Washington street. Mr. Mohring identified him and he was arrested. On his person a 32-calibre revolver was found with one of the chambers empty.

He was arraigned before City Judge Codington this morning, pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to sixty days in the county jail.

THE COMBINE'S LATEST.

NOW SCHEMING TO DEFY THE PEOPLE AT THE POLLS.

The Intention is to Gerrymander the Fourth Ward To-Night Into Four Wards. Aiming to Get Fifteen Councilmen, Double Election Expenses and Much More Generally. A Democratic Revolt Against the Combine, which was Not Counted On.

Saturday we referred to the secret meeting the night before in Hetfield's office, and to the rumor that it was of some alleged renegades conspiring with the combine to circumvent the people in their efforts to rid themselves once and forever of the disreputable schemers. They have kept the city's interests in constant jeopardy ever since by deception and treachery they got the city government under their control.

Everything was intended to be done with utmost secrecy, and it was only by accident that the plotters were discovered at all. Still the plot planned was unknown to the people on the street. But it has leaked out no matter how.

First, it is proposed to get up an alleged Independent Citizens' Ticket, with Moffett, Roberts and Smith, three of the combine, as Councilmen-at-Large, and have the Democratic Convention endorse them.

Second, an ordinance has been prepared, to be rushed through the Council to-night, to make four wards of the Fourth Ward. The Second District of the Fourth is the only one in the city which gave a Democratic majority at the State election a few weeks ago. The First District gave a small Republican majority. All the other wards in the city gave large Republican majorities. The ethn Democratic majority in the Second District is therefore to be divided to try and elect three, if not four, councilmen.

There are in the Fourth Ward several unlicensed saloons, which are doing a large business unmolested, and we understand that the combine have directed the police to keep away from the vicinity of the places referred to and not disturb them. The owners of these places are expected to earn their immunity on election day by their work for the combine. The Republicans will be prepared for them, however, and if they are not disturbed it will not be their fault. It is against these bad influences that all good citizens must now contend.

The formation of the six members of the combine expire with this year. Their overwhelming defeat is a foregone conclusion. Judging by the public feeling of disgust with them regardless of party, the sooner they pass the word that it will be a sad day for this city when such an alcer is permitted to longer infest the land and eventually load the city with debt.

Well, how can they circumvent their own prohibition? They suppose they can delude people by the so-called Independent Ticket, and draw away votes from both their friends in the Republican ranks are on the Republican ticket, and also by the gerrymander referred to, so that they would be first to nominate Councilmen instead of eleven as at present.

But, "the best laid plans of mice and men often go aglee."

The ordinance must be advertised ten days before the election and passed and before the third reading. If put on its second reading to-night the first advertising would be to-morrow morning. But it must date from the last paper publishing it. The Times, is one of the Republican papers, and if the proposed ordinance before Wednesday night. Ten days would begin, therefore, Thursday, which brings the time to Nov. 19th. If passed on its third reading, it must be signed by the Mayor, and again advertised with the publication of the law before it becomes a law. The Mayor, however, has ten days within which to affix his signature, or veto the ordinance. No one important a matter it is not likely know. Should he veto the ordinance, and will be only the full ten days to avoid needless haste. Then, it would be only 20 days to the day after election. If the combine on the night of Dec. 21 pass the ordinance over the Mayor's veto, it might be effective ten days, beginning Dec. 1, election day, stating that it was passed notwithstanding the veto of the Mayor. Now that the ordinance can not be put into effect in time for the election of the combine clique, however, to have it discovered a law to help them out. We shall see.

There is a formidable Democratic opposition against every member of the combine being put on any ticket, and they will not vote for them. This has gone so far as to endorse some of the Republican candidates, and the combine has hoped to defeat. They will undertake one man to overthrow the gang and their leaders. They will do this in the interest of good government, and it is greatly to their credit.

Let the defeat be overwhelming. The very thought of another two to three years of control like the last is enough to arouse every honest citizen. It will be seen by what we have shown that the combine will strain every nerve to win.

English at Reform Hall.

Long before the hour arrived to open the doors of Reform Hall last evening, a large crowd had congregated awaiting admission. At about 7:30 o'clock Prof. Spencer, accompanied by Mr. English, arrived, they were very agreeably surprised to find the hall so well filled. Applause greeted Mr. English. Rev. Mr. Honeyman conducted the devotional exercises. Mr. English introduced Judge Harper, Treasurer Spencer, Messrs. Ayers, Voehl, Crossley and Angleman occupied the platform. Notwithstanding his twenty-five years labor in the temperance cause Mr. English has lost none of his old time vigor and magnetism, which was manifested by close attention paid by the audience. Twenty-six signers to the pledge were obtained. He will speak at the hall again this evening, more in his character of temperance lime, and will undoubtedly draw a full house.

—To-night at eight o'clock the Bible Normal class meets in the First Baptist church. Subject, "Outlines of the Book of Genesis." An invitation is extended to all.

HIS LEG MUST BE AMPUTATED.

After Six Weeks of Suffering Hans Anderson Consents.

About six weeks ago Hans Anderson, a Dane, aged 49 years, was seriously injured at the Pond Machine Tool Works by a heavy trestle falling on him. His scalp was literally torn from his head, and he received a compound fracture of the left leg. As reported in THE NEWS at the time the physicians, after a consultation, decided to amputate the leg, but Anderson refused to permit them. He has since been a patient at the hospital, but, notwithstanding the fact that he has received the best possible care and medical attendance, the broken bones will not unite and Anderson has decided to have the limb amputated. The operation will be performed by the hospital staff early this week.

Surveyors for the New Road.

At Trenton on Wednesday H. C. Suydam, Esq., made application to the Supreme Court for surveyors for the highway to be appointed to lay out the new road from East street, in Bound Brook, to the property of the American Engine Company, across the Green brook. The court appointed the following named persons: Samuel S. Giles and Albert L. Boice, of Piscataway; and Alfred Mundy, of Raritan township, to represent Middlesex county; and Henry V. S. Garretson, of Bridgewater, C. Nelson Staats, of Franklin, and Wm. V. D. Layton, of Bernards, as representatives for Somerset.

They will meet at the Mansion House, in Bound Brook, on November 19th, and thence proceed to view the proposed road.

Officers Elected.

Bowling Notes.

The Crescent League bowling team will go to Elizabeth this evening and roll a game with the E. A. C. Club's team.

The Crescent League team will bowl a game with the Ivanhoes of New York on the latter's alleys next Friday evening.

The Westfield Bowling team and the Crescent League team will roll a game on the alleys in this city Wednesday evening.

The Pool Tournament Decided.

For several months past a number of the members of the Crescent League have been participating in a pool tournament. The tournament was decided Saturday evening. Mr. Frederick Green won the first prize, Mr. Charles VanWinkle the second, and Mr. Charles Lyman the third. The prizes will be presented to the winners at the Club House this evening.

Jumped from a Train.

An unknown man jumped off of the owl train for Elizabeth and Roselle this morning. The train was running at the rate of forty miles an hour at the time. One of the brakeman on the train saw the man jump. The train was stopped and the crew searched for fully half an hour for the man but they failed to find any trace of him.

Injured at Pond's.

John Row, an employee of the Pond Machine Tool Works, was painfully injured Saturday afternoon by being struck on the head by a heavy casting. He was taken home, and at a consultation of physicians it was decided that a wound three inches long was inflicted. He was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital where his wound was dressed, he was then taken to his home.

A Street Fight.

The regular weekly row occurred on the boulevard yesterday afternoon. One of the principals in the disgraceful affair was badly pummelled. Policeman Lynch was notified and he arrested the parties interested. The fight caused a large crowd to congregate.

Both of the would-be pugilists had been drinking.

Injured While Hunting.

Edward Williams, colored, a resident of Bethlehem, accidentally shot several companions, went hunting on Wednesday last. When Williams discharged his gun it bursted and tore two of his fingers from his hand. Williams is a brother to Fredrick Williams, the porter at the City Hotel in this city.

A Horse Dropped Dead.

At about half-past eight o'clock last evening, a horse belonging to a man named Lewis Cole of Scotch Plains, dropped dead on East Second street, between Park avenue and Pence street. The body of the dead animal was removed later in the evening by Jones & Co.

Broke a Connecting Rod.

Engine No. 178, drawing a Baltimore and Ohio freight train, bound east, broke a connecting rod between Liberty and New streets at about half-past six o'clock last evening. After considerable delay the damage was repaired and the train proceeded on its way.

CORNER-STONE LAYING.

HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE SOCIETY.

Record of the Beginnings of the First Unitarian Society of Plainfield, N. J.—The Exercises Yesterday.

The corner-stone of the new Unitarian church, situated on Park avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets, was laid yesterday afternoon at three o'clock by the Rev. D. W. Moorehouse of New York.

The exercises were opened with singing by the choir. The Rev. Robert Clark, the pastor of the church, read a passage from the scripture and then offered up a prayer. The list of the contents of the sealed box which was to be placed in the corner-stone was then read. It is as follows:

1. Christian Register, Nov. 5, 1891.
2. Annual report, A. U. A., 1891.
3. PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, November 7, 1891.
4. Plainfield Daily Press, November 7, 1891.
5. Plainfield Courier, November 7, 1891.
6. Report of Building Committee.
7. List of subscribers to the Building Fund.
8. Record of the beginning of the Unitarian Society.
9. Building Committee's circular, August 1891.
10. Order of services, June 13, 1890, at installation of Rev. Robart Clark.
11. Original Articles of Faith.
12. Pastor's Easter Greeting, 1891.
13. Programme of first fair, October 20, 1891.
14. Sunday-school Library Card.
15. Schedule of week-night meetings for 1891-'91.
16. Band of Mercy card.
17. Trustees circular, August 5, 1890.
18. Trustees circular, December 2, 1889.
19. Pledge card Unitarian Society.
20. Invitation card.
21. Central New Jersey Times, August 17, 1891, containing copy of sermon preached in England, 1809, by Rev. Joseph Bell.
22. Several tracts.
23. Small edition of 1891.

The Rev. Robart Clark read from a manuscript a history of the Unitarian Society since its organization in this city. It is annexed.

Prior to the year 1889 A. D. there were living in this city, mostly unknown to each other, and connected with other churches, or no church, Unitarians who had come here from other parts of the country, and also other earnest, liberal minded Christian men and women not calling themselves Unitarians, although in sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the Unitarian movement known as Unitarianism. No unitarian services were held here, however, until May 12, 1889; on that day the Rev. D. W. Moorehouse of New York held the first unitarian service and preached the first Unitarian sermon here in the parlors of the First Baptist Church, which was kindly offered by that society for the occasion. After that other services were held at No. 17 East Front street from May 19 to July 14 and from September 15 to Nov. 17, 1889, by the Secretary of the New York State Conference, Rev. D. W. Moorehouse and by other ministers who volunteered their assistance. On October 6 it was announced that another meeting place must be provided, and Hon. John Male, Mayor of the city, offered for that purpose a dwelling house he longing to him at No. 15 Park place. His offer was gladly accepted, and services were first held there on October 13, 1889. Since then services have been regularly held until the present time, and the Society has been worshipping there ever since, until the church is built. Meantime an organization had been effected, and the First Unitarian Society of Plainfield had been incorporated according to the laws of the State. At a meeting held Nov. 5, 1889, at the house and held in the parlors of the Free Library on April 10, 1890, by-laws were adopted and the Board of Trustees was duly elected, being composed of the following members: Hon John Male, Henry B. Wells, president; Rev. D. W. Oplyke, clerk; Mrs. David W. Pond, Mrs. Ruth C. Pound, H. B. Nichols and George D. Patton, the last named being chosen as the first treasurer of the society when, on the same day, the articles and by-laws of incorporation to the State and recorded in the County Clerk's office August 26, 1890. The first meeting was called together and organized September 22, 1889, of which Mr. Henry B. Wells was elected president, a position which he continues to fill. On December 1, 1889, the Rev. William P. Tilden was called to be the society's first minister, his ministrations for twenty-five Sundays, when, owing to failing health he was obliged to sever his connection with the society, but the kind regard for the pastor and loving hand had so signally and strengthened the infancy of our church life, he has ever since been remembered by the rare sunshine of his spirit and by the lightness and purity of his ideals. Mr. Tilden's influence for good will be felt in Milton, Massachusetts, October 5, 1890. Services were then held by the society here on Sunday, October 5, and appropriate resolutions regarding his death and his services to this work here were adopted unanimously.

On May 5, 1891, the Rev. Robart Clark was called to be pastor, and, he having charge of the society June 1, and was installed as pastor on the evening of June 13, 1891. Mr. Clark's pastorate, which has been so helpful, has ended in his being in Milton, Massachusetts, October 2, 1890. Services were then held by the society here on Sunday, October 5, and appropriate resolutions regarding his death and his services to this work here were adopted unanimously.

"Society."

After all, "society" is one and the same. It is joined the country over something like the infinitesimal atoms that go to form a molecule, according to the theories of science. There is supposably an infinite number of solid spheres that touch one another at the edges.

So with what we call society. There is in every country neighborhood a ring or circle that infuses itself a little higher in the scale than some others. This spherical atom touches at the rim another atom. Again this second atom joins another in the county town mayhap, where the aristocracy are the families of lawyers and judges. There you have the molecule, and the molecule now touches another molecule in a neighboring large town, and this joins the edge of another in the largest city in the state. In this largest city are some who know some or less intimately some of the real Fifth avenue Four Hundred, whose doings the small aristocrat of the village reads with reverential eyes and something of the spirit of awe with which he would follow the proceedings of the court of heaven. To the person with social ambitions heaven itself would not be more desirable than an assured place among the leaders of fashion and social customs in the country. Whether the aim is worthy the ambition is a question for each to decide for himself.

But nothing is truer than that all cities are connected in the way we mention. To be a part of one of the atoms that form a molecule is to have the possibility of touching the molecule at the top, since in the kinetic theory of matter the molecules are in a state of eternal motion, and there is no telling when any one may come against any other. The law of attraction governs here as everywhere else in the created universe. To get into the upward sweep, associate only with the best circles in your own neighborhood.

Like attracts like. The person who has exquisite manners, cultivation, good temper and good morals is fitted for the highest and best society anywhere. It is a trite truth that here in America all these qualifications are within reach of every human being, even to the getting rid of our national nasal twang and the acquiring of a sweet, clear voice. It is a fact that the voice stamps the breeding infallibly, when perhaps nothing else will. Lady Henry Somerset, who came to Ameriaca to speak on temperance, has a voice which is mentioned in the newspaper reports wherever she goes, so clear, soft and sweet it is. For generations Lady Somerset's ancestors have been taught to speak in such tones, and this musical voice, which is so admired in America, is the result.

The Tilden Library.

Chicago and Cincinnati have free public libraries that are justly an object of pride to the citizens of those towns. New York has none that can compare with them. The late Samuel J. Tilden thought he would supply one, and so take away the reproach of the lack. If New Yorkers in time should lapse into a too lazy, half forgetful, half English, through the great influx of the heavy-witted from Europe now her borders, he did not mean it should be his fault, so Mr. Tilden made a will.

If anybody knew how to make a will it ought to have been Samuel Tilden, the ablest lawyer of his time. But the sequel showed that the wisest make the most fearful messes sometimes. He provided, as he supposed, for a library which should be "widely and substantially beneficial to the interests of mankind." These were his words and the words which partly enabled his heir at law to break this lawyer's will. The courts decreed that the said words expressed indefiniteness of purpose, and the contesting heirs were sustained.

Then, however, as soon as the decision enabled her to do so, one of the successful heirs, Mrs. William A. Hazard, Tilden's grandniece, set aside $2,000,000 out of her share of the estate for the institution that was so near to the old lawyer's heart. So that New York will have the Tilden free library after all.

Part of Andrew Carnegie's practical application of his gospel of wealth is found in the magnificent laboratory he has presented to the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. It is devoted entirely to microscopic work, and its equal in that field is not found elsewhere in this country. By the aid of more than fifty splendid microscopes with which the laboratory is provided, many striking discoveries in the field of bacteriology and pathology may be looked for. One of the most difficult branches to be taught in connection is photomicography, the photographing of minute objects as magnified by the microscope. The labor attached to this is as intricate and delicate as the photographing of a star through a telescope. The adjustments are so delicate that the jar caused by a wagon rattling along the street will destroy the picture.

Men who follow science for its own sake live long. Professor Virchow, the great pathologist, has celebrated his seventieth birthday at Berlin as brilliant intellectually as he ever was, and in health and condition that would be good

EIGHT DEAD IN A MINE.

Killed by a Gas Explosion at Nanticoke, Pa.

SIX OTHERS ARE BADLY INJURED.

Women and Children Wailing and Wringing Their Hands at the Mouth of the Shaft—Bodies of the Dead and Wounded Terribly Mangled and Torn.

NANTICOKE, N.Y., 9—Eight dead and six seriously if not fatally injured. That is a brief description of the havoc wrought by the latest mining disaster raising horror. Shaft No. 1, of the Susquehanna Coal company's mine at Nanticoke, is the scene of those pitiful sights only too familiar by their frequent repetition, excited throngs at the shaft's mouth, bruised, battered and lifeless bodies, wailing widows and otherless children. The disaster was caused by the ignition of a quantity of gas that collected in the shaft, exploded with frightful force mangling as it tearing to pieces the bodies of the unfortunate men at work in the mine.

Cause of the Explosion.

It was at first thought that the accident was caused by the explosion of a safety lamp, the flame from which lighted the deadly vapors, but the lamp explosion theory is generally disbelieved. The gas was undoubtedly ignited by a naked light in the hands of some one of the men.

Names of the Dead.

Following are the names of the dead:

William J. Williams, fifty years old, leaves a widow and four children.

Henry R. Jones, town clerk of Nanticoke, five sons, forty years old, widow and two children.

Thomas Lloyd, driver, eighteen years old.

The critically injured are David Fowell, thirty-two years old, Thomas Thomas, nineteen years old, Howell Jothensai, D. W. Evans and Colin Peters, names unknown.

Pitiful Scenes at the Shaft.

When the news of the disaster reached this town there was great excitement, as it was feared many had been killed, and the relatives and friends of those known to be employed in the mine flocked to the scene. While they waited for news from the shaft the scene was harrowing in the extreme. Women and children ran hither and thither, wringing their hands, wailing and weeping and seeking men's and sympathy from relatives and acquaintances in the crowd. It was soon learned that there were but fourteen men at work in the mine at the time of the explosion. These were all either killed or badly hurt. The injured were in such condition that they could not be removed from the mine, and it is feared will die. The damage to the mine will reach $20,000.

The Story of the Accident.

A party of men went down the main shaft of the mine at noon and through half a mile of workings to hear what is known as the new shaft. They were under Inside Boss William J. Williams, and were to break on opening through from the old workings into a new shaft lately sunk to establish an air current. The gas was very thick, as there was no opening for the current.

About 4 o'clock one of the men, Daniel James, noticed that the safety lamps were getting "full."

"Look at the lamps!" he shouted.

The next instant there was a flash and a roar, and James knew no more until he recovered consciousness at his home.

He Was a Horrible sight.

Although the scene of the accident was half a mile from the foot of the new shaft, the men working there heard the explosion and knew that something unusual had occurred, and one of them was dispatched for oil, stretchers and safety lamps. Then six men set out through the workings.

A quarter of a mile from the scene of the explosion they met Joe Chapelenka, a Pole, laden with a fellow miner, John Nagy, on his back, and hands having been so frightfully burned that it hung in shreds. He was very weak and had ceased part of the way to bear his own weight. The flesh on his fingers was torn away until the bone protruded. When the rescuers reached the spot an awful explosion occurred that fouled the victims scattered in all directions, their bodies blackened, their clothing tattered and mutilated with blood. Huge pieces of timber, masses of coal had been thrown into every conceivable position by the explosion.

William J. Williams, the boss, the head boss, who was a prominent man in the coal regions, was taken home in a carriage. Two men held him, for he was conscious and in the agony of his pain kicked and fought the men near him as they attempted to hold him. He died as he was being taken from the mine. His back was so terribly burned that nearly half of the backbone was laid bare. Assistant General Superintendent Reese believes the accident was caused by the explosion of one of the safety lamps. The men were all experienced miners and every precaution was taken to prevent accidents, he says. It was a bad place, being so far away from the air shaft.

The Ninth Victim Dead.

A later report from the mine than the above says Howell Jothenski, another of the wounded miners, is dead.

It has been definitely ascertained that the explosion was caused by the attempt of one of the miners to change the air current, during which his lamp exploded.

An Association Club for New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—The American association baseball magnates have about decided to have a club in New York. They secured "Jim" Mutrie to look out for their interests here and seem determined to fight the league in its best stronghold.

Governor-elect McKinley in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Major William McKinley is stopping with his brother in this city for a few days to rest himself after a long and victorious campaign in the Buckeye state. The advocate of protective tariff forecasts Republican victory in 1892.

Starver Stratton Hospital.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Starver Stratton on his thirty-fifth day is lusting eagerly for food and the end of his self-appointed fast. He is in fair condition, and will without doubt break the record made by Hazel in this city last winter.

PREFERRED DEATH TO FAILURE.

The Suicide of a Berlin Banker and His Son.

BERLIN, Nov. 9.—Herr Sommerfeld and his son, Felix, the bankers of the firm of Friedlaender & Sommerfeld, who shot themselves, died in the hospital. The impending failure of the firm, which led to the tragedy, was due to the recent suspension of Hirschfeld & Wolf. Many of the principal clients of the firm who had become involved as to the stability of private banking houses made heavy withdrawals. Herr Sommerfeld tried to bridge the trouble by realizing on the firm's investments by forced sales.

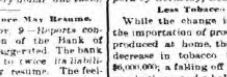
Early in the morning father and son were at their office discussing their crisis. They finally saw that they were hopelessly embarrassed, and fearing that their arrest was impending, they determined to die. Each took a revolver and shot himself in the head. The reports startled the clerks and they rushed into the private office where they found both father and son still alive, but in a dying condition.

A Bank Run is on Corry.

CORRY, Pa., Nov. 9—A run on [illegible] was caused early by a suspension in the Corry National bank. The bank was closed by the order of a bank examiner. The bank's president is T. A. Allen and the cashier Clarence Harmon. The capital stock is $100,000; the surplus $15,500. The deposits are close to $500,000. The bank has a branch at Irvington. The officers say the depositors will get every dollar due them.

The Bank of Florence May Resume.

FLORENCE, Ala., Nov. 9—Reports concerning the condition of the Bank of Florence have been exaggerated. The bank has assets amounting to twice its liabilities and will probably resume. The feeling here is kindly toward the bank and depositors will do all they can to put it on its feet again.



MILLINERY.

Fall and Winter Hats and Bonnets—About Veils.

"The only headgear suitable for tight skirts or pelisses," says one of our great authorities on such things, "is either the 'Gainsborough' or the 'Coulscutlle,'" and, in fact, I have already seen both at one of our head milliner's establishments. The picturesque and becoming Gainsborough we all know, and it is rendered more becoming than ever by being made of velvet instead of felt, which with its large shady brim gives so much softness to the eyes and face. The only trimming for these hats is the ostrich feather. Wings, thanks to fashion's last whim, are out of favor, and long may they continue so, for they are too hard to be becoming. As if not becoming, what use are they in dress? The ostrich feather and marabouts alone are becoming, as feathers, and it is both useless and cruel to kill so many myriads of exotic birds which are neither useful nor ornaments on hats and bonnets, merely for a moment fury whim.

THE NEWEST HATS.

As for the new "Coulscutlle," or Quaker bonnet, intended to be worn with the Directoire coat and woman's coat and cape, it is shaped like an old-fashioned "Cottage" bonnet, but with a brim somes an inch deeper in front. It is made of felt or velvet, and the brim is lined with silk or satin. It has a tuft of feather tips in front of the crown, and peeping out from the edge of the brim, and it has wide strings proceeding from the sides, in downright Quaker style. Is it becoming? I dare not say it is; but is the beginning of something, and if we must have bonnets, it is decidedly more rational than the puff of tet, or wreath of flowers, lately worn as a bonnet.

These are our novelties; besides which we have variations of our summer hats, adapted for autumn, as a sailor, with a wider brim, and the back turned up, and trimmed with bows of ribbon over the turned-up brim, with a smaller bow to match in front.

The plate hat is covered with plush or velvet, and is edged round with a wide band of feather trimming, and has a bow of feathers to match in front, under the brim, and an aigrette rising from the middle of the crown—where the crown should be, at least.

Then there is the half-brimmed hat of long-haired plush, worn like an old fashioned sailor hat, a la Nelson, but flat. This has a bunch of feather tips bending over the front of the brim. It requires fluffy, fair hair to look well.

A pretty mushroom, a capeline hat is of short-haired grey felt. The wide brim is edged round with braid and is bent in front over the eyes, slight, at the back over the neck. The crown is covered with bows and loops of ribbon.

At theatres, weddings, and the like, a wreath of velvet flowers, with a jewelled aigrette, set in a bow of lace, is all that is required. It is an elegant little head-dress nothing more.

Prince's Aid to the Politicians.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 9.—M. H. De Young, chairman of the committee on transportation, has received a letter from the Southern Pacific company saying it would guarantee a round trip rate from Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and points no further east for fifty dollars. San Francisco will pay the traveling expenses of the Republican convention if it will come here.

Consolidation of Albany Newspapers.

ALBANY, Nov. 9.—The last issue of The Morning Express was published to-day. John H. Farrell, proprietor of The Evening Union, having bought out the plant. It will be consolidated with the Union and will appear as the Union-Express. The Evening Times Mr. Farrell's three newspapers will appear as one sheet, known as The Times-Union.

GOLD FROM THE FARMS.

Points of Interest from Secretary Rusk's Report.

ONE YEAR'S INCREASE $700,000,000

The Secretary Says That Amount Will Represent the Value of Our Farm Products for 1891 Above Their Value Last Year—To Make Our Own Sugar.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—The annual report of the secretary of agricultural department estimates the value of the probable increase in agricultural products of the country for 1891 over 1890 at $700,000. During the first three months of the present fiscal year—i. e., July, August and September, the exports in reveals alone have aggregated in value over $76,000,000.

Why Imports Increased, Too.

The increase of $28,000,000 in the imports of agricultural products during the first ten months under the present law is largely that of articles on the free list which do not compete with home production. He notes the serious effect on home prices by the free importation of hides, and congratulates the country on the withdrawal of the prohibition against pork by Germany, Denmark and Italy.

Less Tobacco Comes In.

While the change in rates has checked the importation of products which may be produced at home, the secretary notes a decrease in tobacco from $17,000,000 to $6,000,000; a falling off in foreign barley of nearly three and a half millions; in eggs one and a quarter millions; in horses a falling off of nearly a million and a half, and a gradual decline in the imports of all live stock.

To Keep Out All Live Animals.

The secretary recommends that, unless the British government will remove the unfriendly restrictions against our cattle, the law now in existence prohibiting the importation into the United States of all live animals be enforced. The law has been suspended only as a matter of friendship to foreign governments. Some action against the importation of adulterated coffee and bogus coffee beans is also recommended.

The Middleman Question.

The secretary devotes a paragraph to the middleman and the extent to which he is enabled to absorb a large proportion of the prices paid by the consumers for farm products, thus unduly limiting the profits of the farmer. Admitting the difficulty of the problem, this official points out that a partial remedy is to keep the farmer fully informed in regard to the market values of his wares, and he concludes by stating that it is his earnest desire and intention to extend the work in this direction until every farmer may know the value of his goods before he market them. The secretary emphasizes the value of a greater diversification in our crops to take full advantage of our home market.

To Make Our Own Sugar.

He congratulates the country upon the success attending the practical application at the department experiment station in Kansas of the alcohol process perfected in the laboratory of the department last year for the extraction of sugar from sorgum. The cost of the process is found to be so trifling as to be practically insignificant. "There seems to be no reason," he says, "why we should not therefore look forward with confidence to the day when the $100,000,000 paid by Americans to foreign producers for sugar should be turned into the pockets of our own people."

Quong Wants to Be a Yankee.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 9—Quong Lee, a well known Chinese laundryman of Bridgeport, has begun to make a fight for citizenship. He secured his first papers easily enough, but there is some doubt as to his ability to get his second papers. He has been in business in Bridgeport for ten years and pays taxes on considerable property.

A Laborer Crushed by a Dynamo.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Nov. 9—While unloading a dynamo weighing 5,200 pounds at the Millville Electric Light company's plant the dynamo fell over upon William Small, pinning him fast to the ground. It required twelve men and a derrick to drag it off of him. One of his legs was mashed and he is injured internally.

Boys Arrested as Firebugs.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Nov. 9—Several small fires of supposed incendiary origin have been started in this city this week and the police arrested Joseph Sayres and Frank and Harry Near, all under sixteen years of age, on the charge of arson.

CABLE BREVITIES.

It is reported that one of Dom Pedro's grandsons, Augusto, is aboard a corvette that is expected shortly at Rio. The rumor causes much excitement among Republicans.

Admiral Monti told a committee of young Civilians that he believed Minister Ezzo was doing his utmost to prevent political refugees from plotting against the new government.

Sir John Gorst is to succeed W. L. Jackson, the new chief secretary for Ireland, as financial secretary of the treasury of Great Britain.

The failure of Chevalier Scovel to sing in "Lohengrin" at the Covent Garden theater in London recently, when he gave a young Canadian tenor, Heidmont, an opportunity to score a success.

The food inspector of the Altona district of Germany has been severely chastised from office for having allowed the sale of the diseased pork which has caused so many deaths in Altona from trichinosis.

The German federal council has agreed, on motion of Prussia, to exclude the Austrian thaler from the German currency by declaring it to be not a legal tender.

Captain Younghusband, who was reported as having been murdered by the Russians, is on his way to England.

Signor Crispi, the organ of the Italian ministry of the interior, has published an article declaring the abolition by the government of the law of papal guarantees. This article is incorrect, despite the presidential departure of the pope from Rome.

The Rev. Dr. Chatterbuk, the English divine who was recently charged with swindling a number of his parishioners in a bank out of $1,800, is now charged with a similar swindle amounting to $10,000.

A panic is feared in financial circles in Rio Janeiro, as after the excitement many of the banks cannot make them to pay of depositors all day Sunday.

Minister Fonseca has prohibited the landing of passengers from the steamer Rio Janeiro, which arrived in the harbor of Rio on the 4th inst.

Queen's Farmer's Field Glass

is constructed to meet the wants of those who require a good field glass at a moderate outlay. Every farmer will understand the advantage of being able to quickly see the movements of his stock at some distance point of his farm; to observe insects upon fruit trees, &c. In the QUEEN'S FARMER'S FIELD GLASS he will have an invaluable assistant for these purposes.

CHILI IS COOLING DOWN.

She Wants to Peaceably Settle the Baltimore Affair.

OUR CRUISER WAS NOT BLOWN UP.

Captain Schley Much Annoyed by the False Report That the Angry Valparaiso People Had Knocked His Warship Out of Water with a Torpedo.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 9.—The Chilian government is seeking a friendly solution of the difficulty with the United States over the Baltimore sailors incident.

The Baltimore Not Sunk.

Captain Schley and the other officers of the United States warship Baltimore are indignant at the yarn about its sinking, for there is not the semblance of truth in the rumor. They think that it will have caused a great deal of unnecessary anxiety among their families, friends and the people generally of the United States.

The utmost quietude prevails this morning in this city and in the harbor, where the Baltimore is lying as peacefully as if she were in home waters and nothing had happened to disturb life aboard ship.

Officers to Go Ashore Again.

Her stewards for several days past have gone ashore to do necessary marketing, under the protection of a police guard furnished by Intendente Arlegui. The officers will be granted leave by their captains to land tonight.

Although, as a matter of fact, no threats have been made or any signs been given that violence would be attempted should the American officers appear again on Valparaiso's streets, Captain Schley, in order to be on the safe side and as an act of prudence, had stopped night leave until today.

Captain Schley's Condition.

In reply to a letter sent Captain Schley, asking him to allow the victims of the recent riot to appear before the court of inquiry and tell Judge Foster what they know of the outrages against Captain Schley sent word that the injured men would first have to be entirely recovered in health, and the officers of the Baltimore must be permitted to be present at the inquiry while their men are giving evidence.

Sunday Work on Warships.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 9.—The activity in the Brooklyn navy yard continues. Two hundred of the 2,000 men employed there were at work on the ships on the Sabbath. It is reported that the Minneapolis, Philadelphia, Chicago, Atlanta, Concord and Bennington will be ready for sea in a few days.

A Keeley Patient's Fall.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Nothing has been learned of the whereabouts of John Forgie, the traveling salesman for Wise Brothers, of 54 Leonard street, who has been missing since last Wednesday. Forgie was one of Dr. Leslie E. Keeley's gold cure patients, and he believed he was cured of the thirst for whisky that had enslaved him for ten years. When last seen Forgie had been drinking, and there is every reason to believe that he has returned to his old habits.

She Was Jealous of His Wife.

DENVER, Nov. 9.—Last night Samuel Stalling was shot and killed by his mistress, Lucy Swarthou. The Swarthou woman and Stalling had formed intimate at in Illinois, and when he moved here with his family she followed them. Stalling's wife and children lived in the front rooms of the house, while he lived alone, while he and his mistress lived in the rear. The shooting resulted because Mrs. Swarthou was jealous of Mrs. Stalling.

Why Hoagland Stole.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 9.—The defalcation of E. S. Hoagland, of Ithaca, amounts to $6,700. For several years past he has been employed by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad company as agent. Hoagland has a wife and child, and his theft was caused by the fact that his salary of sixty dollars per month was inadequate to support them in the manner he desired.

New Jersey Wants More Space.

CHICAGO, Nov. 9.—Governor Leon Abbett, of New Jersey, together with several members of the New Jersey state board of World's fair commissioners, are in the city. They came to select a site for the New Jersey state building. Governor Abbett said that his state intends making a most elaborate exhibit, and wants all the space that can be had.

Forest Fires Near Waterbury.

WATERBURY, Conn., Nov. 9.—Terrific forest fires have been raging for the past two days on the mountains near Beacon Falls, killing quite a number of horses. Several farmhouses and buildings at High Rock Grove were threatened. A special train of thirty men was sent from Waterbury to fight the flames. The situation is alarming.

She Got the Drop on Him.

CLINTON, Ia., Nov. 9.—Mary Alley, a pretty girl of Harmon settlement, refused Walter Harmon's attention. He met her today, pulled a revolver and told her she must marry him or die. The girl drew a pistol from her dress and shot him in the arm. The young man gets no sympathy and the young lady is the heroine of the day.

Gone with Mary and $12,000.

HEBRON, Pa., Nov. 9.—Charles Crittenhart, a young man employed as a collector and delivery man for the Weise Produce company, of Klingerstown, has disappeared, taking with him valuable papers and money to the value of $12,000. He took Miss Mary Fletcher with him.

The Rector Was Abused, They Say.

GREENVILLE, N. J., Nov. 9.—The warden and vestry of Grace Protestant Episcopal church of Greenville will at their session of the church trouble, in which they say that their rector has been made the object of "misrepresentation, falsehood and abuse."

Family Shot His Wife.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 8.—Charles R. Yost, a wealthy lumber dealer from Iowa, shot and fatally wounded his wife at the Brooklyn hotel and then shot himself. He will probably recover. The cause of the shooting was his wife's refusal to live with him.

Blasting Convicts Executed.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 8.—Major Vincent, vice president of the Rampore Boalia council, while visiting the prison was attacked by a body of convicts. Troops fired upon the convicts, wounding many. Five of the ringleaders were caught and executed.

Visible Evidence.

He—Ah, I see you're looking at that picture. It was done by a young friend of mine—a poor artist.

She (examining picture)—Well, I should say he was!—Truth.

TO CONFUSE WILLIAM O'BRIEN.

He Will Be Confronted with Parnell's Data of the Boulogne Conference.

DUBLIN, Nov. 9.—Timothy Harrington, in an interview last night, said that he had just come into possession of the original copies of Mr. Parnell's data of the late leader's partaying with the representatives of the Mc'arthy faction at Boulogne. These, Mr. Harrington said, he would cause to be published. He added that the documents would prove very unpleasant reading for Mr. O'Brien and his Liberal friends, and would confirm fully his own and Mr. Redmond's statements of what occurred at Boulogne.

Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Harrington declares, had willfully suppressed letters which would vindicate Mr. Parnell's motives and explain his position. The originals would show that Mr. Parnell's object was to obtain such assurances from the Liberal leaders as would render it impossible for the McCarthyites to break from home rule. Mr. O'Brien really represented the Liberals in the conference and informed them by letter from time to time of the progress of his interviews with Mr. Parnell. The final failure of the conference was not due to the obstinacy of Mr. Parnell, as had been represented, but to the refusal of Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues to give any assurances of their adherence to former pledges.

Mr. Gladstone's letter to Mr. Goschen denying any connection with the conference was, Mr. Harrington said, like most of the Liberal leader's utterances, difficult to understand.

The statement was certainly inaccurate that it was expressly arranged that in the event of the failure of the conference the Liberals might be at liberty to deny having acted in any way in the matter.

The majority given against Mr. Redmond in Cork was, he admitted, a great disappointment. A daily paper in Ireland supported Mr. Redmond, while Dillon and O'Brien, fresh from jail, exerted great influence with their faction. The Parnellites were greatly encouraged by the fact that 2,000 voters had shown that they were not afraid to give open adherence to their principles, in spite of the undue influence and brutal violence of the McCarthyites.

Dublin will soon have a daily paper devoted to the support of the Parnellite cause. Commoner Mahony declared in a speech in Limerick that he would rather lie in a coffin by the side of Mr. Parnell than to unite with the McCarthyites.

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 9.—Early Sunday morning a coal train ran away on the Lehigh Valley road and came down the mountain side at the rate of seventy miles an hour. The crew tried to stop it, but the brakes refused to work. The brakemen and the man then jumped and saved their lives. The engineer, however, remained at his post.

At the foot of the mountain the runaway train collided with another train, smashing the engines and cars of both trains and piling up wreckage to a height of thirty feet. The engineer who had so bravely remained at his post was buried deep in the wreckage, but strange to say he was taken out entirely uninjured.

A Man Drowns a Woman.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 9.—The oyster sloop Minnie was entering this port when the crew saw a man and woman struggling in the water. A boat was put out, but did not reach the pair in time to save them. They picked up two hats, a man's and a woman's. The story is that the man attempted to drown the woman and both went down together. The place where the drowning occurred was off Point No Point.

The Remains of "Lil. H." Removed.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., Nov. 9.—The remains of Helen Hunt Jackson, the famous poetess, known as "H. H.", were removed from Cheyenne Mountain to Ever green cemetery, and the spot will be appropriately marked. The spot where the authoress was buried six years ago had been desecrated by toll gates and become the resort of pleasure seekers.

A Husband and a Fortune for Her.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 9.—Seven years ago Peter Gibbons, who had married Maxine Donnelly, deserted her. Stories came back to her that he had gone to Ireland and died. Mrs. Gibbons has just received a letter from her recreant husband. It says that he was living in San Francisco and was rich and wanted her to come to him. She has decided to do so.

The Mafia in New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 9.—Frederick Murillo, an Italian, says he is sure the Mafia is represented in New Haven, and says he has been warned not to press a case against Archangelo Tucio, who assaulted his wife, under pain of death. Murillo says that Tucio belongs to the Mafia, and has escaped punishment for numerous other crimes by threatening murder.

Mattie Will Marry a Duke.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The announcement of the betrothal of Miss Mattie Mitchell, daughter of Senator John H. Mitchell, of Oregon, to the Duc de la Rochefoucauld has created a flutter in the American colony here. The duke is thirty-eight years of age. The marriage will take place in January.

Parson George on the Stand.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Parson George testified in his own behalf at Catskill, and he says that he will not be the contestant upon the promise that he would only be sent to the Elmira reformatory for the part he took in having the operation performed on Lottie Townsend.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine I ever used. It cured my leg of ulcers after the doctors said it would have to be amputated.—Burton S. Bingham, Middlesex, Vt.—Adv.

CLEVER TACTICS.

The League Men Meeting Their Fences Prior to Action.

Usually at this time of the year, where terms have not yet been agreed upon, managers and players are generally as far apart as the two poles, but this season seems to be an exception to the rule. Clever tactician as they are, the National League magnates have smoothed over all dissensions in their own ranks. The next on the list seems to be making up of night clubs for next year, and the probabilities are that advance money will be thrown out liberally to catch the unwary player. The magnate does not trust the player any more than the player the magnate, and neither one considers the thing as settled until a contract is signed. The average player is in no hurry to sign, knowing the longer he holds out the dearer he becomes to his employers. This year the League magnates are in a hurry, so they can raid the Association camps without fear of retaliation.

A BOXING REFEREE.

An All Around Athlete Who Has a Reputation.

JOHN EckHARDT.

"Johnny" Eckhardt, who has a national reputation as the proper man to have as an official at a fight, is in great demand as a referee at the different boxing tournaments this season. He seems prominent to be one of the greatest in the history of amateur boxing contests. The success of such events can be assured by having Noble and just officials. The duties of a referee call for more than the public conceive. The position at times is a most trying and thankless one. The referee must have a full knowledge of all rules governing such contests, be cool, collected, alert and familiar with the many tricks and devices of the "art" "Johnny" Eckhardt's decisions have met with universal approval. They have always been fair and honest, and in consequence his services are always sought after by managers of both professional and amateur boxing bouts. "Johnny" is a good all around athlete himself. He can spar, run, jump and row well, and is well posted on all rules of the ring. He was a member of the famous four-oared shell crew of the Metropolitan Rowing Club which won so many races in 1887, and is now a prominent member of the National Athletic Club of Brooklyn. He has been a sporting correspondent for five years, and can wield his pen as successfully as he can handle fists, giving out decisions on close fights. "Johnny" is one of the most popular and best natured fellows in athletics, and he has helped to send many an ambitious boxer to the front. He is a good friend and thoroughly honest.

Will the Record Drop?

Mr. Walter T. Chester, one of the most acute and accurate observers of trotting affairs in the country, has the following to say about the chances of the wonderful Nancy Hanks to beat the record of Maud S.: "When I state that Nancy Hanks while Maud S., the chances seem to be entirely in favor of the former becoming the Queen of the Turf. Maud S., was foaled in 1874, and in her four-year-old form trotted in 2:17¼, in a well-authenticated public performance, but one which was not accepted as a technical record. At six years of age she lowered her record to 2:10¾; at seven years to 2:10¾; at ten years to 2:09¾, and at eleven years to 2:08¾. She had no like-shaped track to force her, but all her records were made against time, and on car-fully prepared tracks. On the other hand, Nancy Hanks was foaled in 1886 and as a three-year-old won six races against other horses, besides a walk-over, was beaten only one heat, the first she ever trotted in public, and scored a record of 2:26¾. As a four-year-old, in 1890, she trotted six races, all against other horses, winning all without losing a heat, and lowered her record to 2:14¾. As a five-year-old this season, she has beaten Allerton and Margaret S., for a purse of $5,000, in straight heats, in 2:13, 2:12¾, 2:12, and in a public trial at Cambridge City, Ind., has reduced her record to 2:09¾, and the runner who went with her gave up the ghost at that. The argument on paper is all in favor of Nancy, if she keeps right. There will be many favorable days in October, in all probability, for her to make the supreme effort, and, notwithstanding the formidability of the half second between her and Maud S., it is my expectation that she will overcome it."

Mitchell Breaks a Record.

The fall handicap games of the Detroit Athletic Club on September 29, drew a large crowd, and representative athletes from several outside cities were present. Among those in attendance were teams from the New York, Jersey and Manhattan Athletic clubs. The air was too cold for the best work, but nearly all the events were closely contested. Most of the honors were carried off by New York men. The world's amateur record for throwing a 16-pound hammer complete, with head and handle, was broken by J. S. Mitchell, New York Athletic Club, who held the record himself. His throw was 139 feet, 10½ inches, breaking the previous record by 8 inches. C. A. Queckberner, Manhattan Athletic Club, with 5 feet handicap, was second.

Found Her to a Chair.

Netta Cole, the seventeen year old daughter of Livingston Cole, a farmer, living near Moore's Mills, was left alone in her father's house recently, when a tramp called, asked her for food and while she was getting it, seized her, bound her to a chair and ransacked the house. Then he fled.

When her parents returned the girl described the tramp. Neighbors and the police of this city were notified and a search was made for the tramp, but he has not been caught. Nothing was taken from the house by the tramp. Some think the description given of him by the girl resembles that of John Cotwell, the divorced husband of Mrs. Cole.

GOOD LOOKING WOMEN.

WHERE THE BEAUTIFUL FEMALES OF THE WORLD ARE FOUND.

The St. James' Gazette finds that we live in the most beautiful age of the world.

It strikes me, when I come to regard this theme, pen in hand, that to enumerate the plain women of the world would be an easier task than to reckon up the beauties. On that point an old traveler would speak without hesitation—if he kept his eyes on the civilized races, at least. It might be difficult to compare the ugliness, respectively, of a female Boojesman and a Mosquito Indian squaw, for example. But he would pronounce at once that the Russian is the plainest woman he has seen in Europe—unless, indeed, the Greek of Greece should be put before her—some must be carefail not to say Greek ungnalified, for in the islands and the Turkish ports, where some faint traces of Hellene blood survive, handsome women abound.

It is comes more and more the fashion for wealthy members of this, the true race, to keep a house in the capital, and Athens can show a array of beauties during the winter, no doubt. But I was a summer visitor for two months, and in that time I beheld but one face that could be termed beautiful—a young girl proved to be Hungarian. It is not quite so bad as that in St. Petersburg—where also I resided out of the season—because the ugly was there, and very many ladies of the court have mixed blood.

But plainness is certainly not characteristic of Slavs in general. Polish women rank among the most beautiful in Europe; so, I have understood, do Czechs. The Croats hold their own, and as for the Dalmatian natives, I have often felt inclined to declare that they have no rivals. In riding once from Cattaro to Cettinje, I found the lower stretches of that tremendous mountain-road thronged with women and girls of the lowland—on pilgrimage perhaps.

It seemed to me, struggling through the crush, that every young woman there was charming, and there were hundreds of them. A sad contrast are the Montenegrins, at the summit of that ladderlike road. The sex in Montenegro has many fine qualities, and even virtues, I believe, but all of the masculine cast. In fact, those maids and matrons would pass for rather fine young men elsewhere—sufficiently good looking men, too, in a rough way, if they would only wash; but, regarded from the feminine point of view, they are unbearable failures. If the Russian woman resembles a tame bear, the Montenegrin is a "grizzly" of the Rockies.

Further, I have that same most interesting and delightful Adriatic coast, one learns that the Greek of Greece, who is Albanian, of course, must not be regarded as representing the Hellenic stock fairly in the matter of good looks. I have never visited the Ghegghe Albanians. That is an experience for which I long beyond all others to be obtained in Europe. But doubtless their women are superbly handsome, as travelers assert who have had better luck than I. For there is not a case parallel with the Montenegrin; they are not savages, and the one sex bears its due proportion in beauty to the other.

I have seen something of the Tosk Albanian clans, however—a people inferior to the Ghegghe in every way, physically and morally. Pretty faces are common among them; fine figures and hair, large blue eyes, almost universal. I remember paying a visit to Antivari after the bombardment. Wandering about among the press of dirty Montenegrin soldiers and picturesque Albanians, I came upon a ruined mosque, which had been used, perhaps, as a hospital; it was littered with rags and miscellaneous effects.

Two young girls, in their long blue house dress, were gathering these odds and ends together in a heap. They showed no alarm at my appearance in the doorway, but continued together and stood in a little throng, gravely staring. The action and the look had a curious resemblance to the behavior of mountain sheep under like circumstances. If I had approached the resemblance might have been carried farther, perhaps, for mountain sheep charge promptly when cornered.

One would not expect more than two or three good looking among a dozen English girls. It is my strong impression that every one of these was tall, fair, pink, blue eyed and pretty; several were beautiful. The Ghegghe women must be among the loveliest of Europe, if they be as much superior to the Tosk as the men certainly are. But Albanian good looks vanished by migration to Greece.

The true Hellenic blood, however, has left its trace all through the Balkan peninsula. Even in Greece, they allege, there are a few secluded districts where the divine beauty of old survives, and I am ready to credit it, for in the Evzone battalions, recruited among the mountain youth, perfect faces of the classic cast and tall, supple figures combined like that of the Apollo may be seen sometimes. The most famous of those Hellenic refugees is a valley in the neighborhood of Cape Matapan containing 200 households, among whom, as enthusiasts declare, all the gods and goddesses of Olympus and all the finest statues of antiquity may be matched.

In Servia and Bulgaria also one notes a girl here and there whose regular and graceful beauty is quite startling among her dull and stolid kindolk. I make no doubt that this is an example of "throwing back," as fanciers say; the Hellenic blood asserting itself through Romanian good looks are deservedly renowned, but that is an Italian type.

Of Circassians I have nothing to say. No seldom nowadays one meets them in the bazaars of Stamboul, in the Valley of Sweet Waters, or even, in carriages of course, passing along the Grand Rue of Pera, almost as lightly veiled as a prudish Christian beauty. But whenever I have been able to observe them, their faces were so plastered with white lead, or something as opaque, that one could scarcely judge the features of a clown at Drury Lane.

Most persons who have visited Egypt may be surprised to hear the Coptic race, once among the most beautiful of races. But those who took part in the scurry to Cairo after Tel el Kebir had a unique opportunity of judging. Coptic women of the lower class are at least as much secluded as their Moslem sisters, or were under the old state of things.

Briefly, speaking from a very wide experience, my impression is that the most beautiful women of the world are the Sikh and that is, the highest average of regularity in feature, charm of expression and symmetry of figure is observed among them. But perhaps one must be an old traveler to disregard complexion. I have give as far as to think the golden bronze of the Sikh girl at least as agreeable to the eye as our lilies and roses.—An Old Traveler in Pall Mall Gazette.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

Mr. Bowser Gets Another of His "Streaks" On.

All husbands are "streaky." They will run along all right for a week or two as good as pie, and then all of a sudden, and with no valid excuse, they will break out in the most surprising manner. When Mr. Bowser left the house after lunch the other day he was in great good humor and stopped to say:

"I think I'll stop and get tickets for the theater tonight, and we'll put in an enjoyable evening."

When he returned at 6 he ascended the steps with a scuff; scuff; scuff; unlocked the front door, gave a kick and made his way into the back parlor to growl:

"Mrs. Bowser, do you pretend to run this house on a system?"

"Why, what is wrong, dear?" she queried in reply.

"There's lots of things wrong! I had scarcely left the office when this overcoat button came off. I laid this coat off the 5th of last May, and you've had five months to secure that button."

"But I didn't know it was loose. Why didn't you tell me?"

"Why haven't I told you 10,000 other things that ought to be done! There are wives who glance at their husband's clothing once or twice a year and discover what repairs are needed. I want a darning needle and a piece of string."

"Yes, I don't see the button on."

"No; I'll do it myself. I don't want to take up your valuable time."

And despite Mrs. Bowser's entreaties and protestations he threaded the needle with a piece of string and sat down and sewed on the button. He got it an inch out of line with the buttonhole, of course, and of course it wouldn't have stayed five minutes in any event, but he had carried his point. When he had laid the coat aside he asked:

"Have we got a brad awl and a piece of waxed end in the house?"

"I don't think so. What do you want of them?"

"To mend my suspenders, of course. I hadn't got 100 feet from the house this noon when it busted on me, as usual. If there's another house in the United States run like this one I'd like to hear of it and go and sit down on the doorstep for half an hour. Perhaps I can repair it with a piece of clothesline until I can get down town again."

"But you can't blame me, Mr. Bowser," she said.

"Oh, of course not; you are not to blame for anything!"

"But how did I know your suspender was ready to break?"

"That's all right, Mrs. Bowser! I'll get a piece of clothesline or barbed wire and make repairs, and you needn't worry at all! There are wives and wives."

"Are we going to the theater?" she asked, as he began pacing up and down the room with his hands under his coat tails.

"What!" he shouted in a voice which jumped the cat out of the room.

"Are we going to the theater?"

"Theater! Woman, have you gone crazy? Mrs. Bowser, look a-there, and then talk theater to me!"

He unlaced one of his shoes and kicked it off, and there at the end of his big toe was a hole about as big as a nickel.

"I was intending to go to the theater," he said as he stood and pointed at the hole, "but I can't now. Under this evening I have got to stay home and darn my socks. That hole there has started a corn on my toe this very day!"

"Mr. Bowser, those socks were brand new yesterday morning when you put them on!" exclaimed Mrs. Bowser with a good deal of energy.

"Oh, of course! I probably cut that hole with the shears! I want a darning needle and some string or something. As long as I've got to take care of my clothes through the rest of my life I might as well begin tonight."

Mrs. Bowser protested, but he threaded a darning needle with a piece of red string and used up about eight feet of it in darning the hole. He appeared to be growing good natured, and she ventured to ask:

"Aren't we to go to the theater tonight?"

"If we get through in time we may."

"Get through with what?"

"Mrs. Bowser," he said, as he removed his coat and turned his back, "look at the back of my vest!"

"I see it, but what's wrong?"

"Wrong! wrong! Is there a buckle there? Put on your glasses and tell me if you can find a buckle anywhere on the back of my vest."

"No, I don't see one, but this is the first time you have called my attention to it."

"Exactly. What was the use? That buckle busted off three years ago last Thanksgiving day, and yet you haven't noticed it! Is there a spare buckle kicking around the cellar or hanging up in the garret? If not, I suppose I can beat the stores open and get it up to answer."

"You only got that vest three months ago, Mr. Bowser, and the tailor never put a buckle on!" she exclaimed, as she pulled at the strap.

"And this coat, Mrs. Bowser," he went on, regardless of her protests, "feel in this pocket! There's a hole there large enough to let a cocoanut through! I've known it for years and years, and I've been waiting to see if you would fix it. Have we got a piece of oilcloth and about half a yard of old Brussels carpet lying around?"

"Why didn't you tell me about it?"

"Tell you! Must a husband be eternally telling his wife about these things? What's a wife for? What are her duties? What should a feud, true wife delight in? Button off—hole in my sock—no buckle on my vest—hole in my pocket—two buttons lose on my vest—buttonholes all torn out in my shirt! Woman! Not this evening, Mr. Bowser! You can go, but I haven't time. After dinner I've got to get the hammer, saw, pincers, awl, file, brace and drill, a package of rivets, screwdriver, gimlet and a lot of glue and see if I can't repair some of the damages and get myself in shape to go to the office tomorrow. You can go and you'll probably enjoy the play and have a good time, but I shall be unavoidably detained at home—unavoidably detained, Mrs. Bowser!"—M. Quad in New York World.

Some of His Jokes.

Fashions in Dogs.

Now the dog days have come to an end it is appropriate to say something about ladies' pets. Little dogs have had their day and the taste now is for big dogs. There is more sense in big dogs than little dogs, and more sense in having them as companions. The helpless little creatures that ladies used to fondle to the despair and envy of their lovers—sad dogs—were certainly not useful and scarcely ornamental. Just now ladies are going about with St. Bernards, Great Danes, Pyrenees, fox terriers, bull terriers and collies—dogs which are well calculated to keep the timid masters at a respectful distance. Collies seem to have become fashionable because the Princess of Wales is rather fond of them. She generally has a collie with her when she goes out driving.

This Season's Petticoats.

White muslin petticoats have given place to colored skirts of silk, or of the less costly moire cotoone, flannelette or muslin. They are two yards and a quarter wide at the foot and are close gored at the top to fit the figure smoothly in front and on the hips, all the fullness being adjusted at the back by a drawing string; they are trimmed with one or two scanty frills of scalloped embroidery or of cambric tucks and insertion above a hem. Short underpetticoats of muslin or cambric are closed in the back, the front being faced like a yoke and the back furnished with a drawing string.

—The Democrats will hold their convention this evening.

—The first concert of the Melopia will be early in December.

—The Union county court adjourned yesterday until to-morrow morning.

—Mr. D. D. Scheneck's new milk wagon, "The Alpine," is a handsome vehicle.

—The Borough Council will meet in adjourned session next Friday evening at eight o'clock.

—Captain of Police Grant was out for a short time yesterday afternoon after his serious illness.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will hold its regular mid week meeting Thursday evening at eight o'clock.

—The members of the Royal Arcanum held a meeting in the Exempt Firemen's Association rooms last evening.

—A devotional meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. will be held this Tuesday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

—The Finance Committee of the borough Council held a meeting last evening and revised the borough finances.

—Mr. J. A. Goodhue will conduct the devotional meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A., this evening at 7.30 p. m.

—T. T. C. Crain, City Chamberlain of New York, will speak to men in the Trinity Reformed church Sunday afternoon next at 4.15 o'clock.

—The young man who was arrested in North Plainfield for loaning money at usury, was last evening fined five dollars and costs by Justice Crossley.

—Theodore Johnson, colored, died suddenly at his home in Fairhill's alley yesterday afternoon. His remains were removed to Terrill & Cole's undertaking establishment.

—J. W. Anderson of Plainfield and Geo. Dufresne of Elizabeth will run a three mile race for a purse of $50 and the championship of New Jersey, Monday evening, Nov. 16th, at the Crescent Rink.

—At a meeting of Queen City Lodge, No. 226, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, held last evening, two candidates for membership were initiated and four applications for membership were received.

—Ebell's popular store is well patronized, as ladies have but little trouble in finding what they want there, and are always sure to get the best article at the lowest price. His stock is unusually large just now.

—Plainfield is up in arms against the "Big Six" combine, if the attendance at the Republican primaries last week is any criterion. Each ward gives promise of the utter overthrow of this combination.—Elizabeth Journal.

—Owing to some repairs being made to the gas main on Crossley place, yesterday, a number of the residences of that thoroughfare were in darkness last night. As gas was concerned, kerosene lamps were resorted to.

—All old members of the Y. M. C. A. bowling section and others interested are requested to apply at once at the Association Rooms and see whether they have been enrolled under the new list that has been prepared. There will be no bowling to-night.

—The case of Timothy McCarthy vs. The Central Railroad Company is set down for trial before Justice Nash and a jury this afternoon. Mr. McCarthy sues for $50 damages for the burning of his barn through the alleged carelessness of the Central Railroad Company.

—In the guild, the temperance evangelist spoke to a crowded house at Reform Hall last evening. His theme was not only humorous but effective, as was shown by the fact that thirty signers were added to the pledge roll. He will be there again to-night. Everybody welcome.

—All Christian men whether members of the Y. M. C. A. or not are earnestly requested to attend the meeting for prayer of the Association rooms this evening at eight o'clock. Active members of the Association are especially urged to be present. Mr. George S. Beebe will conduct the meeting.

—Yesterday afternoon Acting-Captain of Police Lynch took James Emmons to the county jail to serve out a thirty days' sentence imposed by City Judge Cadington for drunkenness and disorderly conduct and William Gilles to serve out a sixty days' sentence imposed in the city court for shooting at a hen-fowl.

The Boiler Bursted.

The steam boiler, used in connection with the range in Laing's Hotel on West Front street, bursted at about ten o'clock yesterday morning. One of the employes of the place narrowly escaped being badly scalded by the hot water which was scattered about the room. The report from the explosion could be heard a block away. No one was injured.

THE CITY CONVENTION.

A SPLENDID TICKET NOMINATED BY THE REPUBLICANS.

Messrs. Rufus K. Case, E. N. Erickson and Herman Weber for Councilmen-at-Large, and S. C. Lounsbury for School Trustee, Among Others.

The Republicans held their city convention last evening to nominate candidates for the various city offices.

Mr. J. B. Dumont was chosen chairman, and Mr. C. Arthur Bayson, secretary.

The forty-six delegates, full quota, responded to roll call.

Nominations were called for Councilmen-at-large.

The First Ward had no nominations to make.

The Second Ward nominated Rufus K. Case.

The Third Ward, ex-Councilman Eric N. Erickson.

The Fourth Ward, Herman Weber.

There being no opposition the vote was on motion cast by the secretary, and Messrs. Case, Erickson and Weber were declared the unanimous choice.

The following were renominated unanimously:

For Assessor—(three years), Mr. Joseph A. Hubbard.

For Collector—John Johnson.

For City Treasurer—Alexander Titsworth.

For Chosen Freeholders—J. Frank Hubbard and Andrew Vanderbeek.

For Commissioner of Appeals J. Manning Vermeule and J. Fred MacDonald.

For School Trustee there were several candidates named as follows:

First Ward—Dr. Olin L. Jenkins.

Second Ward—Ex-Councilman Henry B. Newhall.

Third Ward—Hon Jacob Kirkner.

Fourth Ward—Mr. Fred. C. Lounsbury.

Mr. Kirkner, when the nominations were made, arose and said:

"Gentlemen—I have served as a member of the Board of School Trustees for twenty years, and think it about time I was allowed to retire. When a man has served the public faithfully for twenty years, I think he ought to be exempt from further service. I have been honored with the presidency of the Board for the past nine years, and I have always tried to do my duty for the best interests of the whole people. Before Dr. Stillman died he asked me to remain in the Board, if the people so willed it, until our public schools were firmly established. They are firmly established now. The office is an important one and there is more work than is generally known. The other members are able men with the interests of the school at heart. I, for honorable reasons as you have, but my business requires my time, and I cannot serve any longer. I therefore beg leave to decline in favor of ex-Councilman Newhall, who I know will make a most excellent trustee."

Dr. Jenkins declined in favor of Mr. Fred. C. Lounsbury, whom ex-Councilman E. B. Clark had nominated in a clever speech, as the candidate from the Fourth Ward, which he said had not had any one in the Board for fifteen years.

The vote by ballot was cast for, by ballot, the vote resulting in favor of Mr. Lounsbury, 26 to 20, and he was on motion declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

A Committee of Five, consisting of John B. Dumont, chairman, H. F. B. Huntsman, from the First Ward; H. C. Squires, from the Second; J. W. Murray, from the Third, and E. B. Clark from the Fourth, were on motion, chosen a committee to fill any vacancies which may occur.

The convention then adjourned.

There was a general handshaking after adjournment, and every one felt happy. It was certainly a very harmonious convention.

BOYS' CLUB ENTERTAINMENT.

John Cheshire and the Mendelssohn Quartet.

Recreation is necessary to keep in tone our mental and physical energies. We get tired in this work-a-day world and without something to turn our thoughts away from weary bodies our abilities would wane and our activity fail. Is there anything more restful than good music? A. R. Hawes in Musical Magazine says: "Music has a destiny as a last civilizer, reformer, health giver, work inspirer and purifier of man's life. Have we never known an invalid to forget pain and weariness under the stimulus of music? Have you never seen a tired child, fretful, peevish, made glad an alertness and vigor take possession of the whole frame, and animation succeed to apathy? What does this mean? It means that music attacks the nervous system directly, reaches and arouses where physic and change of air can neither reach nor arouse."

The first concert this season takes place on Thursday evening, November 12th, at 8.15 o'clock in the Casino, when Mr. John Cheshire, the very prince of Harp performers, will visit Plainfield for the first time. From the first touch upon the golden wires the audience will be enraptured. Melody will be represented too in the Mendelssohn quartet, and the smooth, flowing, sonorous tones of these male voices will be, what they ever have been, a satisfying, restful, relaxation.

The concert is for the benefit of the Industrial Training Department of the Plainfield Boys' Club, and all advocates of this form of education should help to insure a crowded house for our talented musical friends.

Let us give them a royal welcome. For tickets see advertisement elsewhere.

For years Mrs. C. L. Seaver, of Birmingham, Conn., suffered from indigestion. Nothing helped her permanently until Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy."—Adv.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE THIRTY-SECOND MEETING HELD LAST EVENING.

Smith Collapsed by Councilman Ginna When he Undertook to Deny the Article in Yesterday's "News" by Which the "Combine" Were Said to Have Been "Scared Off."

The City Common Council met in adjourned session last evening. It was precisely eight o'clock when the meeting was called to order. Besides the president Councilman Ackerman, Ginna, Johnston, Moffett, Roberts, Sees and Spangenberg responded to roll call. Councilman Gallup and Hetfield were absent, but were said to be in the building. On motion the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with.

Mr. Sees moved to adjourn for one week.

President Smith before putting the motion said he wished to pronounce untrue an article published in The News of last evening in reference to the redistricting of the city. He said he had not seen the article but had been told of it. He said the meeting was not called for that purpose nor had the "combine" ever thought of such a thing. They did no business, nevertheless, and the reason is explained in another column.

Mr. Ginna arose and stated that articles similar to the one published in The News had also appeared in the New York morning papers.

Mr. Smith said that he had not seen them.

Mr. Ginna said that such statements were published, nevertheless.

Mr. Smith said he read an article published in The World of yesterday morning that was misleading and did not cover the facts. He finally admitted that there was some talk about redistricting. Continuing, he said, "We all know where the articles published in the New York papers emanate from."

The meeting then adjourned, and the report spread that The News had again scored a victory for the city against the schemers.

PUBLIC LIBRARY.

A Meeting of the Directors Held Saturday Night.

Special meeting of the Board of Directors was held on the evening of the 7th at the Library building. All were present except Mr. Dumont and Mr. Talmadge.

The minutes of the meeting of Aug. 5th and Sept. 8th were approved.

The communication from the librarian and petitions from the citizens requesting the privilege of the library for persons nearer the business centres, etc., were referred to the library committee with power to establish such stations as they might see fit, provided no extra expense be incurred.

On motion the offer of some second-hand books for purchase by the library committee was referred to the library committee.

On motion the librarian was instructed to grant the privileges of the library to persons who are temporary residents of the city for the period of a month or more. No more than fifty copies of the books shall be granted by some responsible citizen.

The following bills were approved and ordered paid:

The librarian's report for Oct. was read, approved, and ordered on file.

On motion the following bills for which warrants had been drawn and signed by the president and treasurer were approved.

Wm. H. Williams, papers, etc., Sept.	11.40
S. H. Allen, salary and sundries...	40.95
Miss Adams, salary.....	50.00
Thos. Scribner, Jr., books.....	45.95

The treasurer reported $48.27 as deposited in the First National Bank as the amount received from dues, etc., for the last three months.

Moved that the matter of trees on the library grounds as to cutting down, trimming, etc., be referred to the executive committee with power.

On motion the meeting then adjourned.

WM. M. STILLMAN, Secy.

Business Meeting of the P. Bi. C.

A regular monthly business meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club was held last evening in the club house on Sycamore street.

Mr. Louis Walz occupied the chair. Secretary David Lenox read the last meeting's minutes, which were approved as read.

Miscellaneous business received attention and Judge W. R. Cottington and Mr. F. S. Andrews were unanimously elected, and A. Hoagland was elected members of the club.

An instructor in light gymnastics will, within a few weeks, be at the club house Saturday nights.

The Crescents Defeated.

The Crescent League bowling team of this city visited Elizabeth last evening and rolled a game with the Elizabeth Athletic Club's team. The game was very exciting throughout although the Crescents were defeated by two hundred pins. The score was:

A FOX HUNT NEAR HOME

THE MEET OF THE ESSEX COUNTY HOUNDS AT FANWOOD.

An Exciting Run Witnessed by Plainfield People.—Americans Compared With Britons in this Most Exhilarating Sport.

Saturday was a great day for Fanwood. While it was yet early in the afternoon, victorias, phætons, dog-carts and all manner of traps could be seen rolling in that direction, peopled with society folk from Plainfield, Westfield, and the Oranges. For be it known that the master of the Essex county hounds had named Fanwood as the place of meeting for Saturday's run. By half-past three there had gathered in front of the club house on South avenue a concourse of equipages, horsemen, wheelmen and pedestrians, while an air of animated expectancy pervaded the assembled throng.

The scene was thoroughly English! There sat the master of the hounds, astride a thoroughbred, and surrounded by scarlet-coated sportsmen, whose horses pawed the macadam and pricked their trembling ears, impatient to be off. Slowly moving up and down the avenue was the huntsman, cocked jauntily on a pony, his healthy hued cheeks showing marks of the wind and weather he had faced for many a day. The hounds gathered about his horse or frolicked forward on the grassy sidings of the road, the well appointed whips, in their scarlet coats, keeping the pack together, and suppressing their enthusiasm as best they could. A faultlessly attired groom, whose perfectly formed legs must ever guarantee him a situation, was tossing-riding two fractious horses, while dismounted riders stood on either side of a low victoria and exchanged chaff and banter with a pretty girl, who drew the reins over a pair of bright bays. Her heightened color and sparkling eyes betokened the keen enjoyment she was taking in the scene and hour. Belated sportsmen, their uniforms hidden under covert coats, clattered up in dog-carts. Everywhere was motion, bustle, and confusion, and the surrounding trees, herbs, and bushes, painted in deep crimson and ochre, were veiled in the vague yellow indistinctness of a perfect Indian Summer day.

And now a jerk of the head of the master of the hunt acted as a signal to move. There was a gathering of reins and a thrusting more firmly on of hats, and equestrians, dogs, and carriages fell into an irregular line en route for the cover. Sweeping west along the avenue the cavalcade rined south on the Terrill road, the whole moving party, leaving the highway, veered to the right into a large grass field, and the hounds were at once coursing over a fine sound swards with heads down and nostrils snuffing for the well-known scents.

It is hardly necessary to say that a magnificent full brushed fox burst into view, but the fact is in this hunt evidently none was expected, not even a bag one. The farmers of Westfield township do not preserve foxes, nor do they, we may imagine, look favorably on a pack of fox hunters galloping over their fields and breaking down their fences. As this special hunt progressed it became plain that the course had been marked by dragging an unused bag. The dragging had been done early in the morning, apparently no efforts had been made to avoid fences, ditches, or sunken lanes. The hounds pushed ahead, the pack spreading as they sniffed about, now this way and now that, until after running and scrimmaging for some minutes a low snatch of a whimper was heard. Twang! twang! sounded the horn. A melodious cry issued from the pack and the hounds went tearing away with a fine burst of speed, everyone of them seeming to have it. The men had their horses well in hand and were at once sailing in the wake of the dogs, while the carriages on the road bumped and jolted along in a cloud of dust in an effort to keep within sight view. The field flew the first fence close together, two of the horses refusing the jump, however, their riders, after several vain efforts to force them over being obliged to take ignominiously to the road. On went the hunt at a great pace, streaming over the pastures, the hounds packing well together apparently as eager as if they had a great bagging brown fox in plain sight. As fence after fence was taken the best hunters forged ahead and the line lengthened. A low lane was crossed, necessitating a double jump, then the hounds turning sharply to the left crossed the Terrill road, the huntsman flying over its fences in a breakneck fashion just in front of the caravan of equipages. Then away they went in the direction of Rahway, skimming fence after fence, until the scarlet coats finally disappeared in the golden haze of the far distance. And that was the finish of the run, for the cavalcade was now left hopelessly behind, and nothing remained for the visitors but to jog soberly home.

There may be no future for American fox-hunting, and the endeavor to introduce it into this country may be futile, but the fact remains that American young men can ride after the hounds fully as well as can Britons. Anyone familiar with an average English hunting country knows that its hawn-like fields, its stone walls and its timber are as nothing compared to the ragged rail fences, deep banks, and rough country over which Saturday's hunt rode. And no one could view the scene described above without admiring the pluck, brawn, and bravery—to say nothing of the excellent seats—of the members of the Essex County hunt. May there soon call another meeting this side of the mountains.

THAT "BUSTED" SCHEME

MEN OF CHARACTER DECLINE TO RUN.

The Reason why the Alleged Independent Ticket Don't Materialize, and the Plot to Make New Wards was Abandoned.

Before the meeting of Common Council last night Combine Smith and Spangenberg had a conference. They talked, we understand, about the once proposed citizens' ticket, and the redistricting project. Spangenberg is said to have remarked that he would oppose the redistricting scheme because it would ruin his chances of re-election. He is really deluded with the idea that he is to be re-elected. Poor deluded mortal. He would oppose the scheme as altered to take in the whole city, now on work of confining it to the Fourth Ward was found to be impracticable as shown in yesterday's News.

That settled it. Without Spangenberg's vote, the scheme could not be carried through anyhow, and The News article showed that it could not be legally done even with it. So Mr. Smith got up as President of Council and denounced The News' article as a lie from beginning to end. He admitted that he had not read it, but took his information second hand. Of course when Smith, with his record, says a thing is a lie, he expects to be believed. The News don't consider that half the time Smith knows what he is talking about. The News got its information from true and worthy sources — from men who have the confidence of this community as men of highest integrity, men who are always sober, honest and truthful. Their information did not come from men noted only for such treacherous natures and all that is base and unmanly that any one will trust them.

The story spread around town last night that The News had scared off the combine in their last desperate scheme to hold on to the power they had abused. But the story did no such much credit. It was Spangenberg's selfish fear that did it.

Now as to the little scheme about that Independent Ticket. A citizen of the Third Ward who knows something about it has volunteered the information to a News reporter.

"Combine" Smith sent a messenger to my house the night of the Democratic primary to meet him and Mr. Curtis that night at the City Hotel on some important business. The same message was sent to Mr. Curtis. At the City Hotel I was informed that Mr. Curtis and Smith were at Hetfield's office and went over there. Smith was trying to persuade Mr. Curtis to run on an Independent ticket. Mr. Curtis said he was a Republican and declined to have anything to do with such a dirty game.

Why Smith sent for our informant, he says he does not know, as he is a Republican straight, first, last and always.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. J. Linn Edsall is slowly recovering from his recent illness, though the fever has not entirely left him.

About seventy couples enjoyed a German at the Casino last evening. The affair concluded with a banquet.

Mr. A. T. Shawson and family moved into their new home, recently erected on Ninth street to-day. They have been staying at the Albion.

Messrs. Charles Smith, Fredrick Sanford and John Cowperthwaite of this city went hunting yesterday and returned last evening with seventeen rabbits.

Borough Councilman Charles Sebring's new four-story building on North avenue, opposite the Park Hotel, is rapidly nearing completion and will be one of the prettiest on that thoroughfare.

Mrs. Rachel Penfield is one of the foremost workers in the New Jersey division of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Years ago she passed the two score years and ten milestone of her life, but age has not dimmed her ardor or enthusiasm. She lives in Plainfield. Her official connection with the W. C. T. U. is that of corresponding secretary of the State society. She writes with a trenchant pen in defense of the temperance cause. To the temperance workers of this state she needs no introduction, for she is personally known to "Mother" Stevens.

In speaking of George Thatcher's minstrels, the New Brunswick Home News has the following to say concerning Mr. Ed. Marble, who is well-known in this city: "Mr. Ed. Marble, the author of 'Tuxedo,' has a good claim to the effectiveness of theatre goers. His father, Dan. Marble, was one of the great favorites in the days of stock companies. His mother was Anna Warren, a sister of William Warren, the veteran comedian for many years. Dan. Marble's great character was Sam Patch, and he was probably the first star in the first rank drama the world ever saw. In the play of Sam Patch there was a realistic scene of Niagara Falls, and the stage was covered with water, into which Sam jumped. Mr. Marble has been for years interlocutor in the best minstrel companies, previous to which time he was in the legitimate."

ABOUT A PLAINFIELDER.

How Dr. R. Heber Newton Speaks of Mr. Stimpson.

To the Editor of the New York Times:

Will you allow me space to plead, in a few words, the cause of a wise and noble educational institution, of which my friend Mr. Stimpson will be by repeated communications its heroine?

The Institute for Artist Artisans, under the charge of Mr. John Ward Stimpson, is now entering its fifth year of rapidly growing influence—needing only another year's growth to be placed, in all probability, in a self-supporting position. This school seeks to give to young men and young women a complete and thorough course of instruction in the principles and methods of art, as applied to industry. The need of such an institute everybody knows who knows the rapid increase of industrial arts in our country in various lines, and the general neglect of education in industrial art throughout our country—a neglect unparalleled in any great country of Europe.

Until of late we have had to import the skilled workmen for these artistic industries, to the reproach or our American civilization. With a fair artistic provision of workmen for such industries they would multiply on our shores, to the enrichment of our Nation in more ways than those admeasured by the dollar. A love of the beautiful would be diffused through the homes of the people, wherein now "cheap and nasty" things make domestic life unattractive and unaggestive of aught beyond the material necessities of existence. We might make it possible that every common utensil of domestic use should please the eye and refine the mind—as once such things did among the Greeks. How far his school go toward awaking and brightening the brains of Gotham's youth knows who knows the barrenness, the ugliness, and the craftiness of the average common-place home to-day and who understands how hungry the human soul ever is for beauty

Three kegs of powder and a rifle will buy a girl of any size or style of personal charms on the ivory coast, west Africa.

The treasury department seems as a loss to tell what articles are antiquities and therefore to be admitted into the country free of duty. If the treasury wants to find out what antiquities are it has only to take a look around the departments at Washington and inspect some of the old office holders.

The most cruelty in the "stitch, stitch, stitch," business in cities is practiced by the sweaters, who contract with a large firm to make garments at a given price. Then they sublet the work to poor women in quarters and tenement houses and squeeze these victims of ignorance and weak will down to the last, lowest rates. One large Chicago house has taken a stand against the sweater. It gives out no clothmaking to sweaters.

A century and a quarter ago, before the United States was thought of, when the most radical liberal and some outer world so much have expected the ocean to open and swallow all the continent as that the American colonies would ever be anything else than a loyal dependency of the British crown, then it was that the Methodist church on this side of the Atlantic was founded by a handful of plain people in a little room in New York city. It was the starting of the John Street church, the first Methodist congregation in America. The denomination now has over a million members and nobody knows how many million dollars, and the old John Street Methodist church in New York lately celebrated its one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary.

The old goes out and the new comes in. Time out of mind Hebrew men have worshiped in their synagogues with covered heads, and the stranger who visited a Jewish house of devotion always took his hat off and slyly put it on again as soon as he discovered his mistake. But some of the Jewish young men have grown restive under the old custom, and from time to time have sought to shake it off and be permitted to remove their hats in church, like other men. In Cleveland the innovation has at length been successful in one congregation. It was decided by vote, after a warm discussion, that hats should come off in the synagogue, but still those who wished to keep them on might do so, which was a roundabout way of telling the young men they might take their hats off if they wanted to and would not bother the old gentlemen.

American Naval Apprentices.

Lieutenant A. B. Wyckoff, of the United States navy, writes for Scribner's a paper which will be full of information to youths who aspire to become American man-of-war's men. At Coaster's Harbor island, near Newport, R. I., is the United States training ship for seamen in our navy. The officers for the navy are educated at Annapolis, Md. The best of the seamen trained at the station and on ships are eligible to hold petty offices among their fellow seamen, with more privileges and better pay, after taking courses prescribed for them in gunnery, electricity and torpedo management.

There are two few enlisting stations for naval apprentices, in the judgment of Lieutenant Wyckoff. There are receiving ships at the navy yards of the Atlantic coast, and at Erie, Pa. The Michigan is the vessel at Erie, the Minnesota is the one for New York city. Boys that enlist at any of these places are sent to the training station at Coaster's Harbor island. The naval apprentice remains at the station at least six months. While there he receives instruction in English, gunnery and seamanship. Then he goes off for a cruise on an old fashioned sailing warship to learn to be a sailor. He has two cruises of six months each—one in summer to Europe, the other in winter among the West Indies islands. During this year he is exercised in all the drills that give a young sailor health, muscular strength and agility. From the training ship the youth is transferred to the regular man-of-war, a cruiser. Here he learns what modern naval warfare really is, and has besides the splendid physique and quickness he obtained on the sailing vessel. Thence till he is twenty-one he remains in the service.

Boys may enlist as naval apprentices from the ages of fourteen to eighteen, inclusive. They must pass a physical examination to show that they are sound and must know how to read and write. If accepted, the youth signs an agreement to remain in the service of the government till he is twenty-one. He then enters at the training station and receives clothing. He also gets nine dollars a month and his food. At the training station, after a time, he may get from two dollars to eleven dollars a month if he is worthy. After cruising six months on a ship his pay may be again advanced to nineteen dollars a month, and at the close of a year of such service to twenty-four dollars a month. If the examining board recommend him. The boys are thoroughly well treated and have excellent food, with plenty of time for recreation. The recruits that make the most desirable men, the most considered, most dependable by the naval authorities are youths from the farms and agricultural districts of the country.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS

Three Cities That Want the National Conventions.

FORAKER MAY DEFEAT SHERMAN.

Ohio's Ex-Governor Is Making a Strong Fight and Has the Press with Him. Mills, of Texas, Seems the Strongest Candidate for the Speakership.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Republican national committee, which meets in this city Nov. 23, will fix the time and place for holding the next Republican national convention. There is a report that the president objects to Chicago on the ground that during the last convention the people and the newspapers of that city did all they could to boom Judge Gresham for the nomination. Under these circumstances it is not improbable an eastern city will be selected.

Several Other Claimants.

San Francisco is making a strong fight for the honor, and New York has just appeared as a factor in the fight.

The Claims of Chicago.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—At a meeting of prominent Republicans a resolution was adopted urging the Republicans of Chicago to use all reasonable efforts to secure the next Republican national convention for this city. Local Democrats are also after the Democratic convention.

Governor Hill and the Legislature.

ALBANY, Nov. 10.—The boards of supervisors meet to-day in the sixty counties of the state to canvass the election boards.

"I base our claim of a majority in the next legislature on the facts of the election, which will be shown when the official count is completed," said Governor Hill today. "We do not claim anything beyond what is in exact accordance with the returns.

"We propose to have every point connected with the disputed senatorial districts carefully examined and determined entirely on its merits. There is a weight of testimony in favor of the election of Mr. Osborne in the Fifteenth district. The strictest investigation is being made in regard to the election in the Sixteenth district, and also in the Eighteenth.

"And there are evidences of gross violations of the ballot law in the senatorial election in the Twenty-fifth district, where the plainest requirements of the law have been transgressed. Then there is the question of the ineligibility of Mr. Sherwood in the Twenty-seventh district. In every instance the Democrats have excellent grounds to claim that their candidates were elected."

Governor Boies on the Tariff.

DES MOINES, Nov. 10.—The Democratic success in Iowa was ratified here by a great demonstration last night. Governor Boies addressed a vast audience in the Grand Opera house. He said: "The study of the cornfields in Iowa has but just begun. When it is ended the farmers will be able to make an intelligent comparison of the effect of our protective tariff system upon their own and other industries.

"They will have learned why it is that their own magnificent Iowa is plastered over with land mortgages, representing nearly $240,000,000 of indebtedness. When the situation is understood, the manual laborers of the country will uproot the system of legalized plunder that is fast dividing our people into classes that should not exist in a government where law may be framed by a common people."

Foraker Threatens Sherman.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 10.—The public have believed that Senator Sherman would be returned to the senate for the sixth time, but there is no disguising the fact that he is in danger. Foraker's following is a large following and he intends to make a fight to the finish. His following is composed of the young men of the Republican party, who have decided to get the control of the local organizations. Governor Forraker still denies that he is a candidate. Many of the leading Republican newspapers are for Foraker. The Sun, Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, the Toledo Blade and other papers.

Mills and the Speakership.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Mr. Mills has come to Washington to open his fight for the speakership. From many indications it will not be a fight. With something like 100 votes in sight to begin a contest, and others from southern states, making altogether from 125 to 150, and with the other Democrats distributed between half a dozen other candidates, there does not seem to be much cause for apprehension on the part of the friends of Mr. Mills. Mr. Crisp will be his strongest and most persistent opponent.

Sherman and the Presidency.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Senator Sherman's friends here resent the suggestion that he is no longer a presidential quantity. They not only deny that he has abandoned the hope of ever reaching the White House, but say that the development of the next few months will make him a more formidable aspirant for that high honor.

Governor Campbell Receives a Crow.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 10.—Governor Campbell has received a crow by express, which was found to contain a live crow. It was sent by Samuel D. Blocker, of Akron. Governor Campbell says he will consign the bird to the state prison for two years, when, on the next Democratic victory, the donor will have use for it.

Fassett Taking a Rest.

FORTRESS MONROE, Va., Nov. 10.—Mr. J. Sloat Fassett, accompanied by Mr. Dwight, of New York, and Mr. Bishop, of Brooklyn, has arrived at the Hygeia hotel to enjoy a much needed rest after the fatigues of the recent campaign.

The San Francisco at Acapulco.

ACAPULCO, Mex., Nov. 10.—The cruiser San Francisco has arrived here from Callao after a voyage of eleven days. The vessel will coal here and will probably receive orders from the navy department at Washington as to her future destination. All on board are well.

Beats' Case Before the Grand Jury.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 10.—The district attorney of Westchester county today presented to the grand jury the case of Henry S. Beats, who shot and killed Charles F. Bilsh, the Peekskill hotel proprietor.

He Killed Polly Newberry.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Polly Newberry, the well known circus rider, was killed by her husband. The husband killed himself after the shooting.

A GOLD CIGAR BOX FOR ROYALTY.

That Was the Prince of Wales' Birthday Present.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Monday was the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The occasion was celebrated in a quiet manner at Sandringham, in Norfolkshire. A large number of congratulatory letters and telegrams were received by his royal highness, and many presents were forwarded to him from various parts of Great Britain and the continent.

The Prince of Wales through his patronage of various London theaters has done much to make the success of numerous plays produced at those establishments, and the managers and actors were desirous of showing in some way their appreciation. They did so Monday by presenting him with a gold cigar box.

Sir Augustus Harris, Mr. John Hare, Mr. Bancroft, Mr. Beerbohm Tree and Mr. Wyndham, representing the theatrical profession, went to Sandringham, where they privately presented their gift to the prince.

The present is a superb specimen of the goldsmith's art. It weighs 100 ounces, and the value of the metal alone is very great. The top of the box is surmounted by the three ostrich feathers, forming the coat of arms of the Prince of Wales, set with diamonds.

WHAT SHALL WE WEAR?

YOU CAN LEARN FROM THIS COLUMN WHAT OTHERS ARE WEARING.

What Women are Doing—The Winter Fashions—Interesting Gossip From Home and Abroad Regarding Women's Work and Ways.

Housekeepers are reminded that in packing away cotton gowns a dry place should be chosen, otherwise there is danger of mildew. Summer dresses are now washed and "got up" before they are laid aside for the winter. The little starch used does no harm. If they are wrapped in paper they will keep a nice color and be ready for a Southern trip or when the warm weather comes again. Summer garments of all sorts should be thoroughly aired before being packed.

THE NEWEST EVENING GOWNS.

Black Appears to be the Prevailing Style for Young Women.

The newest evening gowns for young women are black chiffon or mousseline de soie, embroidered with a color and trimmed with velvet the shade of the color. These dresses may be lined with black or a tint according to the fancy of the purchaser A very charming model is a black grosgrener web, strewn closely with buttercups in the natural hue and brightened with yellow chiffon for sleeves and petticoat and chemisette. The necks of these gowns are moderately high and the sleeves invariably long, which adds much to the quaintness of the effect produced. Some of the skirts are made of three flounces, embroidered with trails of roses or other bright blossoms. The bodice may then be made of plain chiffon in the color of the flowers, or of black with smaller flower sprays. A favorite design is a bow knot of color embroidered upon the black, and this is extremely effective in the yellow, which promises to be the color of the season here, as in Paris it has the preference over all other colors.

FASHIONS IN BONNETS.

Here is a bonnet in black velvet, studded with beads. Fancy feathers edged with jet; pearl-grey satin ribbon. Cream-colored lace veil.

Long, wide veils of gauze or tulle cover all hats and bonnets in cold weather. For visiting, let the mask veil, reaching to mid-nose, resumed. It keeps the front curls or waves in place, voilà tout. It is only intended for that, indeed. I suppose it is useless to warn our readers Arabia spotted or figured veils being injurious to the eyes. If ladies think them pretty they will soon find and risk their eyes. Real Brussels net, however, without any dot or pattern on it, is quite as becoming to the figure of the wearer, and you will save your eyes in the bargain.

DARK DAYS FOR BANKERS

Supt. Preston Hopeful About the Ulster County's Crash.

HE WANTS THE BANK TO RESUME.

A Plan Suggested Whereby the Depositors May in Time Be Paid in Full—The Defaulters Got Away with Over $581,000—The Big Run in Berlin.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 10.—State Superintendent of Banks Preston has just submitted for publication a report to the trustees and depositors of the Ulster County Savings institution and citizens of this community, showing the condition of the bank on Nov. 1, 1891. The assets are $2,108,547.39; liabilities due depositors, $2,474,465.89; deficiency, $365,918.50. Superintendent Preston says:

Superintendent Preston's Statement.

"I have allowed such premium upon the bonds the bank holds as can be realized in the market, and in arriving at the value of the bonds and mortgages and real estate by calling in a number of the most conservative men of this community, who are acquainted with the properties. These assets are capable of paying 85 per cent. of the deposits and leave a balance of $5,351.39.

The Defaulters' Bonds.

"There is in addition to the assets above stated a bond of James W. Callender of $25,000 and Matthew T. Trumpbour of $15,000, which I have not taken into consideration in the above liabilities. The amount actually due to depositors on the day the bank closed was $2,474,465.89, showing the total amount abstracted and misappropriated to be $581,331.50.

"There were mistakes in the pass books aggregating $500, most of which were against the bank. In conclusion the superintendent says:

He Wants the Bank to Resume.

"It will be seen that the assets are capable of paying 85 per cent. of the deposits. The interest amounts to over $50,000 per year.

"In view of this condition I would respectfully suggest that the bank could resume by procuring an order from the court permitting it to transact its ordinary business as a savings bank upon the condition that 15 per cent. of the aggregate deposits shall constantly be kept on hand—for on Oct. 2, 1891, be charged to every such depositor and accredited to the bank, and that no portion of this percentage be payable to any depositor until the further order of the court; that 25 per cent. of the deposits be payable to each depositor on demand from the time that the bank resumes. This would enable each depositor to demand one-fourth of his deposit at once, and the court could be moved from time to time thereafter to pay out such additional sums due depositors as the best interests of the bank would warrant, until the 85 per cent. should be paid in full. In this way the assets would be within a reasonable time pay the 85 per cent. and then the full amount of all the deposits."

Superintendent Preston was also president the case of the Oswego City Savings bank, which finally paid depositors in full.

The Maverick's Affairs.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—Receiver Beals furnishes a statement of the Maverick National bank's affairs which shows that there were less than $3,000,000 of individual deposits, outside of deposits of banks and bankers, at the time of the failure. The comptroller says that it was a mistake to attribute to him the statement that depositors would receive 85 per cent. of their deposits, what he did say was that the average dividend of all the banks he had settled was 85 per cent.

The Maverick had a very large business, its outward mail averaging from 600 to 800 letters per day, but everything is found, so far as examined, to have been very systematically conducted. The only difference thus far announced is the inadequate collateral behind loans to the directors. All the notes and indorsements were properly and regularly made within the letter of the law, there being no blanket indorsements, as has been stated.

The Run on Berlin Banks.

BERLIN, Nov. 10.—So far as known, all the banks have survived the run upon them. The greatest run was upon F. W. Krause, in the Leipzigerstrasse. Everybody was paid. Frantic excitement reigned. Early in the afternoon the police had to regulate the crowds at some banks.

The Kaiser Interested.

The kaiser ordered hourly reports to be made to him as to the condition of affairs, and was delighted to learn he should summon a council to decide if a general financial inquiry was desirable.

The President's Aid Invoked.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The finance committee of the city councils have reported a resolution to the councils requesting President Harrison to allow the councils investigating committee's experts to examine the books and papers of the suspended Spring Garden National bank. Acting Treasurer Edwards of the treasury department, recently refused to allow this, and the resolution is for the purpose of asking the president to overrule his decision. The councils will take up the matter on Thursday.

The Corry Failure Looks Dark.

CORRY, Pa., Nov. 10.—The reports in connection with the Corry National bank failure are that the liabilities are about $600,000 instead of $450,000 as were estimated. The reports that two prominent lumber firms in Corry have made assignments are without foundation. President Allen and Cashier Harrison are both seriously ill from nervous prostration. A receiver will be appointed.

Defaulters to Be Tried at Home.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 10.—In the state supreme court the application for a change of venue from Crawford county in the case of the Delamaters, the bankers, who failed last year, was refused by Justice Paxson. The grounds for the application were the prejudice of the people and the inflammatory articles published in the newspapers after the failure.

Hanlon's Gun Up in Smoke.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—At 1:00 o'clock this morning fire in the wholesale hosiery and notion house of Hanlon, Goodman & Johnson, 422 Market street, caused a loss of $75,000.

THE SEVENTEENTH DEAD

Another Bridgeport Suicide Club Man Kills Himself.

ONLY TWO MEMBERS REMAIN ALIVE

They Have Died by All Sorts of Methods Except by Drowning and the Use of Poison—John Kopp the Name of the Last Victim.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 10.—John Kopp, a German, lately employed as a cabinetmaker at Wheeler & Wilson's shop, has hanged himself to a rafter in the cellar of his home at 10 Evitts lane, East Bridgeport. He was one of the last members of the famous Suicide club of this city, and it was time for another member to die. He had been a member of the club from its beginning and had officiated at the funeral of nearly all the members and often said that his turn would come in a short time.

Only Two Members Left.

There are only two other members of the club now living. Every member who joined when the club was first projected has died by violence and his own hand. They have died in almost every style. Some have hanged themselves, some have wooed death with a revolver or shotgun, others have thrown themselves in front of railroad trains, but none have taken poison. That was considered too easy and unworthy the members of the Suicide club.

Kopp Was the Seventeenth.

Kopp is the seventeenth man of the club who has killed himself. One man disappeared and no trace of him has ever been discovered. It is believed that he has committed suicide by drowning, but the members of the club refuse to accept that version, as drowning is prohibited by the rules. The two remaining members of the club are expected to do their duty.

A FARMHAND RUNS AMUCK.

Simon Field Kills George David and Wounds David's Wife and Son.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Nov. 10.—A terrible tragedy has just occurred at Green, Pike county, which has already resulted in one death and will probably cause two more. Simon P. Field, employed on an adjoining farm, entered the premises of George David, called the latter to the door and blew the top of his head off with a load of buckshot. Field then turned on David's wife like a savage beast, shooting her in the face and beating her about the head with his gun.

The assassin then rushed down the farm lane, where he met a son of the Davids, whom he shot in the back. David is dead, and it is believed that the mother and son cannot live. Field was arrested, taken to Milford, and locked up. He claims to have no recollection of his crime.

Connecticut's Net Debt.

HARTFORD, Nov. 10.—State Treasurer Henry C. Lee's report shows that the net debt of Connecticut is $2,556,124. During the year Mr. Henry has suspended the state tax, saving the people over $300,000. He paid off $285,000 of the funded debt. The total funded debt is $3,540,300, of which only $300,000 can be paid off before 1903. A total of $350,000 of this debt will be paid over in a few weeks and the balance probably within two years.

Comedian Robson's Marriage Delayed.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 10.—Stuart Robson's approaching marriage to Miss May Waldron, his leading lady, was semi-officially announced yesterday. It was said that the wedding would take place Thursday. But last night a Brooklyn audience was informed that Romance had "met with an accident," and would not be able to appear. His manager says he will be all right in a day or two. The marriage will be delayed.

Dill Pleaded for His Persecutors.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Nov. 10.—Gray Torrey, son of Herbert Gray Torrey, chief of the United States assay office, New York city, Frank Moffett and his brother, and the other young men found guilty of white capping Parson Dill, of the Sterling church, were sentenced to pay a fine of fifty dollars each and costs. Parson Dill personally asked the court to be lenient with the young men.

Supplies for the Kaiser's Army.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 10.—The Reduction company, one of the two big American firms manufacturing from aluminum, has received from the German government and order for cups, cartouche boxes and lining for knapsacks, the object being to lighten the burden of the common soldier. Five hundred tons of metal will be used.

Treasurer James Penny Dead.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 10.—James Penny, who for eleven years had been national treasurer for the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel workers, died at his home in Pittsburg Nov. 9. The cause of his death was blood poisoning. Mr. Penny was sixty-three years of age and was widely known among iron and steel workers.

Another Pottery Conspiracy Arrest.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—William E. Ardley, of late packer in Mayer's pottery, in Trenton, was arrested here in connection with the alleged conspiracy for ruining the pottery of goods. Ardley's arrest was made on the confession of W. W. Sweet, invoice clerk in the pottery.

Two Firemen Killed in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 10.—Firemen William Secrage and Edward Elderson were killed by the breaking of a ladder as a fire here, and Captain Hurley, Firemen Beebe, John Conway and Jerry Doherty were injured. The fire was in Oscar Onken's pasture fence gallery.

State Road Improvement Discouraged.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The court of claims in the case of the state of Indiana against the United States to recover $500,000 expended by the state for roads decided adversely to the state of Indiana. Ohio and Illinois have similar suits pending.

The Peacemaker Shot.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—George C. Waldo, a lawyer of this city, who resides in Brooklyn, was fatally shot in that city by George A. Thelan, seventy-five years old, the father of the latter's wife, while trying to disarm the old man, who is demented.

Cut Out His Eyes.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 10.—Michael Bogale got into an altercation with a countryman, and the latter slashed his face about the head with a razor, cutting out his eyes and inflicting injuries which caused his death.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Private Secretary Halford has resumed his duties at the executive mansion. He has entirely recovered from his late illness.

The bureau of printing and engraving is now printing the face of the new Windom note and will have it ready for circulation within a week or so.

George H. Boyer, the well known "if-not-why-not" advertising man, committed suicide in his office at Chicago. Death was caused by asphyxiation from escaping gas.

At Fitchburg, Mass., the water supply is very low and the city council has been petitioned to shut off the city water from manufacturers.

John C. Furman, of Westchester, N. Y., has bought the entire plant of the New Bedford Cordage company. It is believed the property was bought for the National Cordage company.

At Cincinnati the Walter Architectural works, one of the best known firms in the west, made an assignment. Liabilities, $90,000.

The president has appointed Peter Scandella United States consul at Oudad, Bolivia.

Governor Boies, of Iowa, recently elected, says he will not be a Democratic presidential candidate for 1892.

Ex-Congressman John Quinn, of the Eleventh district of New York, is announced as a candidate for clerk of the next house of representatives at Washington.

Assistant Secretary Nettleton, of the treasury, will soon visit New York to make final arrangements for the transfer of the immigration bureau to Ellis island.

The run on the Five Cent Savings bank of Boston, which resulted from the Maverick bank failure, has ended. During the six days of the run nearly $800,000 was drawn out by depositors.

John P. Poe, the attorney general elect for Maryland, announces, with authority, as he claims, that Senator Arthur P. Gorman is not a candidate for the presidency in 1892, but can wait until 1896.

The reported excitement among the puddlers of the furnace at Brielden, N. J., is denied. There will be no outbreak, it is said.

Alexander Schadell, an employee of Tuttle's planing mill at Jamaica, L. I., attempted to commit suicide by putting his head against the buzz saw. He will die.

The great coal pile on the Northwestern Fuel company's docks at Duluth, Minn., has been on fire since Friday.

FOUR VICTIMS OF THE FLAMES.

DENVER, Nov. 10.—A terrible fire in which four men and thirty-four horses were suffocated was discovered in the Mansions stables, 1,816 Lawrence street, at 3 a. m. The dead are Thomas Bowen, twenty-two years, single, home in Peoria, Ills.; George Richards, twenty-six, single, home in Kewanee, Ills.; David Elmore and Otto Heilun, St. Louis.

They were sleeping in rooms over the office of the livery stable and were employed in the restaurant. There were four others sleeping in the place, but these escaped. The scenes about the burning building were horrifying as the smoke rolled through into the apartments where the horses were kept. Scenting danger their cries of alarm and fright were pitiful, and in their efforts to escape they kicked down their stalls and some managed to break away, but fell dead in the gangway. The horses burned were the most valuable in the barn and their aver age value is estimated at $450 each.

To Struggle Over the Rules Again.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—One of the subjects likely to cause a struggle in the house of representatives is that of a change of the rules. The Democrats will doubtless make a determined fight for changing the rule regarding the counting of a quorum by the speaker. The rule in reference to the distribution of the several appropriations bills among the various committees, instead of consolidating all the bills in the committee on appropriations, may also be changed, but the Democratic members are divided on that point, as well as on the rule providing that 100 members shall constitute a quorum in committee of the whole.

General Horace Boughton Dead.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—General Horace Boughton, of Texas, died suddenly in this city Nov. 8. For more than fifteen years General Boughton had been almost an invalid, having sustained partial paralysis as a result of remaining all night in water while building a pontoon bridge over the Little Tennessee river in order to allow a division across to hurriedly attack. General Boughton was born in New York state in 1833.

Nantucket's Death List Twelve.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 10.—The number of the victims of the Nantucket mine explosion now reaches twelve. Four more of the injured have died. Their names are William Williams, Jr., Thomas R. Thomas, Edward D. Williams and David Powell. The latest victims are the cause of the accident is that some of the men disregarded the rules and worked with naked lamps.

Editor Minton's Divorce Suit.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Nov. 10.—Editor Minton, of The Illustrated American, New York, has begun action for divorce from his wife, who is now in the city to secure a separation from him. He charges her with breaking the seventh commandment, and cites seven different dates and men. Mrs. Minton came here several months ago with Mrs. Blaine.

Italian Lagra's Murderous Stiletto.

Mrs. Leslie's Husband Ill.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Willie Wilde, who married Mrs. Frank Leslie five weeks ago, is dangerously ill at the Gerlach Hotel, where he and his bride took apartments after their return from a wedding trip. Mrs. Leslie-Wilde thinks her husband will recover.

MEADVILLE, Pa., Nov. 10.—The homestead of G. W. Delamater has been sold by assignees for $6,600 for the benefit of the creditors of the defunct Delamater & Co.'s bank. The homestead cost between $20,000 and $30,000.

The Weather.

Generally from cloudy to partly cloudy, with no decided temperature change, preceded by rain and by increased storminess on the coast.

The Ruling Passion.

Papa—Well, daughter, did you give that poor country editor the mitten, as I told you to do?

Daughter—Yes, papa.

Papa—And what did he say?

Daughter—He asked if it were by your request, and I told him it was.

Papa—What did he say to that?

Daughter—He asked if you couldn't make it a pair of mittens and a full suit of clothes to match.—Detroit Free Press.

Still Something to Learn.

Mrs. Wickstaff—I hear that your daughter has just graduated from a young lady's seminary. Has she entirely finished her studies?

Mrs. Bings—Oh, no! She is studying English now.—Truth.

SALISBURY ON FREE TRADE.

He Says England Will Not Falter Because She Stands Alone.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—In his speech at the Guildhall last evening Lord Salisbury eulogized Mr. Balfour's administration of Irish affairs, and then went on to say: "There is not a single speck of cloud on the European horizon containing within it anything ominous to the prospects of peace. It seems to me that the warfare of nations is slowly changing its field. It is industrial competition which in these days occupies the chancelleries and its diplomacies. The great subjects of consideration are those treaties of commerce expiring next year. The great question is what tariff the various nations adopt in respect to each other. I think I can hold out to England, as regards material welfare, the most promising anticipations, as far as present prospects go.

"Respecting the industrial warfare which has for its weapons protective legislation, and for its prizes the markets of the various countries, I am afraid we must be content to occupy for a time a peculiar and isolated position. The cause of protection only sinks in rise. The recent elections in America have shown a slight reaction, but it has spent its forces. The only free trade colony is England, and that, I am afraid, no longer has an unspotted robe; but no doubt a commercial community like England will not falter in its attachment to free trade. I don't ascribe to free trade any special virtue in that respect, because the fact is that articles respecting which we should have exercised protection, if we exercised it at all, are mainly articles of first consumption bearing on necessities of the whole of our population, which is an absolute guarantee that we will never return to protection."

Regarding the foreign policy of England Lord Salisbury said: "The policy of the government regarding Egypt will not be changed. England has made great sacrifices, shed most precious blood and scattered treasure freely in order to rescue Egypt from the evils which have overtaken her. She must allow it to be all swept away like last year's almanac and suffer Egypt to return to the anarchy which would be a condition of danger to all its neighbors."

Rev. Mr. George Weeps.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 10.—At the trial of the Rev. Mr. George the prosecution read the "confession" written by the prisoner while in jail here and then rested its case. The minister then testified to Mr. George's good character as far as they had known him. The prisoner then gave a detailed history of his life, relating principally to accounts of petty thefts committed in every place in which he ever lived. At one time the prisoner broke down completely and wept.

A Brutal Doctor's Deed.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 10.—Frank Laffin cut his girl terribly with a razor, and to the office of County Physician Crawford, who sewed up the wound. When the doctor learned that Laffin could not pay him two dollars for one of the stitches, remarking that he would not work for nothing. It is said the mayor will at once call the attention of the state's attorney to the matter.

Viola Greylock Tries Suicide.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Viola Greylock, a very pretty young employe of the patent office in Washington, swallowed poison at the Grand Central depot here this evening. She may die. It is said that she was despondent because she feared she was about to be removed from her position.

Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine I ever used. It cured my leg of ulcers after the doctors said it would have to be amputated.—Burton S. Bingham, Middlesex, Vt.—Adv.

BROTHERHOOD.

When on the journey of life
You meet
A struggling brother in the strife,
Then speak,
Not as a stranger—leave that to another,
But speak as a man to a brother.

O, kill not the spark that smoulders,
By stooping
To place a new burden on shoulders
Now drooping.
Add not to their weight—leave that to another,
But cheer as a man, as man cheer a brother.

Grasp warmly the hand that's weary
Of trying
Comfort the soul that's dreary,
Upcrying.
Strike no fallen creature—leave that to another
But help as a man, as a man help a brother.

And think not such acts as these
Are unheeded,
But know that a Father sees
And when needed,
Gives the staircast crown to him and no other
Who met a weak comrade, as a man and a brother.

THE MYSTERIOUS.

I am not mysterious. I do not believe in Theosophy. I have never received any evidence of the truth of Spiritualism. I never saw a ghost. I have no fear of ill luck. Yet I have had in my life a few experiences I cannot explain, and one of these happened to me the other day. Being a smoker of cigarettes which I make myself, I buy little books of cigarette paper. These have covers of cardboard, and each contains about one hundred sheets of what is called rice paper. On a Saturday morning I purchased one of these books, and used it that day and the next. I have a little square table alongside of my chair in the sitting-room which is meant to hold books I may be reading, and other little things which I use. On Sunday night I made and smoked a cigarette just before going to bed. The table at that time was covered with a white cloth on which was the "Life of Savonarola," by Clarke, a match-safe, a saucer for ashes, my tobacco pouch, my cigarette holder and this book of cigarette paper. There were when I went to bed about 70 sheets of paper in the book.

On Monday morning after breakfast I went into the front room to get a cigarette. When I picked up the book it was empty. Everything else was on the table as I had left it the night before. But alongside of the book lying on the white cloth, was a round copper coin, worn badly on one side, but showing raised characters on the other. My wife is a collector of coins in a very small way, having thirty or forty of those coins that have struck her fancy, and when I looked at this coin I had found I supposed it belonged to her. I did not know what it was, nor had I ever seen a coin like it before. I carried it back to the dining-room to ask her where she got it, when she startled me slightly by speaking as though she was obliged to me for having procured it for her. I of course knew I had never seen it before, and I found out that it was as strange to her.

She called the servant in, for we both supposed it must belong to her, but she after examining it declared she had never seen it. She also proved that she had not been in the sitting room since the afternoon of the day before. My wife and I then went into the front room and removed everything from the table trying to find the cigarette paper, but without success. There are four facts which we established: First, that the cigarette paper had disappeared between ten o'clock on Sunday night and seven o'clock on Monday morning; second, that the coin had made its appearance in the interval; third, that we had never seen the coin before and did not know what it was; fourth, that no person as far as we knew had been in the sitting room during that time. The folding doors between the sitting room and the bed room were wide open during the night, and it would be impossible for any one to move about that room without being heard.

I took the coin to a numismatist, who told me it was an Egyptian five para piece. Its value is about one cent. I have it still, and I am no nearer knowing how I got it now than I was the morning I found it resting on the white tablecloth alongside of the empty covers of the cigarette book.

Now for a story of one of the greatest scares I ever got. Between the villages of Tadousa and L'Ouse a L'Eau, at the mouth of the Saguenay river, in Canada, there is a hill at the base of which is a ravine, and over this a bridge.

It happened one night when I was in my fifteenth year that I was detained in Tadousa until 12 o'clock, and the people I was with talked of the ghost of a Canadian habitant who had committed suicide in the ravine, who was supposed to haunt the scene of the self-slaughter. About ten minutes past midnight I left the house and started to walk home in the moonlight. When I reached the bridge I looked down into the ravine, and my heart seemed to stand still. There, outlined against the bushes in the shadow of the bridge, was a tall, white, misty sort of a figure, dressed apparently in long and flowing robes and having one arm raised. It seemed to me the fingers beckoned to me.

I rubbed my eyes and pinched myself, but it was go one, the figure was there. Then I picked up some stones and threw them down. They went through it, yet still it beckoned to me to come. I took to my heels and made the quickest time I ever made to the top of the hill.

Being somewhat blown by my flight and my run I stopped, and, thinking for a moment, went back. There was the figure, still beckoning with that horrible hand. It seemed to me I could see eyes that glared at me. I threw more stones, but they had no effect whatever, and I made up my mind I would go down and see what that thing was, no matter what happened. I can give you no idea in words of how real it looked to me from whatever point I gazed, and how my blood seemed to be cold when I watched that infernal hand beckon to me.

At the end of the bridge there was a fence which I climbed and began to work my way down the bank. The thing was there still, and I cannot say with truth that I went very fast. I threw stones at it, which had no effect whatever, and I was already if it moved toward me—as I really half believed it would, if I stoned it long enough—to get up that bank in short order. At last I was close to it, and I put out my hand very cautiously, for it was still plainly before me, to touch it. I only touched the bushes!

For a moment or two I was confused, my mind had become convinced there was something there. Then I searched for the cause of the appearance, as that had not vanished, and speedily found it.

Under my left elbow there was a little pool of water, which, acting as a mirror, reflected the moonlight upon the bushes, and the shape the light assumed made my ghost. The explanation was so simple that, coming as it did after my great fright and struggle with myself before I could make up my mind to examine it, it made me very angry. Had I been able to connect it with any persons I should have thrashed them in some way, but as it was I could only go home deriding myself for my absurd credulity.

When I was a student at McGill University in Montreal two years after seeing this ghost of a mud puddle, there was an old house up on the mountain which had the name of being haunted. Charlie Ferry, Jack Mills and I went up there one night to see what would happen.

The place was a tumble-down, drear sort of a structure, but we managed to start a fire in one of the rooms and to make ourselves fairly comfortable. We had a lunch with us and two or three champagne bottles filled with strong coffee, which we believed would help us to keep awake. We went up stairs and down, finding the doors open everywhere.

It must have been after 11 o'clock when I heard one of the boys speak of the cold. The month was October, and, although the night was cool, no one accustomed to a canadian winter would have called it even chilly. Not only that, but we had a big fire in the open fireplace, so large a one in fact that we had been forced to move away from it. We all felt this cold, however, in themost distinct way, and it seemed to me afterward although this probably was my imagination, that the flame became duller. The cold did not increase in us any idea of the supernatural, for we all concluded it was the chill of the night.

While we were talking we heard the sound of footsteps in the hall. There were no carpets and the noise was distinct, coming through the open door. We had reflecting lanterns with us. I distinctly remember thinking it was some one of the college boys who had made up his mind to share our watch. But when we looked out into the hall with the light of the lanterns turned on his bare boards, there was no one there. It is beyond a question that no woman was in sight. Yet as we looked we heard a woman's steps coming toward us and we heard the swish of her dress as it dragged.

It needed but a glance at the startled faces of Charley and Jack to tell me they heard what I heard. As the thing, whatever it was, came toward us we drew back, while it turned and went up the stairs. We remained where we were, listening. The footsteps mounted the stairs, and then we heard them overhead, moving all through the rooms, now faster, now louder. At last they came back and moved down the stairs, and with them came, it seemed to me, the same feeling of cold. They passed into the room where we were and moved back into the room in the rear. They sounded exactly like the movements of a person who is looking for something. At one time I thought I heard something like sighs, but as the others did not hear this I think I must have been mistaken.

The footsteps and the swish of the dress came toward us and went away. Up and down the hall they went, for, I should think, half an hour, and then they ceased. With them went the cold, nor did we feel this again that night. We saw nothing, but we all three heard the steps and the dress as plainly as I now hear a locomotive whistle and the rumble of the cars.

An Unlucky Combination.

A man, a cow and a gun in a Connecticut pasture. The man intent on woodchucks. The cow quietly chewing her cud. The gun "lying low," both hammers cocked, in the grass. That was an apparently innocent and harmless combination; but it came near proving the death of the man. The cow, prompted, no doubt, by bovine curiosity, approached the gun. The man took a stick to the cow. The gun, stepped on by the cow, discharged its load into the man's right leg, which the surgeons afterward amputated.—Forest and Stream.

An Economical Woman.

Wife—I am going to economize in our household, George.

Husband—Why, you prudent little soul, how?

"I am going to discharge our servant and get an older person."

"Well, that will be no good; the older one will demand just as much wages."

Wife (looking at him straight)—Very likely, Mr. Brown, but you won't need to give her half crowns; and what kisses you want you may have from me—me, sir.—Sheffield Telegraph.

NOT HIS LINE.

There Was a Limit to His Powers, and He Found It.

A woman sat by the open basement window of a house in West Thirty-fifth street, when a man came along with seven rat traps and eight mouse traps strung over his shoulder on a cord. He leaned on the fence, wiped his perspiring brow with a crippled handkerchief and said:

"Madam, no further competition is demanded. I am selling mouse and rat traps. My stock is right here. Sell you a trap warranted to catch the cutest old rat in New York city for a quarter. These mouse traps, warranted to entice the most bashful mouse in the state to his destruction, are only fifteen cents. Might make the two thirty-five cents to you."

The woman was darning a hole in the heel of a long bandied black stocking. She darned and looked up, and darned and looked down, but she made no reply.

"Of course," said the man, as he detached one of the traps from the cord and held it out, "if you have no rats here you want no traps, but I take it you have rats. We all have'em. That's where the rich can get no advantage over the poor. I don't say that it isn't cheaper to lay for a rat with a sled and gun, but as a matter of convenience the trap is ahead. Savey, ma'am?"

She looked up again, turned the stocking wrong side out and back, and said nothing.

"A person not in the rat and mouse business gives little or no thought to statistics," continued the man, as he rested one foot on the fence. "Have you any idea of the appalling increase of the rodent population? Probably not. I have met people, citizens, financiers and statesmen who had given it no thought. As a matter of fact, ma'am, one pair of rats will multiply themselves 1,000 times in two years. One thousand rats will consume an average of $5,000 worth of provisions per year. One of my traps will catch 1,000 rats every 365 days. It is therefore a question of whether you will invest 25 cents or $5,000. Could anything be plainer, ma'am?"

By this time she had got through with the hole in the heel and found how to turn one of the stocking. She looked up at him as she threaded the darning needle again, but was silent.

"Mind you," said the man, after looking up and down the street, "I don't say that the rat shouldn't have a show. He was created for a purpose, the same as man, and should have his rights. But we all have traps were invented, and that I have come down from Yonkers to offer these traps at the low price of twenty-five cents each. I trust that I have defined my position clearly, ma'am."

She bit off the yarn close to the stocking, turned it right side out and passed her fingers over the spot, but her eyes were not even raised to his.

"I think I see how it is," he said, as he refastened the trap to the cord and prepared to move on. "I think I do. You have not made finance and domestic economy a study. You look at twenty-five cents paid out for a rat trap as so much capital invested in a nondivided paying investment. You do not figure"——

At this juncture she rose up, laid the stock—a needle and putting her head out of the window until it was within four feet of his she called out:

"Don't want any! We never buy potatoes of peddlers anyhow!"

He stood and looked at her for a minute with mouth wide open, and then, as the sash went down and the curtain was drawn, he turned away with:

"I'll never make a livin at it in the world! My line is windmills or sewing machines, or something that runs with a drive wheel and does its own talking!"—New York Evening World.

Silver Not Good Enough.

An elegantly dressed female recently entered the establishment of an optician on Broadway with her head thrown back and a supercilious smile on her face.

"Madam, what can I do for you?" asked the proprietor.

"I want to purchase a thermometer, but of the very best quality."

"Here is one of the finest Venetian glass and the best quicksilver."

Mrs. Peterby turned up her nose and sneeringly said:

That one with quicksilver is good enough for the servants' room, but haven't you a high toned thermometer for my boudoir, one with quick gold instead of quicksilver?"—Texas Siftings.

An Expert.

There was a tremendous crowd in front of the clothing store. A large glass jar had been placed on a pedestal inside the window and this placard conspicuously affixed thereto:

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS WILL BE GIVEN TO ANYBODY WHO CAN GUESS THE NUMBER OF BEANS IN THIS JAR.

A violent commotion on the outskirts of the crowd attracted the attention of those near the window, and somebody called out:

"What's the matter?"

"This is a fair and square contest," yelled a man in reply, "but we don't want no expert on beans guessin on that jar, by jucks! We've been hustlin a Boston man out of this crowd!"—Chicago Tribune.

BREVITIES.

—Last night's storm almost denuded the trees of leaves.

—A meeting of the Crescent League will be held this evening.

—The city Common Council will hold another meeting next Monday evening.

—The trials of criminal cases was resumed in the Union county court to-day.

—The regular monthly business meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held to-morrow afternoon in the rooms.

—Mrs. Stants of Lake street has been missing for two months past and her husband has no clue to her whereabouts.

—The regular mid-week meeting of the Plainfield Reform Club will take place in Reform Hall to-morrow evening.

—The Crescent League bowling team will go to New York Friday evening and roll a game with the Ivanhoes of that place.

—Anchor Lodge, No. 149, F. & A. M., held a regular communication last evening at which the E. A. degree was conferred.

—The New Jersey State Bible Society will hold its 42d anniversary in the First Presbyterian Church, Dunellen, tomorrow.

—The prizes to be awarded to the successful contestants in the recent Crescent League pool tournament are now on exhibition.

—It is expected that the new building of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum will be ready for occupancy about December 16th.

—A colored man and woman were in this city to-day soliciting aid for a new colored mission which has been established at Red Bank.

—Marsh, Ayers & Co., are having a closing out sale of wall papers, which they are offering at cost for the next thirty days as per advertisement elsewhere.

—A meeting of the Loyal Legion, under the auspices of the "Ys," will be held on Friday, the 20th, at four p. m., in the Y rooms corner Peace street and North avenue. All children are cordially invited to be present.

—Tickets for the Harp Recital are to be had at H. P. Reynolds and L. W. Randolph's drug stores. To attend this concert is not wholly philanthropical for the music itself will be worth more than the price of the ticket.

—The ladies of the M. E. church are going to hold a "Christmas Bazaar" the 30, 31 and 1st of December afternoon and evening, which will be duly advertised. They are working very hard to raise money for the new chapel in North Plainfield.

—The silver trumpet which was won by the most popular fire company of Westfield as the recent fair for the benefit of the church of the Holy Trinity, is to be presented to the successful company to-morrow evening by Governor Abbett. The presentation will take place at Arcanum Hall.

—The funeral of the late Theodore Johnson, colored, took place from Terrill & Cole's undertaking rooms this afternoon at half-past two o'clock. Deceased was for a number of years employed by Mr John H. Tier of Bank place. Mr. John B. Tier, Mr. John Tier, Jr., Mr. William Tier and Garrett Hammell acted as pall bearers. Interment was made in Evergreen cemetery.

—We have received a long communication from a gentleman in the Third Ward who understands that he was the one quoted in the article in THE NEWS of yesterday entitled "A Busted Scheme,"—although his name was not mentioned in connection with it—in which he requests us to say that he did not use the expression "Combine" Smith nor "Smith and his gang." We did. The conversation was condensed and reported from memory. But the expressions referred to—which fit so exactly—were not intended to be understood as other than ours, and as spreading the sentiments of the community at large, as we believe will be shown by such an overwhelming defeat of the combine, as will serve as a useful lesson for all time to come.

"THE FRAUD TICKET."

Which Last Night Nominated Combine Smith, Moffett and Roberts for Councilmen-at-Large. — Trying to Sail Under False Colors So Characteristic.

The delegates to the supposed Democratic City Convention met last night pursuant to call at Cutter's Hall, on West Front street, to nominate candidates for city and county offices, to be voted for at the charter election to be held Tuesday, Dec. 1.

Mr. Vincent L. Frazee, as chairman of the last Democratic Convention called the meeting to order, and Mr. John M. Dayton was elected chairman, Mr. Lewis H. Brown Secretary and Messrs. Arthur T. Gallup and Louis F. Wadsworth, tellers.

Messrs. Andrew Love, Jr., Seymour Marsh, Wm. E. Gardner and John M. Hetfield were appointed a Committee on Credentials. They reported a full delegation present and the convention proceeded to put in nomination three candidates for Councilmen-at-large.

Mr. Andrew Love, Jr., from the First Ward nominated Seymour G. Smith, one of the combine.

The Second, Third and Fourth Wards, at once seeing through the scheme, refused to make any nominations.

Before Love's motion was put Louis F. Wadsworth arose and said that the delegates were present as Democrats and that the assemblage was a Democratic convention, but the only nominee named was a Republican. The Lord deliver the Republicans if that were true, said one. They utterly repudiate him. The convention, continued the Judge, had no authority to place Republicans in nomination, and if the delegates desired to do so it would be necessary to convert the convention into a citizens' convention.

On motion it was decided to do so.

Dan. S. Roberts, Seymour G. Smith and Elmore D. Moffett were then nominated for Councilmen-at-Large.

Mr. Peter Flynn, Jr., objected to the proceedings as illegal. He contended that before any candidates could be nominated the Democratic convention should adjourn. This threw the schemers into more confusion. Mr. Flynn moved that the convention adjourn sine die. The motion prevailed.

The former Democratic convention then organized itself into a citizens' convention by the election of Mr. John M. Dayton, chairman, Louis F. Brown, Secretary, and Messrs. Louis F. Wadsworth and Arthur T. Gallup, tellers.

A petition containing about a dozen signatures, including several residents of North Plainfield, was then read. It requested the Democrats to put in nomination a citizens' ticket to be voted for at the coming November election. This part of the scheme was to make it appear that there was a demand for such a ticket. In reading it Mr. Brown, the secretary, became puzzled, not through any fault of his however, and he found it necessary to call on Elmore Moffett to help him out. Moffett seemed to be one of the prime movers in the affair. Smith remaining in the back ground at this stage of the game.

Just here James Donahue, a resident of the Fourth Ward, arose and after repeating David C. Hill's phrase "I am a Democrat," denounced the ticket as "a fraud pure and simple." He said it had been prepared outside and was brought there to saddle it on the Democratic party. He warned them not to do it. The chairman endeavored to pacify Mr. Donahue but without avail.

The following members of the combine were then nominated, leading Democrats being left out in the cold:

For Councilmen-at-Large—Seymour G. Smith, Elmore D. Moffett, Daniel S. Roberts.

The balance of the Republican ticket, excepting the school trustee candidate, was endorsed. Mr. Moffett put Mr. Lounsbury's name that of Dewitt C. Ivins, who will probably have nothing to do with the schemers, was substituted, making the remainder of the ticket thus:

For Assessor—Joseph A. Hubbard.

For Collector—John Johnson.

For Treasurer—Alexander Titsworth.

For Chosen Freeholders—J. Frank Hubbard and Andrew Vanderbeek.

A humbug resolution was adopted opposing any improvements that would necessitate the bonding of the city and instructing the candidates elected, to oppose any such legislation. The only attempt ever made at such a thing was by the combine, which had arranged to bond the city for $40,000 to buy Miller's saloon for a City Hall, until exposed by THE NEWS. Now they appear to think there is more money in giving 25 year franchises to a stranger named Low, who seems to own them, and make the Plainfield taxpayers pay him for hydrants $100,000 more than the Plainfield Water Supply Company offered to do the service for as shown by the records.

Mr. James F. Homan was then nominated as a candidate for Councilman in the Third Ward.

The convention then endorsed the Democratic nominees for ward officers and adjourned.

Seymour G. Smith, Samuel P. T. Wilbur and Leonard Spangenberg made every effort possible to find Walter L. Hetfield to induce him to put in appearance at the convention, but Mr. Hetfield failed to materialize.

THE NEWS reporter endeavored to secure a copy of the petition requesting that a citizens' ticket be placed in nomination, but it was in the possession of Mr. S. P. T. Wilbur and he refused to part with the "precious" document until he had secured more signatures to it.

The petition requires 100 names of legal voters to be valid. At the meeting last night there were but about a dozen names on it. It will be seen therefore that the Democrat was not much out when he denounced the ticket as "a fraud pure and simple."

Mr. Wilbur spent all the morning trying to get the one hundred signatures required by law and succeeded in getting two colored men. The list of signatures will be published as soon as we can get access to it. It was last heard of in possession of Hetfield.

DUFFY'S CONDITION PRECARIOUS.

The Victim of a Street Fight a Patient at the Hospital.

Dominick Duffy, the young man whose jaw was broken by his brother-in-law, Cormick Canfield, while they were engaged in a street fight some six weeks ago, still lies in a precarious condition at the Muhlenberg Hospital. The jaw bone where it is fractured will not unite and an operation will be performed tomorrow by the hospital staff. Duffy's hand where it was bitten by Canfield is also swollen and discolored. It was rumored on the streets last night that blood poisoning had set in but the rumor is denied by Miss Walrod, the efficient matron at the hospital. Duffy is receiving the best possible care at the hospital. Canfield is still under bonds to await the result of Duffy's injuries.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Miss A. E. Allison of Somerset street has returned after a week's visit to her aunt, Mrs. Chambettay of New York.

Miss Clark of Somerville has returned home after a short visit to her sister, Mrs. Charles Reed of North Plainfield.

Mr. Rowland Cox, Jr., the athletic son of Mr. Rowland Cox, Sr., of Seventh street, who was hurt in a foot ball game on Park avenue, some time ago, by having his knee-pan dislocated, is, with the aid of crutches, able to once more get about.

Emma Derickson, wife of Charles W. Burton, formerly of this city but now of Philadelphia, died at her home in that place yesterday. Deceased was a daughter of the late Judge David Burton of this city. Mrs. Burton is well known here. The funeral will take place from her late residence, No. 4208 Walnut street, to-morrow afternoon at two o'clock.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Alexander Warnock, who died at Englewood Saturday night, took place at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Howard Wilson of Grove street, North Plainfield, yesterday afternoon at half-past two o'clock. The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham conducted the services. Interment was made in Evergreen Cemetery.

Rudolph Laurent, for a number of years a resident of this city, and who was well and favorably known here, died at his home on Somerset street shortly after half-past nine o'clock last evening. Deceased was nearly 46 years of age. The funeral will take place from his late residence, No. 7 Somerset street, Friday afternoon at two o'clock, and from the German Reformed church at 2.30.

A Girl Accosted on the Street.

Miss Alice Kennedy, a saleslady employed in Mr. I. H. Beehm's dry and fancy goods store on West Front street left for her home in North Plainfield, at about half-past eight o'clock last evening. While on her way she was accosted by an unknown man. She asked him what he wanted. He did not reply but caught hold of her arm. His actions frightened Miss Kennedy and she screamed and struggled until she freed herself from the grasp of the scamp. She then ran back to the city. She was terribly frightened. Later in the evening her brother accompanied her to her home.

The Leg Amputated.

A Clothes' Line Thief.

Some thief, as yet unknown, visited Mrs. Cokefair's yard on Crescent avenue between six and seven o'clock Monday evening and stripped the clothes lines of their contents. The thief took the clothing that had been hung up to dry. He left no clue to his identity.

Struck by a Train.

It was reported on the streets this afternoon that an unknown man had been struck by the Somerville train at the Grant avenue bridge, but not seriously injured. The accident has not been reported to the railroad officials at the main station.

Sentence Suspended.

Dr. Comegys Paul appeared before City Judge Codington yesterday and retracted his plea of not guilty to acting in a disorderly manner toward Mr. Walter Irving Clarke and entered a plea of guilty. City Judge Codington suspended sentence.

Poor Street Work.

Park avenue and Front street were a sea of mud to-day after the storm.

OTHER CITIES LIKE PLAINFIELD.

[From The New York World.]

PLAINFIELD, Nov. 8—A decision of the Supreme Court the past week will be nearly concerned the State at large than was generally suspected.

The case of Israel Lewis against the city of Plainfield, requiring the latter to prove the constitutionality of the law under which the Plainfield Water Works Company was formed, was decided in favor of the city and the law declared constitutional.

The matter had been brought to the attention of the Supreme Court both recently before, and several members of the Bench had intimated that the law was superficial and therefore unconstitutional.

More than sixty cities in the State have water works built under that law's provisions, among them Hackensack, Passaic, Long Branch, Bound Brook and Atlantic City. Had the law been declared illegal these cities would have been placed in a bad plight. The decision was conducted by Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh, who won it in the face of great odds. These cities owe him an obligation they probably do not yet realize.

AN UNFORTUNATE FAMILY.

Every Member Injured on the Railroad.

Charles Levers, the Central Railroad brakeman, who had his hand so badly crushed by being caught between the bumpers of two coal cars Saturday night that amputation was necessary, as reported in THE NEWS is a member of a family, all of whom have at one time or another been employed on the Central Railroad.

One of his brothers, who is still living, had his leg amputated by being run over by the cars. Two other brothers were killed while engaged as brakemen. About two months ago one of the latter was so badly injured at Bound Brook that he was brought to Muhlenberg Hospital, where he died a few hours afterward. The unfortunate family have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Police Notes.

Annie Devine, a resident of Stony Hill, was fined $5 and costs by Prosecutor Vanderbeek this morning for disorderly conduct and soliciting alms on the public highway. Cahill is an old offender. His wife was sentenced to the county jail a few days ago for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. Her term has not yet expired.

A man named Pinny was arrested last night by Policemen Flanagan and Cooney on complaint of Martin Geoghan. He was so drunk that the policemen were forced to take him to the station house in a wagon.

An old soldier was found in an intoxicated condition last evening. He was locked up by Officer Hyde.

The prisoners will be arraigned before City Judge Codington this evening.

"Tuxido" at Music Hall.

The title of George Thatcher's Minstrels is misleading and affording any idea of the fun in "Tuxedo," as the crowded house at the New Park Theatre last night can testify. "Tuxedo" is a three-act farce comedy with a minstrel scene on the green thrown in as an incidental to the second act.

"Tuxedo" is a farce comedy with every letter in the cast an artist. It would involve too much special mention of a company comprising George Thatcher, Hughey Dougherty, Eugene O'Rourke, Raymond More and a dozen others, men and women equally well-known. The minstrel first part is a rollicking variation and a revelation. In its three acts "Tuxedo has not a dull moment. Its success is assured and well deserved.

Miss Ida Fitzhugh sang "Sweet Days of Long Ago." New York Journal: "Tuxedo" will be presented at Music Hall to-morrow evening.

Firemen Exchange Compliments.

A delegation of twenty members of Washington Engine Company No. 1, of Rahway, visited Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, of Westfield, Monday night. At the parade of the Rahway Fire Department, held last October, Westfield's Hook and Ladder Company visited Washington Engine Company, and a large photograph of their visitors was taken. The picture was presented Monday night to their Westfield brethren. It was handsomely framed, and about it were grouped pictures of all of the fire companies of Rahway.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Keely Keeled Over.

Wherever anything is put before you that claims to be a specimen of the mysterious and supernatural, especially if it is enveloped in a jumble of long, unintelligible words, it is safe to wait awhile before accepting it. When a sleight of hand performer or juggler exhibits his powers, and does not, at the finish, tell you that he has at the little tatings that go on, you feel that the objects put promiscuously before the vision are simply to throw dust in the spectator's eyes and distract his attention from the real performance. If many good, honest people and capitalists had only observed those simple directions they might have saved themselves several hundred thousand dollars, and a shaking of their reputations for discretion on many occasions.

Now, nearly twenty years ago John W. Keely, of Philadelphia, came before the world claiming to be the discoverer of a tremendous new motive power which could blow up the universe if he (Keely) could so much as set his foot on the valve. He said he tapped the polar stream of the universe, as it were, and got hold of the interatomic ether and caused its harmonic vibrations to wriggle around the universe and occasion molecular disintegration, or words to that effect. When visitors went to see Keely he showed them a bronze globe, with a hollow metal cylinder passing through it into a sort of metal drum. Keely took a silk cord to the drum and the other end of the cord to a piece of metal affixed to a common mouth harp or harmonica. He then played "Home, Sweet Home" in a pathetic manner upon the harmonica. As if it could not possibly resist the appeal, immediately the bronze globe began revolving.

That in brief was one of Keely's miracles. Until headed mechanics who understood the laws of science and who refused to be bulldozed by the "Home, Sweet Home" scheme, set themselves to work to find out how he did it. Since 1874 it has been waited to the pocket of the wizard Keely to the strains of "Home, Sweet Home." Now comes young Mr. George W. Browne, of Brooklyn, and avers that by means of compressed air and a good sized magnet concealed under the table on which the globe stands he is able to reproduce all the miracles of Keely without any catch trap at all. A conventional wire runs up from the magnet through the table leg. A hidden microphone catches the notes from the harmonica and transfers them to a tuning fork, the tuning fork passes the vibrations on to a concealed battery, the battery passes them on to a magnet, which sets up on the wire and that starts the globe to revolving.

Cheaper Transportation.

The thing that will help farmers most will be the cheapening of methods of transportation and distribution of their products. To bring this about will require daily and all the wisdom that can be brought to bear. Farmers themselves recognize this, and are endeavoring to solve the problem. The Florida Farmers' Alliance adopted at its late meeting resolutions calling on congress to make additional legislation giving the interstate commerce commission power to require transportation lines to make through rates on products going out of one state into another.

The Alliance also calls on congress to give such authority to the decisions of the commission as shall make them final, and not reviewable by any court of law. Whether congress has power to passanch an act like that is questionable, to say the least. The resolutions, however, show that the farmers are thinking seriously about what is the greatest drawback to their prosperity and cheap living in cities as well. Whether the matter can be easily settled by law on the one hand, or by devising some way of reducing the operating expenses of the railroads on the other, is an open question.

The latter method will probably be the timeliest. May be it can be reached by the introduction of electricity as a motive power for long distances.

The chinch bug destroys $100,000,000 worth of grain every year. Sometimes farmers crops in portions of Kansas were a failure on account of it. Then science took up the study of the chinch bug and tried to find means of destroying it. It was discovered that if they caught the bug disease known as sporotrichum globuliformein them would be off like flies that taste of rosin or arsenic paper. So at the State University at Kansas the work was begun of catching chinch bugs and inoculating them with sporotrichum globuliferum. Then these infected bugs were turned loose in the wheat fields. The infection was introduced by shutting up 200 to 300 chinches in a jar with another chinch that had died from the disease. In twenty-four hours these would catch the long range and be ready to be turned loose. In 75 per cent. of the cases in which the remedy was applied it was successful in riding fields of the pest.

In former years our territory of Alaska only yielded in exports $2,000,000. Then the amount rose to $5,000,000, and last year it reached $8,041,515. Other articles of merchandise than sealskins come from this rich territory. Among the things shipped last year were nearly $6,000,000 worth of salmon and over $1,500,000 worth of whalebone.

AGREED ON ARBITRATION

The Behring Sea Negotiations Have Been Concluded.

A SURPRISE IN THE SAYWARD CASE

Attorney General Miller Lets Out a State Secret During Solicitor General Taft's Argument Before the United States Supreme Court.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The important announcement made in the supreme court of the United States by Attorney General Miller during the argument in the Sayward or Behring sea case, that the United States and Great Britain had agreed to submit the Behring sea controversy to arbitration, was the first intimation that the correspondence had at last resulted in a satisfactory agreement. Both sides had agreed to submit the matter to arbitration if an agreement could be reached as to what points should be laid before the arbitrators, but there did not seem to be much prospect of a unanimity of opinion on this subject. Attorney General Miller refused to talk about his revelation further than to say that an agreement as to the questions to be submitted for arbitration had been reached and only awaited the sanction of the senate before being placed before the persons that will be selected by Great Britain and the United States to settle the matter.

Solicitor Taft's Argument.

When the argument was resumed before the supreme court Solicitor General Taft claimed that jurisdiction over the waters according the grant of Alaska to this country by Russia and all waters of Alaska over which the emperor of Russia had jurisdiction was conveyed by the grant, as the waters of Alaska included Behring sea. The question at issue being a political one the executive's decision was conclusive unless congress took action, as, if any doubt in the matter, doubt concerning territorial sovereignty the president was vested with power to make it, and his decision would be correct. How could the president decide, asked Mr Taft, what were the waters of Behring sea if he could not carry out the seizure act? It would be an endless question to be settled by a jury had arisen out of the controversy, for the president to be powerless to decide what action should be taken until after the case had been decided by a court of admiralty or by the federal supreme court.

The President's Power Supreme.

The president exercised the right to decide political questions, and from his decision there was no appeal. The counsel of the British government had said that the United states had no direct claim to jurisdiction over Behring sea. In this they differed from their client, Lord Salisbury, who construed the position of the United States just as the latter claims it. In referring to Secretary Bayard's release of British vessels seized for illegal sealing in Behring sea in 1886, Mr. Taft contended that this was done without waiving the right of seizure.

The Interesting Announcement.

Then came the interesting disclosure of the day. The United States, he said, had been asked to submit the matter to arbitration and had agreed to the proposition, and now the other side asked for an opinion as to selection of the arbitrators. Perhaps arbitration had not been agreed upon, but at least the correspondence matter was leading up to arbitration.

"Not one word," interjected Attorney General Miller, "but it has been agreed upon in the correspondence."

The announcement of the attorney general, inquired the justice, did not create that amount of visible interest that it would have created if made outside the supreme court chamber. Very few persons seemed to recognize the significance of the statement, and Mr. Taft went on with his argument as if nothing had happened.

The Attorney General Speaks.

Attorney General Miller followed Mr. Taft in continuation of the argument for the United States. He thought the jurisdiction of the supreme court had been settled. The Alaska court, he said, was not an inferior court; authorities proved it was a superior court, and its findings were just as conclusive on the supreme court as on anybody else. The decision of the Alaska courts could not be attacked unless a statement of want of jurisdiction appeared on the face, said he, quoting Chief Justice Marshall in support of his contention.

A Rap for the Lion's Roarkies.

The attorney general then made an ironical allusion to the foreign policy of Great Britain, adding that the British government had not always shown that confining regard for international law which Lord Carlisle had spoken so highly of in its international dealings. The question of boundaries, he said, was not a question for the court, because the court did not make boundaries. In concluding the attorney general said an agreement had been arrived at on the basis of arbitration in the Behring sea question, and now the other side asked that the supreme court should decide the question, and not simply decide it, but decide it against the United States.

Attorney Choate's Argument.

Joseph H. Choate, of New York, followed Attorney General Miller in closing argument for the United States government. The three mile limit law, he said, had never been disputed until now.

The Sayward case, he said, was fifty miles from land, was fifty six miles outside of all possible jurisdiction of the United States. It was the first attempt of power of the supreme court to search the proceedings of the Alaska district court to find what jurisdiction it had in finding that the vessel had been seal sledging. Continuing, he said that the position of the United States concerning sovereignty over Behring sea did not hold. Why would not Great Britain ask for the right to exceed the territorial jurisdiction of this country a hundred miles out to sea? He claimed that the United States had not ever made the claim of natural sovereignty brought forward. The state department had over and over again openly disowned the ground on which reparation was made; that from the 103d parallel east to the American shore was mare clausum. With the conclusion of Mr. Choate's argument the case was closed.

Firemen Charged with Incendiarism.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 11.—John Koubouk, twenty-four years old, and John Mc-Cann, fifteen years old, both local firemen, have been arrested charged with firing barns and outbuildings. Koubouk confessed to having set fire to half a dozen buildings during the past three months and implicates McCann. The latter denies all knowledge of the matter.

THE WEST WERE MISSING.

The State Treasury Contest Delayed at New Haven.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 11.—The state treasurership contested election case was called in the superior court. It is the case of Martin S. Sanger against E. Stevens Henry. A subpœna had been issued for Secretary of State Walsh directing him to bring the official returns to court. He did not appear, but his chief clerk, E. S. Hinman, appeared in his stead. He did not have the returns, much to the disgust of the court and counsel. He took the stand, and was closely questioned by the counsel for the plaintiff. He said the returns were not in the secretary's office. They were carried off, he said, the day afternoon by one of the assistant clerks of the house, who demanded them upon the authority of that body. He asserted that he (Hinman) had not been instructed to take the returns to New Haven. Counsel for the plaintiff asked for a copies for the assistant clerk of the house, and charged that his action in taking away the returns was an attempt to obstruct the court.

He characterized the action of the clerk of the house in taking away the returns as a clever Republican trick. State Attorney Doolittle, of counsel for plaintiff, said that the papers had been stolen, and it was impossible to go on with the case until the official returns could be had. Judge Thayer said he did not think it advisable to pass upon this case until the case of the governorship had been passed upon by the supreme court and he therefore continued the case until Dec. 8.

FLEXIBLE BRACELET WATCH.

For Christmas presents in jewelry this year there will be an entire novelty in the way of bracelet watches; our illustrations show two designs.

FASHION NOTES.

Corduroy keeps in favor, and is made in two colors blended into one.

Plaids are employed chiefly for children's costumes this autumn.

One of the greatest successes of this season, however, is Terry velvet. It is made plain, striped and checked.

Woollen Bounces, embroidered on woollen grounds with indistinct stripes, are also seen, and considered very chic.

Fluffy, plushy materials, with bristly hairs peeping out, are also in vogue, and likewise Angora woollen stuffs, striped to imitate fur.

The spots on spotted materials are set in a circle of phunctia, making them look like luminous stars on a plain ground, and this is seen in every color and shade.

A soft felt hat with a crease on top, that goes by the name of "Alpine," is worn by by the girl who apes English fashion and cares not a rap how she looks. Isn't it ugly?

Our winter colors are dark blue, grey and violet in every shade. White is also very much worn, whenever the weather allows it to be worn; and even elderly ladies may wear white woollen costumes if properly made, and adaptable to their figure.

THE CRISIS IN TENNESSEE.

It Is Said Governor Buchanan Has Asked Federal Aid.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 11.—Matters between the rebellious miners and the state of Tennessee are almost at a standstill, the governor asserting that he will rebuild the stockades and the miners daring him to do it. Governor Buchanan realizes the responsibility and is much alarmed at the action affairs have taken. He has been in communication with the secretary of war for some days, and has asked aid of the United States if the worst comes. The general opinion in the south is that a serious fight cannot be averted.

Governor Buchanan is said to fear his handful of troops will not be able to withstand the 6,000 miners of East Tennessee, who would be reinforced by 20,000 others from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Alabama and Virginia, and would wipe out the available militia at his command and then override the whole state in reckless outlawry.

Miss Bonner's Suicide Prevented.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Nov. 11.—Miss Helen G. Bonner, of 25 Belmont avenue, Jersey City Heights, made a sensational attempt at suicide by drowning last evening. She was rescued by Eugene F. Smith, a New York broker. She is suffering from a severe cold. It will recover. Miss Bonner is a handsome blonde of twenty-two. She said she had been troubled with severe pains in her head and made up her mind to kill herself.

This Brute's Victim Will Die.

DANBURY, Conn., Nov. 11.—Mary Green, the seventy-year-old white girl who was criminally assaulted at Redding by "Zip" Willis, a colored man, aged sixty years, is in a precarious condition and will die. She was taken into the courtroom to identify the prisoner, but as soon as she was confronted by Willis she was taken with convulsions, from which she did not recover for some time.

Pennsylvania Farmers Meet.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 11.—The State Farmers' Industrial union is holding its annual convention here. President Shaveley, of Lebanon, presided. The proceedings are secured. A system by which the Alliance can dispense with the middleman in the transaction of their business is being considered. Last night Hon. D. F. Willetta, of Kansas, national lecturer, delivered an address.

Heirs to $6,000,000 in England.

STRATFORD, Ont., Nov. 11.—James, William and Robert Meachen, three brothers living in Stratford, have received word from England that by the death of their brother they are heirs to an estate of $6,000,000.

CHINA HAS A CIVIL WAR.

Hunan in Open Revolt and Europeans in Peril.

BRAZIL IS IN A BAD WAY ALSO.

Several of Her States Have Seceded and Defied the Authority of Dictator Fonseca—A Warship and Military Sent to Quell the Insurrection.

SHANGHAI, Nov. 11.—Intense excitement prevails here. The course of events is tending toward a great civil war. Foreigners in China are in extreme peril.

The chief of the great secret society of the Kaiao Hui has been arrested in the French concession at Shanghai. The viceroy at Nankin has ordered him to be tortured, hoping that he will betray his accomplices. If not he is to be beheaded.

Hunan in Open Revolt.

The whole province of Hunan is in a state of siege and open revolt. Seditious placards are posted everywhere.

The European ministers at Pekin are seemingly indifferent. The Chinese ministers and officials fraternize with them, call them friends, banquet them and get up feasts for them every week.

As a result of this the foreign residents in China are furious. Their indignation is beyond expression because of the meanness of those "diplomatists," who are forgetting their duty to their own countrymen.

The trial of Mason, who had attempted to pass arms and dynamite to the rebels, has now some point to it, and Mason's action is explained by the foregoing.

Brazilian States Secede.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—A dispatch just received from Pernambuco brings further alarming intelligence regarding the situation of affairs in Brazil. There is no doubt that the situation arising out of the assumption of dictatorial powers by Fonseca is rapidly approaching a point where a resort to arms will be necessary to establish the position of the dictator.

Many States Secede.

The Republicans see in this last move of Fonseca an attempt to override the authority asserted in him by the constitution. So strong has the opposition to Fonseca grown that yesterday it was announced that the important state of Rio Grande do Sul had declared its independence.

The dispatch just received shows that steps will have to be immediately taken to prevent, if possible, the disintegration of the republic. The state of Grao Para has followed the example set by Rio Grande do Sul, and declared its independence. The dispatch further states that it is expected that the independence movement will be followed by a similar declaration by the state of Bahia.

Fonseca Will Fight.

Dictator Fonseca is moving rapidly to suppress these attempts to set up separate governments, and he has ordered a warship to the coast of Rio Grande do Sul to prevent the state authorities from carrying their declaration of independence into effect.

The dictator might perhaps do more to establish the new order of things were it not for the fact that he is a sick man. Some reports have it that he is suffering from cancer. That he will take vigorous measures to suppress these latest revolts against his authority is not doubted. He will fight desperately to sweep all obstacles from his path.

Germans to Contend With.

Rio Grande do Sul has 50,000 fighting Germans in its population; the revolution has the sympathy of them all. The German population is reported to be organizing into armed bodies on the plan of the Dutch settlers of South Africa.

The troops under the command of General da Fonseca are said to have been ordered to move upon Rio Grande do Sul. A still later report has it that there has been a conflict with serious loss of life between the supporters of the government and the colonists who have just declared their independence.

A Plot to Poison Ezeta.

SAN SALVADOR, via GALVESTON, TEX., Nov. 11.—A conspiracy to assassinate General Antonio Ezeta, minister of war, the navy and the interior, and brother of General Carlos Ezeta, the president of Salvador has just been discovered.

The chief conspirator is General Maximo Salguero, who owes his life to the clemency of the brother of the man whom he had plotted to kill. Salguero was sentenced to be shot, but was pardoned by President Ezeta. Several arrests have already been made. It is said that Dr. Salvador Duarte was selected as the instrument of the conspirators. The method to be employed was poison.

Chili Is Friendly.

SANTIAGO, Nov. 11, via GALVESTON.—Senor Matta, the Chilian minister of foreign affairs, whose reply to the demand of the United States for satisfaction on account of the Baltimore outrage has created so much discussion, says that the United States representatives here seem to think that they can in every way dictate to Chili and that Chili must submit and would not do under various conditions. This stand on the part of the United States representatives, he added, was untenable.

As to free and unbiased trial of the industriously and persistently spread that the present government of Chili was unfriendly to the United States administration, no such people, nothing could be further from the truth. They were positive misstatements of the real facts.

Senor Matta impressed your correspondent strongly with the conviction that the Chilian authorities will, upon the completion of the judicial inquiry into the attack upon the Baltimore's seamen, act speedily and fairly in arriving at a conclusion.

Rev. Wilson Cured by Faith.

TO SAVE HIS SILLY SON.

Ex-Governor Waller and the Platt Divorce Case.

HIS EFFORTS TO SHIELD HIS HEIR.

He Paid Money to Mrs. Platt's Lawyer, Who Was to Make No Defense, but the Woman, After Agreeing to Help Save Young Waller, Backed Down.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The correspondence of ex-Governor Thomas M. Waller, of Connecticut, promises to play a very important part in the adjustment of the domestic wrangle of Minnie A. Platt and her husband, Engineer William H. Platt, United States navy. According to the wife, who is made defendant in an action for divorce, in which the son of ex-Governor Waller is named as corespondent, her defense rests almost solely upon letters which, she says, were written by the ex-governor and his son and are now in her possession.

Mrs. Platt infers strongly that some one has broken faith with her, and after agreeing to shield the name of the corespondent from the public was practically instrumental in making it known. Later on Mrs. Platt partially substantiates a portion of the assurance with the statement that but for the motion made on Saturday in Mrs. Platt's behalf, young Waller's name would not have been made public.

Wanted to Avoid Publicity.

"It is true," said Lawyer Graves to a reporter last evening, "that the utmost secrecy has been maintained regarding this case. We desired to avoid all publicity. Both plaintiff and defendant were of the same opinion. We succeeded until a few days ago. That was my only object in asking for a private hearing, and on that occasion I stated my reasons to the presiding judge in full.

What the Ex-Governor Paid.

"In consideration of this agreement on the part of counsel not to force publicity Governor Waller agreed to pay Mrs. Platt's counsel fee, and her husband, through me, agreed to pay her thirty dollars a month. That he paid until a short time ago, and only ceased, as far as I know, because he stated to me that he thought more was being done for young Waller than himself."

"What Mrs. Platt's relations with the governor or his son may have been since this difficulty other than this I do not know. The only money paid by him was, as far as I know, to Mrs. Platt's counsel. What hush money he may have paid, as inferred in an interview in a morning paper, I cannot imagine. In view of the seemingly strong assertions in this regard, I think some letters I have may throw some light."

Mr. Graves then produced the following:

Mr. Waller's Letter.

MR. HORACE GRAVES, AUG. 11, 1891.

DEAR SIR:—I have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with you friends of mine assure me that I could receive from you in the matter in which I am interested the full sorrowful data from my memory of a profession to another. You are acting as the attorney in certain matters in which a wayward son of mine seems to be involved. I am desirous of saving all parties from unnecessary notoriety and scandal, and with this view I should like to see you personally tomorrow, if convenient.

I think I should be able to suggest to you a way in which the matter may be arranged quickly to your client and tolerably to me. At any rate, I should like to have the opportunity of conferring with you about it, and, after the all it, neither scandal nor notoriety can be avoided. I shall feel better prepared to confer at these and five minutes. Yours very truly, THOMAS M. WALLER.

This was written about the time the case first got into court.

"That letter," said Mr. Graves, "expresses the sentiments of my position in the matter."

That no time was lost in preventing the scandal from leaking out is proven by Governor Waller's letter under date of Aug. 25. He first states that in coming to an understanding with Mrs. Platt's counsel he tried to get Lawyer Patterson to accept $100 as his fee. The latter, the letter continued, declared the courts would allow him more, and he would not accept less than $250, which sum was finally paid. Patterson would not give a receipt, but gave a memorandum instead.

Two days later ex-Governor Waller again wrote and mentioned having received from Lawyer Patterson a receipt and an agreement in the matter of his motion for alimony and counsel fees.

The Scandal Sure to Come Out.

It was at this time, said Mr. Graves, that plaintiff agreed to pay his wife thirty dollars a month. Other letters passed between the governor and Mr. Graves, including the following:

OCT. 9, 1891.

MY DEAR SIR.—Your note of yesterday received. I agree with you that you have in the interest of society done all I can and, yet to prevent the public scandal which the trial of Platt vs. Platt is likely to produce, I am confident her lawyer is to blame for her change of mind. I should like to know when the trial is to occur that I may advise my son against taking any course to sink him deeper in his fog. THOMAS M. WALLER.

The following letter was written three days later by the ex-governor's private secretary:

NEW YORK, Oct. 12, 1891.

HORACE GRAVES, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—I regret I did not have an opportunity to call upon you today. I received a letter from the plaintiff in which it is suggested that "there are but two ways of settling the case." She does not name the ways. I have asked her in a letter to do so. I should like to have her proposition in writing. I am satisfied that it will only require a little money to have a default in the case and I shall suffer a little money to escape scandal if necessary. I hope you will not object to a postponement of the matter until my return. Yours very truly,

T. M. WALLER, per L. K. T.

"That," resumed Mr. Graves, "gives the truth regarding any expenditures of money in this case as far as I know. If you think I have done wrong in agreeing to secrecy to protect an honored name, when it could in no way prejudice the merits of the case, I wish you would tell me. Whether Mrs. Platt has suggested money to Waller or his father I cannot say. The governor's inference seems plain. My impression is that she intended to marry young Waller after her husband had obtained his divorce, but finding that this would be impossible, on account of the close watch kept by the elder Mr. Waller on his son, she broke her agreement. She has not seen young Waller for some time because the father did not permit him to visit her."

Counsellor Patterson refused absolutely to discuss the case or reply to Governor Waller's criticisms and insinuations of his methods and motives.

Ex-Governor Waller Speaks.

Ex-Governor Waller seemed greatly disturbed over the fact that his letters to Lawyer Horace Graves had been made public. He said:

"As soon as I heard of the rumors and charges made against my son in the Brooklyn affair I did all I properly could to save the parties interested from scandal and notoriety.

"In accordance with an arrangement between Mr. Graves and the lawyer on the other side I paid for my son certain moneys and I would have paid more had I not been satisfied that the payment of more money would not prevent the scandal. It was then that I wrote a letter that I had concluded, upon the whole, to pay no more hush money, but to face the music and perhaps contribute to it. I wish you would state that I never paid any money to either Mr. or Mrs. Platt in this case, nor have they ever asked me for any money."

They Claim to Be Innocent.

The money that was paid, the ex-governor said, had been given to Mr. Graves. He declined to make public the amount, as the sum was small. Both the son and Mrs. Platt, he said, claimed to be innocent of the charges, and he felt satisfied that upon the trial they would have no trouble in establishing the fact. Mrs. Platt is accused of being improperly intimate with young Waller at the Long Branch hotel, corner of Washington and Sanda streets, June 25 and July 5, 8 and 9.

THE BATTLE AT HARRISBURG.

Senator Gobin's Resolution That the Senate Has No Jurisdiction.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 11.—At the senate investigation Senator Gobin, Republican leader, offered a resolution that under the constitution the senate has no jurisdiction to proceed against the accused officials, as the misdemeanors with which they are charged are indictable offenses.

Senator Ross, Democratic leader, offered an amendment providing for the appointment of a committee of seven to prepare a report to the governor, recommending the removal from office of Messrs. Boyer and McQuaid. But Chairman Penrose sustained a point of order that the amendment was not in order. No vote was reached.

EGAN AND SCHLEY HOSTILE.

The London Times Says the Latter Declares War Inevitable.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—A dispatch from Santiago, Chili, to The Times says that Minister Egan and Captain Schley continue to exhibit a bitter animus against Chili. Captain Schley declares that war is inevitable. The American consul at Valparaiso adds that a strong fleet is coming, and that therefore other warships are leaving, and that the evidence of Chilian hostility remains.

The captain of the Esmeralda reports that he was not allowed to coal at Acapulco. The captain of the Baltic speaks in unqualified terms of the sympathy shown for the Congressional party in California.

Forged Winnie Davis' Name.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 11.—The Jersey City police have two letters, one to General Gordon, of Atlanta, and the other to Dr. William Morrow, of Nashville, bearing the forged signature of Winnie Davis and asking for the loan of $1,000 to her mother, the widow of the late president of the Southern Confederacy. The police suspect that the letters are the work of Edward L. Stoddard, who is awaiting trial in the Hudson county jail.

A Dark Outlook for Rev. George.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 11.—At the trial of Rev. George Lewis' case Dr. Sanford was examined. Dr. Sanford stated that Dr. Erway told him the operation had been performed before the Erways was summoned. Dr. Sanford's evidence may help Dr. Erway's case, but not Mr George's. The impression prevails that George will be unable to escape conviction unless some startling developments in his favor are brought out soon.

Lottery Democrats Won.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 11.—A hotly contested primary election was held in this city for the selection of delegates to the Democratic convention today. The election turned largely on the lottery issue. The anti-lottery Democrats put a full ticket in the field, but were overwhelmingly defeated by the lottery faction. This event considered a severe blow to the anti-lottery party.

Bridgeport Sues to Pay a Debt.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 11.—The case of the city of Bridgeport against Maria A. Hotchkiss and Mary Thorne was begun in the superior court. The city owes the Hotchkiss heirs $50,000 but owing to litigation cannot pay the money. The city may repay the amount to the wrong parties and therefore brings the suit that it may follow the court's directions.

A Spirit Medium Exposed.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 11.—Anna Eva Fay, the alleged spirit medium, was made the subject of a complete and successful expose by Reuben A. Punnett, of this city, at Washington rink last night before a large and intelligent audience. Dr. Fay's late performance being repeated and exposed as sheer trickery, pure and simple.

A Woman Burned to Death.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 11.—Mrs. Henry Perrine, of Cranbury, while lighting a fire upset the vessel, and the burning kerosene ran over her person. Her clothing and hair were burned off. She died in great agony.

President Thompson Indicted.

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 11.—The grand jury have found a true bill against William J. Thompson, the president of the Gloucester Jockey club, for maintaining a nuisance and a disorderly house.

The McKinley Bill Abroad.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The McKinley tariff severely affects exports. Vessels are leaving London half empty, owing, it is claimed, to this cause.

Economy.

Jack (who has just received a remittance) —Then, after that, I say we have some tame duck and—

Dick (whose remittance has not arrived) —Hold on! What do they stick you for that?

Jack—Two dollars and a half.

Dick—Whew! Don't you think we'd better get a wild duck and tame it ourselves?—Life.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR MEET.

The General Assembly in Session at Toledo.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 11.—The general assembly of the Knights of Labor is in session in this city. General Master Workman Powderly was received with great applause. District assemblies from 1 to 250, each having a membership of not less than 1,000, are represented, and the trades assemblies having delegations here are: window glass workers, clothing cutters, shoemakers, cigarmakers, coal miners, plate glass workers, street car men, railroad men, surface car men, salesmen, silk weavers and fifteen national trades assemblies, whose trades are not mentioned. In all there are not less than 150 delegates present, representing a constituency of not less than 1,500,000 members. A message of congratulation and well wishes was received and read from the Brotherhood of Boiler Makers.

In the afternoon the report of the credentials committee was discussed and at night a reception was tendered to Mr. Powderly and the visitors, at which Mayor Emmick presided.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

HOUSEKEEPERS READ.

HERE IS INFORMATION THAT SHOULD BE KEPT IN A SCRAP-BOOK.

Well Tried and Practical Recipes That Every Housewife Should Know—This Column Will Repay Careful Reading.

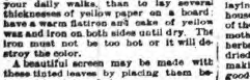
There is no better way of preserving the beautiful autumn leaves which you may gather just now in such quantities in your daily walks, than to lay several thicknesses of yellow paper on a board; have a warm flatiron and color of yellow wax and iron on both sides until dry. The iron must not be too hot or it will destroy the color.

A beautiful screen may be made with these tinted leaves by placing them between two plates of glass.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

Suggestions as to Home-Made Articles. The Latest Fad in Jewelry.

It is early to talk of Christmas gifts, but for those whose purses are not long and whose little presents have to be thought out and made by willing fingers, it is not too soon to begin preparations.



BRACELET WATCH.

A simple gift is a board covered with plush or velvet for wall decoration, on which are displayed miniatures, medals, old watches and other curios; the shape of the board is a matter of taste—round, oval, horseshoe, diamond, &c., according to fancy. Little brass hooks are neatly screwed in at intervals to hold the various articles. Keyboards for keys are made in the same way, and will be appreciated. Before Christmas there always is a general turning out of old stores to find bits of silk and velvet or other dress materials, wools, ribbons, lace, beads &c., likely to be of use. There is a great fashion just now for bags, and wall bags and hand bags can be put to a variety of uses, and can be made of any material. Work bags are frequently made of a purse shape, and stripes of alternate silk and velvet may be used, with a tassel at each end. The old model known as a stocking bag, a circular case, round which is a row of pockets, the centre closing with a ribbon or string, is always useful. Then a larger bag may be made with a waste-paper basket as a foundation, the lining rising into a bag top, and this and more capacious bag will hold all sorts of necessary work, which can be conveniently stuffed into it in any emergency. Duster bags and shoe bags also may be named, as well as the pretty flower bags for covering an unsightly flowerpot, and for holding a preserve pot or tin in which to put cut flowers. Cushions of all sorts are acceptable presents, especially for elderly people or invalids. Cushions in patchwork form all sorts of scraps of silk and satin may be used, and make charming cushion or foot-warmers. The square bolster shape of cushion is popular for the back of chairs.

Those who live in the country and who may have saved or dried grasses, leaves, ferns, &c., for drawing-room vases or for laying on the dinner table, can offer no more acceptable gift to town friends. It is an improvement to mount the selection on the stick with fine wire or string in the manner artificial flowers are mounted, beginning at the top, binding the stalks round and round, and adding fresh grasses and leaves according to taste. The perhaps not pourri may have been made during the summer months and time of roses by country ladies, and a present of a well-selected pot pourri would be highly appreciated by those who have no gardens. Lavender may be made into many pretty things, and for laying in drawers, among the clothes and house linen is always liked, and a revival of the good old custom of great-grandmother days, when lavender and sweet herbs grew in every garden and were dried and used in every room. In the making of all Christmas gifts, it is the good-will and interest taken in the work that enhances its value.

TEACH YOUR BOY TO BE TIDY.

There is no Reason Why They Should Not be as Careful as Girls.

Girls are instructed that it is not ladylike to keep their sleeping and sitting rooms in such condition that they would be ashamed to invite strangers to inspect them. Why should not boys receive a similar training? Why should they not be schooled to handle broom and duster as deftly as their sisters? There is no degredation of a boy's manliness in such occupations. He need not be obliged to make his own bed, although that is an accomplishment practiced by many young men in their college days. He should learn, however, the proverb: "A place for everything and everything in its place," is not restricted in its application to feminine possessions alone, but embraces things masculine as well. He should be made to realize that derangement of books, papers and underclothing is go less disgraceful in a boy's room than in a girl's; that dust and dirt are as objectionable in the one as in the other, and that it is a man's business to keep his surroundings in a well regulated condition himself, without casting the burden of his untidy habits upon any woman. What numberless wives would arise and call their husbands' mothers blessed if this discipline had been maintained with the men of this generation.

HANDY HINTS.

Be careful where you keep your flour, it is more readily spoiled by odors than milk.

Boiled starch is greatly helped by the addition of a pinch of salt and a little gum arabic.

Chloroform will remove paint from clothing when benzine or turpentine will not affect it.

Salt sprinkled over a grease spot on a hot stove will almost immediately stop it from smoking.

A simple liniment for sore throat is made by mixing three parts of sweet oil and one part of spirits of hartshorn.

Take Care of Children's Nails.

A little child's nails should not only be kept cleaned, but properly cut, both on toes and fingers. A well-rounded nail rarely breaks, and its shape prevents ingrowing. It is also well to remember that too large a shoe will cause a child nearly as much discomfort as a tight one.

GERMAN COFFEE.

How Our Teutonic Cousins Secure the Essence of Coffee.

An American traveling in Germany writes: "I have taken especial pains to find out for you just how the Germans make the delicious, clear, strong coffee they always serve to us. I have been in the kitchen myself and seen enough strong, black coffee made for ten people to each have a large cup, and even a half cup beside, for most of them, out of only four heaping tablespoonfuls of unground coffee. The secret of this much-to-little-one is time—with a capital T most certainly, for it is a prominent factor in the process.

"The four spoonfuls of browned coffee went into a grinder, coming out in a semi-powdered condition. It was then divided into three parts—but, before I go any further, I must sketch for you the earthenware coffee-pot they use.

I imagine you have often seen the like in New York furnishing shops. Perhaps you have even used one, but if you have you probably made the mistake of thinking the whole of the coffee you were to drink was to be passed and repassed through the grounds and the infusion kept hot.

"They divide the ground coffee, as I said, into three parts: Put one part in the top of the coffee-pot and pour over it one-half cup of boiling water. It is poured on very slowly so that the coffee becomes very solidly packed down. Then they pour another half cup of boiling water on very slowly, and leave the whole thing for about an hour to drip, drip, drip, little by little, into the bottom part of the coffee-pot. Then the third portion of coffee is put on the top of the wet grounds and the extract that has dripped through is poured through the whole of the grounds.

Half an hour is given to that drip, then the third portion of grounds is put on top of the rest and a cup of boiling water poured slowly through all. That is the final drip. The gold liquid in the bottom of the coffee-pot is called coffee essence. Six or eight cups of boiling water is thrown into that and it is ready for serving, and is, par excellence, the most delicious of drinks. The servants' coffee is made from the grounds thus used and is quite as good as that served upstairs, only it take longer to drip through all the three portions.

THE GERMAN COFFEE POT.

A little of the coffee essence is always kept in the house in a covered jar, and by adding a little of it to a cup of boiling water a cup of coffee is made ready at a moment's notice.

HOW TO KEEP A SERVANT.

Treat Her as If You Knew She Was a Human Being.

In the first place, if a young girl comes under one's roof, takes an interest in the work, and settles down as if she were going to remain, the mistress should feel responsible for her comfort and happiness. The average girl who comes from the old country these days can read and write, and is by no means a "biddable" and easily trained than the much berated servant of yore. Take an honest-faced, newly arrived girl of a good disposition into a bright, cheerful kitchen, see that she has a comfortable bedroom, be patient in teaching her for one week only, and to each one the reward will be real help. So slight a sign of thoughtfulness as a comfortable chair to rest in when work is over will make a girl understand that she is looked upon as something more than a drudge.

TO CURE A COLD.

One Must Be Careful However Not to Catch Another.

To cure the very worst cold catchable, take one teaspoonful of flaxseed, one ounce of licorice, and one quarter of a pound of raisins. Put the above named ingredients into two quarts of water, and over a slow fire boil it down to one-half its original bulk. Now, pound till very fine one-quarter of a pound of rock candy, add it to the mixture, and finish by adding one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Drink a half pint of this upon going to bed, and a little more whenever the cough is troublesome. This is a sovereign balsamic cordial for the lungs.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Some Things Which Are Convenient for Housekeepers to Know.

That four cups of flour weigh a pound.

That three cups of corn meal weigh a pound.

That one tablespoonful of butter weighs one ounce.

That one cup of butter, solid, weighs half a pound.

That one rounded tablespoonful of flour weighs half an ounce.

That two cups of granulated sugar or two and a half cups of powdered sugar weigh a pound.

To Boil Hominy.

A half pint of large hominy is sufficient for a family of average size. It swells to four times its original bulk. Put it on the fire in plenty of cold water as soon after breakfast as possible, in order to allow it plenty of time to become thoroughly cooked before dinner. When the water dries out, add more, but let it be hot. Four hours at least are required for the grains to become thoroughly softened and done, when it is a most wholesome and palatable article of food. When ready to be dished for dinner, add a teaspoonful of butter, and mix it in thoroughly.

Oat Meal Gems.

One cup of oat meal.
One cup of water.
One cup of flour.
Two teaspoonfuls baking powder.
Pinch of salt.

Soak the oat meal in the water over night. In the morning mix the other ingredients dry; then add the flour, wet with sweet milk, to a stiff batter, place in gem pans and bake immediately.

Honey Candy.

One pint of white sugar.
Water enough to dissolve the above.
Two cookingspoonfuls of honey.
Boil till brittle. Pull while cooking.

VARIOUS VERSES.

English as She Is Spoke.

Mr. A. Gay Youngman, of Columbus, Sundayed here with friends.—Lancaster Gazette.

He brought them home, the usual presume,
Because he wanted quiet,
And dinner-ed there because he liked
The Lancaster diet.

He may have paper-ed there awhile,
Or yellow cover book-ed it,
Or marveled, after he had meal-ed,
How well the people cooked it.

Perhaps he hammock-ed in the shade,
And just slept-ed a little,
And puffed the smoke into the air,
And cuspidor-ed the spittle.

Or may have carpet-ed heart there
And afternoon-ed about her,
And vowed that ne'er till he was graved
Could he get on without her.

Perhaps her mother at that point
Came in and mother-in-ed him;
Perhaps her father carriaged up
In style and overawed him.

Perhaps, however, they were not
Distanced in either fashion;
They may have parlor-ed it alone,
And rocking chair-ed their passion.

Perhaps he supper-ed with his dear,
Then hurried to the station,
And train-ed and street-car-ed to his home
In great exhilaration.

—Orillia Patriot.

Her Reason.

She speaks about my new silk hat,
And says it is not straight;
She hints about my awkward pose
Until I grow irate.
She says my trousers are too short,
And puts me in a state.

She glances at my wiry hair,
And thinks it might be brushed;
She says that when I tied my tie,
I must have been quite rushed;
And talks about the way I sit,
Until I feel quite crushed.

And yet I am not vexed with her,
I could not be, you know,
For when I ask her why it is,
She makes me hard my row,
My pretty critic, smiles and says:
"Because I love you so."
—Tom Masson in Clothier and Furnisher.

Before the Fire.

The wintry air seems full of snow,
The leaden clouds are hanging low,
The frozen ground
Nevermore beneath your tread,
The bare boughs creak above your head—
A dismal sound.

November now is almost here—
November, chill and dark and drear;
And soon the snow
Will heap itself up, drift on drift,
And bid every crocus lift,
While fierce winds blow.

Well, never mind; the glowing coal
Within the grate will cheer your soul,
And find a thrill
Of joy all through you till dismay
Ensues at thought of how you'll pay
The coal man's bill.

—Somerville Journal.

The Occasion and the Man.

The sublime strains of the "Wedding March," played on the magnificent organ by the eminent musician as it never had been played before within those walls, pealed through the church.

Slowly down the aisles came the wedding party. Slowly and in perfect time the principals and their friends and attendants ranged themselves in front of the altar and stood waiting.

Arrayed in judicial robes whose costly elegance and faultless taste might fitly envelop him but could not add to the charms of her lovely face and form stood the trusting girl who was about to give her happiness into the hands of another.

Proud and happy, with conscious strength and manly tenderness visible in every feature of his handsome face and in every line of his symmetrical, well knit frame, stood the exultant young man who had chosen her from all the world as his heart's mate.

The clergyman broke the silence. In deep tones he began the impressive, time consecrated exordium that prepares the way for the legal solemnization of the sacrament of marriage, and proceeded until he came to those ever memorable words:

"If any man can show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together let him now speak, or else hereafter forever hold his peace."

He paused, in accordance with his habit and the requirements of the ceremony, and again a deep hush fell upon the congregation.

The stillness was broken by a tall, slender man with eyeglasses and a hollow cough, who rose up in a back seat.

"While the audience is waiting," he said, "I should like to offer a resolution to the effect that it is the sense of this meeting that the World's Columbian exposition should not be opened Sunday."—Chicago Tribune.

Christmas Hints.

Already the little boy begins to insinuate about Christmas.

"I dreamed last night that you gave me a five dollar gold piece for Christmas and that pa gave me a ten dollar bill."

"My little boy, don't you know that dreams go by contraries. You will be disappointed," said the mother.

"No I won't. If the dream goes by contraries, then you will give me the ten dollar bill and pa will give me the five dollar gold piece. I am safe, anyhow."—Texas Siftings.

A Boy on Girls.

Mark Twain considers the following the funniest (genuine) boy's composition he ever saw:

ON GIRLS.

They think more of dress than anything, and like to play with dowls and rags. They cry if they see a cow in afar distance and are afraid of guns. They stay at home all the time and go to church every Sunday. They are al-ways sick. They are al-ways funy and making fun at boy's hands and they say how dirty. They can't play marbles. I pity them poor things. They make fun of boys and then turn round and love them.

I don't beleave they ever killed a cat or anything. They look out every nite and say oh aint the moon lovely to-nite or one thing I have not told and that is they al-ways now their lessons bettern boys.

Proof Positive.

"Are you sure he is dead?" asked the insurance agent of the widow of a deceased miser.

"Certain of it."

"What proof have I of it?"

"Why, twenty carriages at his funeral that I ordered myself."

"How does that prove his death?"

"Ah, sir! you didn't know him. If Tom had been the least alive he'd kicked at the expense, sure!"—Texas Siftings.

Strength of Habit.

"Barclay," said the wife of the sick man, "here is the Rev. Mr. Goodman, who has come to talk to you."

"I had be bring anybody to identify him!" inquired the bank cashier feebly.—Chicago Tribune.

This Date in History—Nov. 11.

1620—Canute, first Danish king of England, died at Shaftesbury; born in Denmark about 995.

1620—Triumph of Richelieu; King Louis XIII granted all his demands and banished his enemies.

1793—Jean Sylvain Bailly guillotined at Paris; an astronomer and essayist, he favored the revolution, but was condemned by the Jacobins; "the noblest victim of the Reign of Terror."

1805—Ferdinand Marie, Viscount de Lesseps, projector of the Suez and Panama canals, born in Versailles, France.

1811—Ben McCulloch, soldier and frontiersman, born in Rutherford county, Texas; killed at Pea Ridge, Ark., 1862.

1880—Lucretia Mott, reformer and abolitionist, died; born 1793.

The Good Natured Man.

Wife—How is this? You apply for circulars and price lists to all the merchants and tradesmen in the town, and still you have not the remotest intention of buying anything.

Husband—Certainly not, but in these slack times I just want to give the poor fellows a little pleasurable excitement.—Der Ulk.

"Overpressure."

Mother—Where are you off to, Hans?

Hans—To school. Teacher is going to show us the eclipse of the moon tonight.

Mother—Then you will stay at home. If your teacher wants to show you anything he can do it during school hours!—Gewerbezeitung.

Fashion Echoes.

Box cloth is becoming a fashionable material for ladies' jackets and cloaks.

Shetland shawls in plain or fancy colorings are much used for driving and traveling cloaks. The fringe forms a suitable trimming for the front and hem.

Red is a long way ahead of any other color in millinery. Military red is the shade that one sees on most of the new models that have just come over from Paris.

Sequins appear to be a favorite trimming. They are sprinkled over the crowns and bonnets and sewn round the brim of large hats to form a border.

Round waists are still worn.

BREVITIES.

—Thanksgiving Day will occur on Thursday, Nov. 26th.

—A gang of burglars are operating in Rahway and vicinity.

—At the Casino to-night—Harp Recital. A large attendance is anticipated.

—The City Government Council will meet in adjourned session next Monday evening.

—George Thatchers Ideal Minstrels will present "Tuxedo" at the Music Hall this evening.

—Some of the cross-walks in this city were almost impassable yesterday on account of the mud.

—The Union County Petit Jury was discharged for the term yesterday with the thanks of the court.

—Mrs. Jacob Cunningham, colored, died at her home in this city this morning after a brief illness with hemorrhages.

—Cypress Commandery, No. 6, Knights Templar, are the guests of Damascus Commandery of that place to-day.

—County Superintendent Ayres of Somerset county is visiting the various public schools throughout the county.

—The members of the Crescent League at a meeting held last evening decided to give a minstrel entertainment early next month.

—The members of the Union County Country Club will partake of an elaborate banquet at the Casino on the evening of November 21st.

—Anyone not provided with tickets for the delightful Harp Concert to-night can pay at the door of the Casino. Do not miss this musical feast.

—There is to be a stag party at the Crescent League Club house Saturday evening, at which time the prizes won in the pool tournament will be presented.

—County Collector's receipts and disbursements since May 12 have been as follows: Receipts, $189,674.45; disbursements, $19,116.79; balance, $95,357.66.

—Court New Brunswick, No. 7980, A. O. F. of New Brunswick, held their annual ball in Zimmerman's Hall at that place last evening. Members of the order from this city attended.

—On Nov. 1st, the wages of baggagemasters and passenger train brakemen on the Central Railroad were increased $5 each per day, making the pay of the former $2.35 and the latter $2 per day.

—A meeting of special prayer for young men will be held in the Y. M. C. Hall this evening at eight o'clock. All active members of the Association and all interested in young men are urged to be present.

—Sheriff Codington of Somerset county yesterday received the sum of $20,000, with the following securities: Archibald L. Codington, Wm. W. Dunison, Peter Stryker, Matt H. Vanderveer and James F. Major.

—Joe English had a full house again last night at Reform Hall. The audience were delighted with his Irish wit and humor. Twenty-seven signers were obtained to the pledge. He speaks at the hall again to-night. Don't fail to go and hear him.

—It was reported on the streets this morning that the remains of the late Theodore Johnson were buried in the Potter's field. The report is untrue. Mr. John H. Iler and Sons, by whom the deceased was employed, paid all the burial expenses.

—Miss Collingshaw will address the members of Volunteer Council, 16 Kings' Daughters at the Park Avenue Baptist Church this evening on her work in the Martha Trowbridge Home in New York. A collection will be taken up at the close of the talk.

—The case of Timothy McCarthy vs. the Central Railroad Company was tried before Justice Nash and a jury yesterday afternoon. Mr. McCarthy sued for $200 damages for the burning of his barn which he claims caught fire from a locomotive spark. The jury brought in a verdict for the amount claimed with costs.

—One of our merchants asks us not to publish his name, if we publish the list of those who signed that alleged call for a citizens' ticket, as he says he did not understand the matter when he signed, was very busy, and thought it would be the quickest way to dispose of the matter. It was so unanimously worded that he did not suspect its true character.

—Two detectives of the State Bottlers' Protective Association made a raid on the farms near Chatham, Summit and Millburn, on Wednesday afternoon, and despite the protests and tears of the women, seized 920 bottles, one-third of which had been filled with catsup, elderberry wine, etc. Moral: Don't see the bottles of any person whose name is known in the place. The courts afford protection to the brewers even to this extent.

TAKE A WALK DOWN THERE.

And See How Public Money was Expended by the Combine.

At the time Spangenberg was a candidate for Councilman one of the most earnest workers for his election was the Mr. Cox referred to in the following communication republished from THE NEWS of last March, and worth remembering particularly at this time, for it was soon after the election of Mr. Spangenberg, that the particular favors seem to have been bestowed upon his brother-in-law, at the public expense:

LIGHTING THE BROTHER-IN-LAW.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Permit me to state a few facts, and than as a few questions. At the corner of South and Woodland avenues, where Mr. Alfred Cox lives, there has been an electric light since the plant was first established here. After passing Mr. C's house there is not another arc-light you reach the street opposite the Netherwood station. During the last year or so, there have been two other electric lamps placed at the limits of Mr. Cox's lot on each street. These lamps are on very neat iron posts or poles. This makes three lamps around this beautifully turreted corner—Now for my questions:

QUESTIONS.	ANSWERS.
1st—Who ordered the two extra lamps to the corner was given by councilman Span	1st—We understand that particular corner?
2d—Who pays for the lighting of these two lamps?	2d—The taxpayers pay for them, and are extra electric lights taken from any other corner before as a result of combine rule.
3d—Who is chairman of the committee on Spangenberg lights?	3d—Council as a
4th—What relation is the chairman of that committee to Mr. Cox?	4th—Brother-in-law

Please answer these questions in the interest of taxpayers, and oblige ONE OF THEM

This brother-in-law's property thus lavishly provided at the public expense, is, we understand, the only one in the entire block, and this is especially true of the one thoroughfare. There are entire blocks of probably twenty houses in the city where one light or less is deemed sufficient. The occupants are poor people, and are not brothers-in-law or otherwise related to the chairman of the Committee of Lights. In one of these dark streets a merchant was knocked senseless and robbed some nights ago, and the culprits have never been arrested. But the combine in ways that are dark, and in tricks that are vain, "like the heathen Chinee, are peculiar."

Struck by a Train.

The man who was struck by the Philadelphia & Reading fast train at Grant avenue at noon yesterday proves to be William Ciegler of New York, who was employed in repairing furniture in a house on Second street. He was going to dinner at his boarding house at that time and stepped out from behind a passing coal train when struck by the express. He was hurled high in the air and picked up by some friends and carried to his boarding house. He was conscious for the train hands' failure to find him. The train was going at such a high rate of speed that it reached Evona before the engineer succeeded in stopping it.

City Court Notes.

Patrick Cahill was fined fifteen dollars by City Judge Codington last evening. He pleaded guilty to being drunk and disorderly and soliciting alms. He paid the fine.

John Pinney was fined five dollars in the City Court last evening. He was arrested for drunkenness. The fine was paid.

Rosanna Pullin, a resident of Stony Hill, was the next prisoner arraigned. She pleaded guilty to being drunk. Judge Codington sentenced her to the county jail for ten days.

An old man named Robison pleaded guilty to being drunk. He was discharged from custody with the understanding that he should lose no time in getting out of the city.

Donation Party.

The Salvation Army will give a donation party on Court house square from the abundance of good things sent in. It is *safe to say that the Army has the sym*pathy of a large number of people in this city. George Belcher deposited a wagon load of the necessaries of life at the home of the officers in fact enough to last for several months to come. A handsome platform carpet, costing $19, was among the gifts. Next Tuesday a "Drunkards' meeting" will be held in the hall, at which several reformed men from the Metropolis are expected to be present and speak. Miss Frances Willard is much interested in these meetings and has requested Mrs. Ballington Booth to hold them in every State in the Union.

A Service of Song.

The following is the programme of the special service of song to be held at the First Presbyterian church next Sunday evening:

Service Symphony	Alex Guilmont
Hallelujah	William Ros
Resurrection	Shelley
The Sha-ow of the Evening Hour	Barri—Shelley
My Redeemer and my God	Dudley—Buck
Assumption Hymn	Ry Rissé
Overture—Oberon	Weber

There will also be numerous selections of familiar hymns.

Seriously Hurt by a Fall.

Gilbert E. Palke, of Elizabeth, while bicycling Monday back of Scotch Plains, on Feltville Hill, turned a corner sharply and struck a large stone. He was thrown from his wheel and his arm was fractured.

—Borough Council meeting to-morrow evening at eight o'clock.

AMID SILENT COMPANIONS.—VII.

The Poetry of Emerson.

Emerson has so frequently and variously defined the office of the poet that it is essential that in commenting upon his poetry his own beliefs should be recognized; his conceptions of the noble power of poetry being Titanic, the outcome of a wide knowledge of the soul of thinking men. Poets are pre-eminently thinking men, who may be hood-winked in practical life, but who can dip their brushes into the colors "with which birds, flowers, the human soul, the living rock, the broad landscape, the ocean and the eternal sky were painted," and not fail in thought tho' many fail in expression. It is fortunate that Emerson spared his colors, that he was a moralist to whom art was only the expression of his morals, from whose belief in art for truth's sake emanated the terse ever-changing beauties of his thought in prose and verse. No poet has so constantly preached the truth as he chooses, no moralist has so strongly placed poetry among the virtues; no poet has taken to heart so sensibly Sir Thomas Browne's theory, "Nature hath made one world and art another. In brief, all things are artificial, for nature is the art of God." We find this in Mogpetagoid and in the sympathizing Woodnotes where with the weight of shadows and the breath of Nature as Emerson and Thoreau saw it and communed with:

"Harken! Harken!
If thou wouldst know the mystic song
Chanted when the birds are young
Aloft, abroad, the pean swells;
O wise man hear st thou half it tells?"

Nature, in the void created by a want of antiquity, has been a boon to American poets; the New England group, except Holmes, whose poetry was coy, and Longfellow, who has been dreamers amid pines and sunny meadows. Nature freed them from the bondage of prose. Thrall Bit and Bilted their brains with just such woodnotes as those which Emerson made classic. In the beauty of Greek thought lies in its universality, because it dealt with life and morals at first hand, probing to the simplicity of things, and it is in this that Emerson is best likened to a Greek head on Yankee shoulders, for he thought has no touch of provincility, nor did he speak in so common a tongue that his poetry may with become hackneyed nor else than inspiring to the ear. He chose his words with such scrutiny as one of Plato's men would use. He is not a common singer, he is no *popular poet, he is no warbling minne*singer, but it is probably that he will rank in after ages with men of genius whose close thought and careful scholarship will remain as long as the pure thoughts and classic verse of Sappho and Hans and Æschylus. Emerson is a poet for scholars to buy on own choice of language, strong, simple, yet unadorned, terse, frequently subtle and ruggedness, will be an everlasting strength. In this quatrain, to the Botanist,

"Go then to thy learned task
I skip o'er the days of spring:
Do thou of the sages ask
What use the bears and bring."

As was Socrates the sage of Athens so will Emerson long be beneath Hellenic surfaces made his philosophy the very inquisitor of philosophers and his voice as universally interpretive as that was Emerson, while being distinctly the child of Nature, the expounder of the truth of nature in all the earth to the world in which he sought the soul in the woods and studied it by its own high laws. The thoughts of such a man, commingling truth and love in the one highest purpose, living a life so exalted that his truths carry with them the great proof of a noble soul behind them, and his poetry, the very breath of life into the severer but sweeter atmosphere of spiritual thought, strengthened by all possible help in his suggestive theory "Beauty is the mark God sets upon virtue." Such thoughts of such a man, whose capacity for powerful reflection no intellect has ever sounded, who has left behind him in Prose and Verse Ages where to the Past clings with devotion for while the tumult of the nearer vanishes, there is about its pure thoughts and art of such a truth-seeker, could not but turn that which is mortal to immortality and make his poetry the supreme moral ideality which though it often does not make a complete whole poet, yet these fragments of power whose soul is the essence of truth, are poetry. In his journal he wrote, "I cannot look without seeing splendor and grace. Therein was his poetic power, that light of the Infinite which suffused his brain: as the "Light Eternal of Paradise entranced and won Dante as the light of arch-angel and seraphim filled Swedenborg with rapture, so did Nature and purity of highest thought, and love fill Emerson with "the sun and other stars," combine in giving him the power never to look upon Nature without splendor and grace.

In his lightsome verse, and in those flowings which welled from the depths of noble vows and heart-possession, the song, Thine Eyes Still Shined has a charm akin to his deepest outburst in the Threnody, and though he in neither case has written a marvellous lyric in the sense of the perfect thought so nobly expressed in The Rhodora and his great swan song Terminus, yet these are gems of such a verse as this second from the love-song, his dainty touch should have filled Arnold with a sense of recognition of his felicitous expression:

"This morn I climbed the misty hill
And roamed the plains below,
How danced thy form before my path
Amidst the deep eyed dew!"

This felicity of expression is also noticeable in the lines from To a Memoriam,

"I grudge not these their bed of death,
But thine to thee, who never reaped
Thy full harvest of breath."

and this quatrain from May-Day:

"Turn swifter rount, O tardy ball!
And sun this frozen side,
Bring hither back the robin's call,
Bring back the tulip's pride";

and how lucid and keen this coming of Spring.

"It is a sound, it is a token
That the marble sleep is broken
And a change has passed on things."

If popular poetry rested on true greatness, its depth of thought or seriousness of purpose, if it were great alone by what it suggested—and Emerson's is so full of ideas that one's mind must be alert to meet his on its own level of understanding—Emerson's poetry would be popular, but popular it can not be for popularity is not in its spirit. We feel throughout it that it is but the "drowsy world" was the world of nodding scholars and pre-occupied wanderers along by-paths where all nature was bedecked but ignored. How often we stop to hear all of Gilbert White's birds singing in the hedges, how often we feel the vigorous manly hand of the sage stretch forth in gentle guidance; how often the scholar turns over his pages of light and love and beauty with an intimate feeling that there is hope, there is justice, there is much that makes beauty its own excuse for being, is mere conjecture; yet it is all there, and behind all his inborn delight for high counsel and preaching. And when the book is closed, we mutter, Here is one who would take the jewels of past thought and polish them into new radiancy; here is one who cleansed the windows of his own soul that the light and love and beauty of God might shine more fairly, more sweetly into the souls of other men; here is one who touched the minds of loutish dreamers and thinkers and made them see splendor and grace wherever they should look, that they might realize the supremacy of the thinking man whom God prefers and to whom sweet angels minister.

"The spell of beauty came
And turned the drowsy world to flame,"

Now sweet, too, this other view of Emerson's character, which Henry James, Sr., has given.—He seemed to me unmistakably a virgin-born person. I looked at him, and reminded me of nothing so much as of those persons we go to Christ's manger to understand, after Him professing no allegiance to him,—having never heard His name pronounced—and yet perfectly fulfilling his will.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Homan Declines.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I wish through THE NEWS to thank the delegates of the Citizens' meeting, held Nov. 10th, for nominating me on their ticket, in the Third Ward, for the office of Councilman. While thanking them for the honor so bestowed, I take this early opportunity of declining all such offices feeling and knowing that my own business occupies occupies all my time.

Respectfully,
JAMES P. HOMAN.

Freeholders' Meeting.

After the afternoon session a large number of bills were ordered paid. All election bills, however, were referred to the Auditing Committee, and when approved by them the Director and Clerk were authorized to order them paid.

The Finance Committee recommended the following appointment for the coming year: Court, $9,000, tramps, $200; jail, $1,500; insane, $2,000; roads, $5,000; $4,500; interest, $7,500; elections, $5,700; bridges, $26,600.

Board adjourned to meet at Bernardsville to-day, to inspect the celebrated dam bridge there.

The Visit of Gov. Abbett.

Gov. Abbett will arrive at Westfield Friday evening on the 7.23 train from New York. He will be met at the station by the Reception Committee, Messrs. Charles H. Reed, C. B. Scudder and A. D. Cohen, Jr., and by the Westfield Fire Companies in full uniform, who will escort The Governor's suite of thirteen guns will be fired, and a procession led by the Plainfield Citizens' Band, to the march to the hall. The route will be as follows: From the station to the Park avenue hall, to Broad, to Westfield avenue, to North avenue, to Central avenue, to Broad street, to Arlington Hall. The exercises will begin at eight o'clock. Dr. Chauncey B. Ripley will preside. Reserved seats will be provided for invited guests and lady and but otherwise the exercises will be entirely open to the public. After the presentation of the trumpet the invited guests will partake of a banquet at Etta Hall.

Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs Dead.

Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs, of Ocean Grove, died of peritonitis last evening at the residence of her daughter in East Orange. She was seventy years old, and had been a resident of the Ocean Grove Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, ever since its organization. She was an active worker in the temperance cause and in the church. She took part every year in the meetings of the Ocean Grove Camp-Meeting Association. She was well known as a lecturer.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

A Big Investment.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12th. (Special.)—It is rumored that ex-Senator Vanderbilt has purchased $1,0000,000 worth of Manhattan Elevated Railway stock from Jay Gould and that they will take an active interest in the running of the road.

THE WRIT DISMISSED.

Beekman and Jenny Wiley to be Resentenced on Saturday.

The Supreme Court Tuesday dismissed the writ of certiorari in the case of Samuel Beekman and Jenny Wiley, which was obtained on objection of the defendants to the appointment by the Sheriff of Prosecutor Marsh acting while holding office of State senator.

Mr. Marsh argued the case for the dismissal of the writ. Beekman and Jenny Wiley will be resentenced on Saturday morning.

They are the prisoners now confined in the Union county jail under sentence of ten years in State prison for manslaughter.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Radford of West Fifth street are spending three weeks with friends in Newark.

An exchange says, "The news from Bishop Vincent is encouraging. The rest and change of trip abroad seem to bring improvement."

A surprise party was held at the residence of Mr. Nichols in Evona last evening. A number of young people were present and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Mr. Charles Schermerhorn, Jr., is on a short visit to this city. He is connected with the Talbot Manufacturing company of Oxford, Md., and starts in a few days on an extended trip West.

Rev. B. Fay Mills commences his revival services in Elizabeth on Monday Nov. 30. Preparatory services will be held in the various churches asking part, beginning to-morrow evening.

Messrs. Samuel R. Manning, Isaac S. Dayton, Samuel R. Dayton and David Blackford of Piscataway have been drawn as petit jurors to serve at the December term of the Middlesex county court.

The Rev. John Carey, colored, died *suddenly at his home on Manning ave*nue, North Plainfield, last evening. Heart disease is assigned as the cause of death. The funeral will take place from his late residence Saturday afternoon at half-past two o'clock.

"The Glen Echo Chautauqua, published at Glen Echo, Md., says Dr. Swift, but purposes to give up assembly work. His duties in connection with his office as Correspondent of the Winds, and assembly Union, and his work for the C. L. S. C. take all his time. His decision will be greatly regretted by the management of several assemblies of which he has been the successful conductor for years, and by a host of friends whom they always gather at these places to meet him."

Mrs. E. A. Gross of Seventh street returned Wednesday from an extended pleasure trip during which she visited the home of her childhood in Indiana, and travelled some nine thousand miles. She has been absent but six weeks, going out over the Central Pacific, Colorado R. R., and returning by the Northern Pacific, passing through twenty-four States. She considers Manitou, Colorado Springs, the most beautiful spot on earth. In it are the Gardens of the Gods, Pike's Peak, the Cave of the Winds, and numerous cascades and caverns of most extraordinary beauty.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Chinese scare has not yet subsided, but the Pacific coast seems likely to have also a Japanese scare. There are more than 5,000 Japanese in San Francisco now, and many more are scattered through the state. The poorer classes come to this country to work in the great vineyards and fruit gardens of California.

Signor Bonghi, who will preside at the peace congress at Rome this month, is an eloquent writer. He says that it is the triple alliance which now maintains the peace of Europe, "a peace which ruins us all, which is monthly, weekly, hourly in peril; a peace which fills us with alarm and obligations to keep our guns constantly loaded, and to shout every moment, 'Who goes there?'"

Persons who wish to please both Chicago and New York should take a lesson from Miss Sara Bernhardt. She doted on Chicago because the people were so enthusiastic and generous to her. But when she talked to New York reporters, with her hand on her heart as proof of her sincerity, she declared, "The only place in this country in which I feel at home is in the city, where the people more nearly resemble those of my own country." Oh, yes! With its streets so filthy that any sixth rate country town in the Union would blush if it owned them, New York is very like Paris, very.

We are to have a new article of food in the United States. It is the bulbs of the calla, commonly known as the calla lilly. The flower of this plant is beautiful enough to give it a reason for being without anything else, but its bulbous roots are very edible, and the plant will grow in the open ground in the southern part of the Union. Florida farmers are already planting it by the acre. It propagates itself in great abundance. The edible tuber must first be boiled to rid it of the acrid, Indian turnip taste that burns the tongue when the root is raw. After being thus boiled the tuber may be dried, ground and baked with cream. It is entirely palatable and tastes somewhat like a potato, except that it is more mucilaginous. Time was when the tomato was grown solely for ornament. Will a like fate overtake the beautiful and stately calla? In swamps is where the calla most delights to grow.

The Universal University.

Professor C. Hanford Henderson writes for The Popular Science Monthly, one of the most comprehensive and understandable papers that have yet been in print, on what is popularly called university extension. He writes, "University extension has been well defined as a university education for the whole nation by an itinerant system connected with established institutions." That is to say, comparatively few of the whole population of the country can afford to go to a university several years to get high training and culture, therefore the university will come to them. A university is a school that offers special courses of study to the learner whereby he may fit himself for any profession, such as lawyer, physician, preacher, teacher or artist. The meaning of university extension is that practically such a university will come into each student's own neighborhood and give him its advantages. Even where he does not wish to take any of the learned professions, university extension will step in and make him what is still better for the general interests of society than the specialist—an all round cultured man. In such all round cultured men and women America is sadly lacking, and thoughtful, scholarly people who are watching the drift of things fear that the time will come ere long when we shall suffer for this need.

The Chautauqua course furnishes the foundation, and an admirable one, for the university extension. The extension idea is that from the centers of learning, such as Harvard, Yale, Cornell university and Johns Hopkins, professors shall go out to different localities and give courses of lectures and instruction just such as they give to their classes at home. The expenses of these lectures will be defrayed partly by the students who are benefited and partly from a fund provided by subscription. Professors who stay in one place become settled and rusty anyhow, and out of touch with the world, and this outside contact with real workingmen and women will rub them up. It will be just what they and their outside students need. The promoters of university extension see in the plan magnificent possibilities, nothing less than that every man and woman in America may obtain a thoroughly trained intellect and become as scholarly and cultured as those who have all the advantages wealth and leisure can give.

We need the higher education in America, and we need it in a large measure, for we are a people with a large opportunity. And we need it particularly now, for the present terrific press upon us for socialism will demand a balanced and large unbalance which none only when the human spirit is well disciplined. We have been a practical and hurrying on a people too unimaginative and too modest. We need the infusion of a spirit of culture into the national thought and life, if we are to realize the destiny which seems possible to us.

The preaching of Peter the Hermit aroused all Europe. The present occasion is not pitched upon, but the crusade which it proclaims should be higher and more vital than the recovery of Jerusalem.

IN THE WORLD OF LABOR

Master Workman Powderly Talks of Ballot Reform.

GOMPERS AGAINST THE SOCIALISTS

He Thinks They Are the Enemies of Trades Unions, and He Proposes to Fight Them with All His Power—Two Big Farmers' Conventions.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 12.—The Knights of Labor in general assembly sent a fraternal greeting to the Marble Workers' National union, now assembled in annual session at Baltimore, and to the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union of Ohio, in session at Columbus, O.

General Master Workman Powderly's report covers many important topics. He first takes up the work accomplished through the efforts of the order in the line of legislation. He advises that the general assembly leave the work of framing local laws to the local assemblies.

On the question of politics Mr. Powderly insists that when an officer seeks political preferment he should retire from his official position in the order. He speaks of the good influences exercised by the adoption of the ballot reform act, 343 by the last assembly, which gave the chief officials power to discipline members who defamed the order or any one belonging to it in the newspapers.

Government Control of Railroads.

Mr. Powderly gives his approval to the industrial conferences to be held in Washington next February. He congratulates the knights on the growing strength of the opinion that the government should operate the railroads, and thinks the time near at hand when this will be brought about.

The Question of Ballot Reform.

He next takes up the question of ballot reform, and takes much credit for the order because of the fact that in eighteen states a secret ballot has been secured. He suggests that the following resolution be enacted: "That all bills shall be submitted to the people for their scrutiny and approval before they are passed upon by congress or the legislature." Mr. Powderly suggests that it would be well to change the name of the paper printed by the order.

The sentiment in favor of the establishment of a uniformed rank is growing in the order and many of the young members are desirous of giving it a test. Mr. Powderly thinks there can be no harm in permitting those who favor the idea to put it into practice, and its adoption is recommended. A degree for those who are too young to become members under the present laws is recommended, and Mr. Powderly thinks such action would be beneficial. The report closes with a reference to the death of Richard Griffin, formerly grand worthy foreman of the order. Last night a ball and reception were tendered to the visitors at the Pythian castle.

Gompers to Fight Socialism.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is determined to fight socialism with all his strength. He proclaims himself a champion of trades unions, and has selected for battle ground the quarrel existing between the Central Labor Federation and the New York Federation of Labor.

Said Mr. Gompers: "The action of the socialists has shown they are resolved to disrupt the trades unions, and has proved how just was the expulsion of the Central Labor Federation from the American Federation of Labor. The latter body is a national organization, entirely identified with trades unions. At the Detroit convention last year of the American Federation of Labor the socialists were kept out, and no socialist will be admitted to the approaching convention at Birmingham, Ala., as a socialist. Socialists may, however, come there as representatives of trades unions, that can't be avoided."

The Farmers' National Congress.

SEDALIA, Mo., Nov. 12.—The Farmers' National congress was called to order by Vice President Smith, of Kansas, at 10 a. m. The earlier morning session was taken up by the introduction and reading of a number of resolutions, which were in turn referred to the proper committees. One of the resolutions favored the idea that national taxation be limited to the wants of the government economically and honestly administered. Another urges the passage of the pending interstate road law during the recess of the congress and providing rules governing same.

Non-Partisan Work Successful.

Secretary Lemmon read a paper, offered a lengthy preamble and resolution to the effect that the success of the National Farmers' Congress of United States on securing the passage of the interstate commerce law, the enactment of the signal service, the ... ng of secretary of agriculture a cabinet position and other enactments beneficial to the farming interest, ... been secured because of the non-partisan position of the organization. The preamble was followed by this resolution:

Resolved, That in seeking that greater good can be secured, we do not exhibit a hysterical sensation, we advocate ... national reform and respect every state ... and district organization's ... right to ... and ... or more delegates to a national convention to be held in connection with and as a part of the annual meeting of this body at such a place as ... may select.

Congressman ... rd, of Sedalia, addressed the ... on the subject of "Railway Transportation."

Granges at Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Nov. 12.—There are over 1,000 grangers here, and they are still coming in. Even for Washington state is properly represented. The National Grange has opened with Master Colonel J. H. Bingham in the chair. The State Grange adopted very strong resolutions before adjourning. It favors an amendment in the Australian ballot system so as to have electors mark each candidate and proposition they wish to vote for. The election of United States senator by popular vote, free coinage of silver, further reduction of salaries of public officials is asked, and a reduction in a two-cent per mile rate on railroads.

Farmers at Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 12.—At the session of the state convention of the Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union a resolution was transacted.

Pugilist Pat Slattery in Trouble.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Pat Slattery was arrested on a warrant issued by the district attorney of Chautauqua county, charged with prize fighting. He is in jail here.

FASHIONABLE FURS.

Latest Styles in Fur Capes, Jackets and Cloaks Described.

There is no fur, many ladies think, that is so becoming to a dark complexion as sable. It is a pity that its price puts it beyond the reach of all—blond and brunette alike—except the very wealthy. Mink will be a fashionable fur this season. It is about the best substitute for sable one can get. Sealskin suits a fair complexion beautifully. Tuller capes in sealskin are in popular demand. One seen had a shawl collar of astrakhan, another was trimmed about the shoulders and down the front with sable. It was also ornamented with a sable collar. The Newmarket coat is a garment this year with the long double fronted circular cloak. Short fur lined cloaks are made of plain cloth in pretty shades of brown, red, terra cotta, gray, blue and tan, and are mostly trimmed with opossum, black fox or lynx. Sealskin jackets are very trim as regards shape. Pretty jackets to be worn at night, fitting back and semiloose front, in quite new model is made in the Newmarket shape and is edged with astrakhan and has epaulettes of the same fur. The short Newmarket sealskins have much to commend them on the score of smartness and novelty. They have pockets, revers, cuffs and full sleeves on the shoulders.

Among the more salient novelties in fur are the sable or mink sleeves, introduced into the long, bias sleeve, for lined cloaks made of fine ladies' cloth, and embellished with large buttons. These are intended for driving or traveling, and are costly. Sealskin cuffs lined with satin have sable or mink sleeves, as well as revers and collars. These are so arranged that they turn back and fasten close. The fur jackets, whether seal or some other skin, are getting longer. Sable yokes are being introduced into some of the newest cloth driving cloaks, and are carried often down to the waist, back and front, in a point. Box cloth garments have wide collars and revers, which, when they are buttoned over, show a narrow fur edging and, when left open, a fur lining. One of the newest cloaks is a three quarter length with a fur cape, the junction of the surrounding frill and yoke is marked by a deep puckered fur heading. Broadcloths are still trimmed with astrakhan, appearing as a narrow border, collar, etc. Some of the woolen cloaks are trimmed with curled natural seal of a golden color. This is put on as a square in front, with a point dipping to the waist at the back. A splendid cloak for an elderly lady is composed of fashion's grand dames—is lined throughout with ermine. It is quite a regal looking garment. Rosa are wider than they were last season. Some of the new flat boas are sold with gauntlet cuffs and toque to match.

In the first illustration are shown two novelties. One is a cape of Alaska seal, the upright collar and yoke of which are in Russian sable. The hat is of sealskin, with trimmings of sable tails. The second figure shows the fashionable three-quarter length jacket. This jacket has gauntlet cuffs and high collar; the trimming is made of mink tails. The hat is of similar fur. The long cloak in sealskin, illustrated in the second cut, is fashioned with a square yoke edge, with tails back and front. Astrakhan is the fur that the majority of men like best. The more elaborate coats are lined with seal, otter or sable.

Thanksgiving Day in New Jersey.

TRENTON, Nov. 12.—Governor Abbett has issued a proclamation appointing Nov. 26 as Thanksgiving Day the fur that the majority of men like best. The more elaborate coats are lined with seal, otter or sable.

SENATORS OFF FOR HOME

No Jurisdiction in the Boyer-McCamant Cases.

THE VOTE DIVIDED ON PARTY LINES

End of the Long Investigation of Pennsylvania State Officials at Harrisburg. Senator Gobin's Resolutions Adopted After a Spirited Debate.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 12.—The extra session of the Pennsylvania senate adjourned finally after adopting the Gobin resolution that the senate does not have jurisdiction to make the investigation against the accused—State Treasurer Boyer, Auditor General McCamant and the Philadelphia magistrates—for which purpose the governor called the body together. The resolution was adopted by a vote of 28 to 19, representing the two political parties. The Democratic senators kept up a vigorous fight to defeat it.

The Governor Attacked.

In the course of the discussions, which frequently waxed very warm, Senator Porter, chairman of the Republican city committee of Philadelphia, declared that the governor called the extra session from partisan motives, and no assurances from the attorney general to the contrary could induce a single Republican senator to think otherwise.

He said the people of the state thoroughly understood that, as the 58,000 majority at the recent election indicated. He said he would vote for the resolution because he did not believe the constitution should be thus abused for political purposes by any party.

Denounced by Senator Hall.

Senator Hall denounced the extra session as a farce, for which the Republicans were responsible, and to them must be attributed the loss of $5,000, the cost of the extra session to the state. At the beginning of the session he presented a resolution declaring the jurisdiction question to be the senate's, and at that time the senate by a unanimous vote adopted the same. Senator Hall said he knew at the time that the Republican senators were not going to permit a deliberative for a "careful and searching" investigation, for he had heard whisperings that after the election the matter would be ended just as it has ended.

Mr. Ross denied the charge made in Mr. Gobin's resolution, that the charges against Boyer and McCamant were vindictive or impeachable. Mr. Packer read a short speech charging that the government and attorney general had called the session for partisan purposes. Mr. Gobin replied to Messrs. Ross and Hall in a five minute speech. The vote was finally called on the Gobin resolution, and it was adopted by a strict party vote—yeas, 28; nays, 19.

The Resolution.

Private Secretary Tate was then announced and presented the nominations made since the adjournment of the legislature. Mr. Packer then offered the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, the senate has already decided in the case of Henry K. Boyer, state treasurer, that it has no jurisdiction under the constitution in this proceeding to inquire, to hear and to determine the charge of official misconduct preferred against him, and to address the governor asking for his removal from the said office of state treasurer for or on account of anything in the proclamation of the governor contained; and,

Whereas, the charges against all the other officers named in said message are also charges of official misconduct, and are identical in effect to the charge of all the other officers named in the said message; and,

Whereas, it having been decided by the senate in manner aforesaid that it is without jurisdiction in the premises, no good end would be accomplished by further prolonging the session; therefore,

Resolved, That ... on the senate adjourns today it shall adjourn ... die.

This was agreed to, after some confusion, upon a call of the roll, resulting: Yeas, 28; nays, 19.

The Governor's Nominations.

After a recess and the transaction of some routine business the governor's nomination's were taken up. The yeas and nays were called and the vote confirmed except one from Armstrong and two from Juniata counties, which were laid over at the request of Senators Shoemaker and Wood. The committee appointed to wait on the governor reported that he had no further communication to make to the senate, and Mr. Grady then moved that the senate adjourn sine die, which was carried unanimously. The senators had consumed just thirty days in arriving at the conclusion after expressing their opinion in a formal vote that they had no jurisdiction in the cases.

Liar Joe Mulhattan Jailed.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—Joe Mulhattan, well known the country over as "Orange Blossom," the writer of some of the most touching and marvelously untrue stories ever published, is behind the bars at Central police station charged with larceny. Patrick O'Toole, a young railroad man who met Mulhattan for the first time Tuesday night and slept with him, says Mulhattan robbed him. Mulhattan denies taking any money, but the exact amount missing was found in his possession. About two months ago Mulhattan was released from a Chicago inebriate asylum.

A Reunion of Abolitionists.

HARTFORD, Nov. 12.—Many of the abolitionists have appointed a committee to arrange for a banquet and reunion in Hartford during the coming winter. Among the abolitionists interested are John Hooker, Hartford, seventy-five years old; D. W. C. Pond, Hartford, sixty-seven; J. A. Jewell, Willimantic, sixty-three; George P. Rogers, New London, sixty-eight; Benjamin Brown, Brooklyn, Conn., eighty-four, and Salome Bartlett, Hartford, seventy-four.

Joe's in an Asylum Now.

RED BANK, N. J., Nov. 12.—Joseph Hook, thirty-two years old, who, when a boarder in the house of David Riddle on Shrewsbury avenue, broke in the bedroom of Riddle's daughter and Minnie Ryder and attempted to assault them but was frightened away by their screams, has been declared insane and taken to the insane asylum at Trenton.

Like the Skyward Case.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The case of the American schooner Sylvia Handy, involving the same question as that of the Sayward case as to the jurisdiction of this country over the waters of Behring sea outside the three mile limit, was argued before the United States supreme court

LAWYER LAWRENCE'S SUICIDE.

He Gambled, Lost and Then Shot Himself Dead.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—George R. Lawrence, a lawyer from Pittsburg, committed suicide at the Everett House, Union square. His body lies in a Fourth avenue undertaking establishment awaiting disposition by his friends. It is a sad ending to a story of dissipation and financial ruin wrought at the gambling table. Lawrence had a prosperous law practice in Pittsburg, and came on here originally on legal business for a client, but had evidently remained to taste the pleasures of metropolitan life.

Lawrence was fascinated with gambling. He was a regular visitor at Daly's establishment in West Twenty-ninth street, and sat at roulette and faro. It is reported by sporting men that he won $1,350 at one sitting, but had subsequently had a run of bad luck, and played away his last dollar. Borrowing from friends from time to time he continued to try his fortune until his losses had aggregated something like $6,500. He then retired to his room and shot himself dead.

On the little table in his room was a letter addressed to the proprietor of the hotel:

Kindly say nothing to reporters. The bald fact is all that is necessary, and details may well be spared. What I owe can be cheerfully and promptly paid upon presentation of bill to my father, George V. Lawrence, Monongahela city, Washington county, Pa. Do not say to reporters that my bill is unpaid.

The Dead Man's Career.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—George R. Lawrence was the son of ex-Congressman George V. Lawrence, of Monongahela city. He began his law practice in Washington county, Pa. His office associates, ... Magill, Wishart and Ewing, were ... ally at a loss to ascribe any reason for his self destruction. Although suffering from an ailment which physicians had declared their inability to cure, Lawrence, they said, had apparently many years to live and was noted for his sunny disposition. He was happily married to Miss Margaret Shaw.

She Defended the Flag.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Nov. 12.—An immense throng witnessed the presentation of a magnificent silk banner to Miss Emma Conners, the brave and pretty school teacher, who, single handed, defended the American flag which waved over her school house from the assaults of copperheads who tried to tear it down. General Lew Wallace made the presentation address and paid an eloquent tribute to the heroism of the young lady.

Notwithstanding everybody knows that dyspepsia, skin diseases, rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, &c., are from impure blood, produced by ill living, the disease still exists. The next best thing is to purify the blood by Cactus Blood Cure and neuralgias results.

THE REVOLT IN BRAZIL.

Dictator Fonseca's Troops Sent to the Scene.

RAPID SPREAD OF DISAFFECTION.

Three Garrisons Have Already Joined the Insurgent Forces and Lively Times May Be Anticipated—The People of Rio Janeiro Are Kept in the Dark.

VALPARAISO, via GALVESTON, Nov. 12.—It is reported here today that a number of members of the Brazilian congress, which Dictator Fonseca recently dissolved, have sought an asylum in the different foreign legations in Rio Janeiro.

Uruguay has become alarmed at the state of affairs in Brazil and has massed troops along the frontier line of that country. On the night of Nov. 9 a revolt was begun in the state of Rio Grande do Sul. At last accounts the greater part of the state was occupied by the rebels.

Generals Fernandez and Santa Annaare said to be at the head of the revolutionists, and their ranks are reported to be receiving constant accessions.

Troops Hurried to the Scene.

The garrison at Yuguaron, it is said, have joined the insurgents, and the artillery has been placed at the disposal of the two generals who are in command. The dictator's governor in Rio Grande do Sul, Castilo, deemed the revolt so serious that he asked the central government for reinforcements representing his position as precarious. Dictator Fonseca at once sent her gunboats, three monitors and two transports loaded with troops to the scene of the uprising.

Two garrisons have also joined the rebel forces in Rio Grande do Sul. While all this is taking place the residents of Rio Janeiro seem to be kept in perfect ignorance of these stirring events. They believe that everything is peaceful in the republic and that the discontent against Fonseca is not worth noticing.

The Origin of the Conspirators.

The chiefs of the revolution are said to be Visconde Pelotas, Baron Jijux and Generals Astropollo and Fravares. Their object seems to be to form a national party in opposition to the dictator. This party is to be made up of both Liberals and Conservatives. There are now two political parties in Brazil. One favors Dictator Fonseca and the other is opposed to his government.

CATHOLICS ARE ANGRY.

They Take Offense at Secretary Ben Butterworth's Remarks.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—Ben Butterworth is in hot water and may lose his position as secretary and solicitor general of the World's fair. In a speech at the Standard club last Thursday night he is reported to have said:

"Italy is suffering from overtaxation. What the church leaves the army takes. If I owned Italy I'd hold an auction and sell the Atlantic ocean, I'd sell 10,000 cathedrals and 1,000 madonnas and a thousand churches, and I'd establish churches in their stead. The power of the — ak old man—I speak it as reverently — S—k waning."

By "the weak old man" the Catholics say that Mr. Butterworth meant the pope. The Catholics are indignant, and they demand Mr. Butterworth's resignation from the World's fair officials. Secretary Butterworth denies that he said anything in his speech that could cause offense to Catholics or anybody else.

The President's Words of Consolation.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Nov. 12.—President Harrison, who, during his recent trip through this state, was the guest of the late Governor Smith, has sent the following letter to Mrs. Smith:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 9, 1891.

Mrs. J. Gregory Smith, St. Albans, Vt.

DEAR MADAM: I have noticed with very great sorrow the announcement in the papers of the sudden and unexpected death of Governor Smith. It brought back to me very vividly the pleasant incidents of my recent sojourn under his hospitable roof and the delightful family group that gathered there about him. Please accept, my dear madam, the assurance that I have in spirit visited again your home and mourn with you the loss which is irreparable, but in the light of Christian faith consolable. Please present my very kind regards to the family, including the little grandchildren. Very truly yours,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Sued by Vice President Morton.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Vice President Levi P. Morton would like very much to collect the bill of $50,000 to which he holds against Millionaire Charles P. Palmer. Although Mr. Palmer draws an annual income of $40,000 per annum, he has found it utterly impossible to settle his indebtedness to Mr. Morton. Mr. Palmer is said to have lost a great deal of money in backing Helen Barry in "A Night's Frolic." Mr. Palmer is in almost constant attendance upon her.

Free Silver Losing Ground.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—The Herald says Democratic members of congress from the west and northwest are declaring against the passage of a free silver coinage bill, and the silver dollar cause appears to be losing ground.

Harrington Accuses O'Brien.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Timothy Harrington says he has proofs that William O'Brien deceived Parnell.

CABLE BREVITIES.

Clerk Schulze, the alleged Jack the Ripper who was arrested on suspicion of the murder of the woman Nitsche in Berlin, has been discharged.

The German emperor has caused various passages to be cut from Wildenbruch's new play, "The New Master."

The Dublin National Press charges Mrs. Parnell and Harrison with conspiring to keep the Irish relief fund from the evicted tenants.

The militarism which keeps all railroads in Russia for governmental transport is said to be the cause of keeping thousands of tons of grain blocked and rotting in the Caucasus, while the peasants in other districts are dying of hunger.

The Nanticoke Miners Buried.

NANTICOKE, Pa., Nov. 12.—The funerals of the eleven victims of Sunday's mine disaster took place at Nanticoke Wednesday. The whole town was in mourning, the mines and mills having shut down and business of all kinds being generally suspended. Religious services were held in all churches. Thousands of persons attended the funerals.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

The League Reduces Its Admission Fee and Means to Fight.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—The National League held a secret session last night. President Young gave to the press the following resolution, which shows that the League intends to wage war against the Association:

"With a view to making baseball what it has been our purpose to do—a popular outdoor sport—to encourage the young and growing element in all our cities to patronize our grounds, and in compliance with many requests through the press to several National League clubs, all clubs of this League do hereby agree that we shall hereafter, on our respective grounds, except on holidays, provide and furnish field seats to which the admission fee will be twenty-five cents. For all such seats similar facilities of admission and egress will be provided as for other portions of our grounds."

The protest entered by Chicago against certain games of New York at Boston was disallowed, and the pennant goes to Boston.

He Is One Legged Bicycling Champion.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 12.—A one legged bicycle race for the championship of the world took place here last night between Charles G. Kilpatrick, of Danville, Ills., and Harry Lamb, of this city. Each was won by Kilpatrick, who made three miles in twelve minutes. The time was wonderful for a one legged man.

Harvard Outplays Trinity.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 12.—Harvard defeated Trinity at football by a score of 56 to 0. The playing of Harvard was something of a disappointment to her admirers, as the rush line work was at times very weak, both in offensive playing, in making holes for the ball and in stopping rushes of the Trinity backs.

Three Yale Players Crippled.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 12.—The Yale football team defeated an eleven from Amherst college here by a score of 27 to 0. Accidents were frequent during the game, forcing the retirement of three Yale men and one of Amherst's players.

Seats Sold at $1,000 Premium.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 12.—The 800 seats reserved for Yale at the Yale-Princeton game were auctioned off last evening. Nearly $1,000 was realized from the sale above the regular price.

Slavin Talks Fight Too.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Slavin says he will probably sail for New York on the Germanic on Nov. 20 with the intention of forcing Sullivan to make a match or retire.

JOHN HOEY SUED AGAIN.

His Wife and Son Frederick Are Made Defendants Also.

TRENTON, Nov. 12.—Another suit was begun by Henry Sanford, president of the Adams Express company, against John Hoey. In this case his wife, Josephine and his son Frederick are also named as defendants. It is on a rule to show cause why an injunction should not be granted by the United States circuit court against Hoey preventing him from collecting dividends on the 10,000 shares of Southern Express company stock that he holds and from disposing of them and other securities he now holds. The rule is returnable next Monday. The rule asks that the court decree that this stock, long held by the president of the Adams Express company since Oct. 6, 1887, when it came into the possession of John Hoey, and that the settlement between defendant and the company on Dec. 1, 1890, be set aside.

It also ask that all the mortgages on the Hollywood cottages, which were executed since the beginning of the suit here be set aside as well as other mortgages and assignments, and that they be revived and considered liens against Hoey. It further asks that Josephine Hoey be debarred from all dower rights in these mortgaged premises, in which she made joint execution, and that the leases now held by Fred U. Hoey be declared void, because they were made to defraud the company, and that Hoey be made to return to the Adams Express company borrowed money and securities. The court is also asked that Mrs. Josephine Hoey be enjoined from transferring any property Hoey may have loaned or other Hoey transfer no property, nor shall his wife. If Hoey cannot be found for service in New Jersey that service be made on his attorneys.

DID THEY KILL THE KESTERS!

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 12.—Henry Higgins and Joseph Eveland, together with their wives, have been arrested, charged with the murder of two old farmers named Kester, which occurred in 1886. The prisoners were lodged in jail. The arrests were effected by reporters and others, but absolutely refused to talk of the murder or their arrest.

The arrests are considered as a good piece of detective work, and it is thought the right parties have been apprehended. There is great rejoicing over the arrests among farmers, as they have long dreaded that they might meet a fate similar to the Kesters' as long as the murderers were at large. All of the prisoners have bad reputations.

Dr. Erway Shields Himself.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 12.—At the George trial many physicians testified for the defense, the evident purpose being to show that Georges wife died of eclampsia rendered him irresponsible for other acts. The defense has endeavored to create the impression that Miss Townsend came to her death from the use of drugs administered by herself, and has sought in vain to commit each of the medical witnesses to that theory. Dr. Erway denied positively having performed or suggested any operation upon Lotta Townsend to produce abortion, but did perform an operation after an attempt at abortion had been made in order to save her life.

The Connecticut House Adjourns.

HARTFORD, Nov. 12.—The Connecticut house met at 10 o'clock Wednesday, and at 2:45 adjourned to Jan. 6 at 1 p. m. Nothing else was done. The vote was 139 to 108. It was along party lines, except that seven Republican (Bellamy, of Southport) read a paper declaring his belief in the election of the minor Democratic officers, and then voted no.

Suicide of a Ball Player.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—John T. Scott, the shortstop of the University of Pennsylvania baseball team, in the spring of 1890 and 1891, committed suicide by cutting his throat. In 1890 he was hit in the head by a pitched ball and knocked senseless. Since then he had occasionally complained of pains in his head.

"Two Is Company" (To the Third).

Miss Rhoda Vassar (with poetic interrogation)—Will you ever be as now? As true? As constant?

ONE KILLED AND TEN INJURED.

Erie Vestibuled Train S adly Used Up Near Adrian, N. Y.

CANISTEO, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Erie vestibule passenger train No. 8, which is due at this station at 11:22 a. m., but did not pass until 12:45 p. m., jumped the track at Adrian, four miles east of here, wrecking the engine, the smoker and baggage car completely, the mail car, a dining car and three Pullman cars. The smoker was burned and the others badly smashed up. The engineer, James Snickerer, of Hornellsville, was killed, and the fireman, Charles Beard, also of Hornellsville, was badly scalded by escaping steam, but will doubtless recover. Both men stuck to the engine to the last. C. Meeroan, of Union, mail clerk, was badly injured about the head, but the other three clerks in the mail car had miraculous escapes.

Baggagemaster B. W. Hedley, of New York, was injured about the head and hands, and the news agent, J. W. Cottrell, of Elmira, was bruised about the legs and breast, the remainder of the trainmen getting only a bad shaking up. The following passengers were injured: Mrs. N. E. Barnett, Canaseraga, bruised on the head and limbs; M. S. Sherman, of Chicago, head bruised; Elizabeth Steidl, of 510 East Eighty-eighth street, New York, dangerously bruised about the head and body; Spencer Bostrick, Owego, bruised about the head; George H. Brown, residence unknown, head bruised and knee jammed, and another man was cut and bruised about the head. No cause can be assigned for the accident, as when the engine left the track the rails were in perfect order.

Four Dead in the Wreck.

JACKSON, Tenn., Nov. 12.—Passenger train No. 3, southbound, and a northbound freight train collided on the Illinois Central railroad twelve miles north of here. The engineers had reversed their engines or both trains would have been totally wrecked and many passengers killed. As it was four men were killed outright. The accident was caused by the engineer of the freight pulling out of Oakfield, where he had been instructed to wait the passenger train. The dead are as follows: William Hilleman, engineer, and his fireman, Walter Spence; Fireman Tom McGee (colored), all of Jackson; Express Messenger James Homer, of Milan. Only one passenger, Crockett Scott, of Jackson, was badly wounded. He was injured internally and may die.

Frightful Ride in a Runaway Car.

EASTON, Pa., Nov. 12.—An electric car ran away down College hill here with two passengers and a motor man. Down the hill it plunged for folly a quarter of a mile, crashed through the iron railings and over the side of the Bushkill bridge, falling into the water thirty feet below. George Schug, the motor man, remained at his post and sustained a fracture of the leg. Miss Sallie Mack and Professor Edgar were badly bruised by the fall, but no bones were broken. A slippery track and weak brakes caused the accident.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS.

Chairman Hahn, of Ohio, Is Out for Senator Sherman.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 12.—Chairman Hahn, of the Republican state executive committee, has announced himself as favoring the re-election of United States Senator John Sherman. "He should be re-elected," said Mr. Hahn, "by all means, and I shall do all I can to secure his re-election."

A Political Trial in South Carolina.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 12.—The first political trial in this state since 1878 is now in progress here. It is an indictment under the federal laws of two prominent citizens of Florence county, charging them with illegal intimidation. During the bitter Haskell-Tillman canvass E. H. Deas, Republican candidate for congress, was holding a Haskell meeting when he and a prominent white Democrat, named Morris, were assaulted and badly cut by the defendants, Humphreys and Jackson.

Pennsylvania's Official Vote.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 12.—The official vote of Pennsylvania is as follows: Judge of general—Lowrie, Rep., 411,546; Wright, Dem., 354,057; Hague, Pro., 13,150. State Treasurer—Morrison, Rep., 409,994; Tilden, Dem., 356,192; Drayton, Pro., 18,076. For constitutional convention, 172,771; against, 116,543.

A Majority of Two in the House.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 12.—The board of canvassers declares that Willard, Dem., has been elected assemblyman from the Second district by eleven votes over Spicer, Republican. This gives the Democrats a majority of two in the house on the face of present returns.

To Indict Democrats.

MACEDON, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Efforts are being made here by leading Republicans to indict a number of Democrats who took part in a pollification election night in charge of rioting. Subpoenas have been served on several witnesses to appear at Lyons.

Mr. Cleveland Praises Parnell.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—The committee of arrangements for the proposed Parnell memorial meeting at the Academy on Nov. 15 have received a letter from ex-President Cleveland, who pays an eloquent tribute to Parnell's memory and to his great services for Ireland.

Arion King of Two-Year-Olds.

STOCKTON, Cal., Nov. 12.—The great 2-year-old trotter Arion has trotted a mile on the kite shaped track here in 2:20¾ in a trial heat, and in a race against his previous record of 2:21¾. Arion is by Electioneer.

WOMAN'S HOME.

"DON'T NAG."

Advice That If Followed Would Make Many Homes Much Happier.

I am a privileged visitor at the breakfast table of certain friends. When one, by the way, understands the charm of such breakfasts, he will have discovered one of the rarest of all delights that fall in the way of a wanderer's life. There is, first, the little stroll in early morning, with the freshness of dawn still in the air. There are the greetings full of welcome by the house dog; then the merry chirp—there is no other word—of the child coming down the stairs to meet you. Then there is the well known crackle of new logs behind the shining fender, which, the family being somewhat late, you and the child enjoy for a moment alone. Ah, that fire! Never is even the fire at twilight so fine as this of new lit logs in the morning.

There are a freshness and a lightness about it, a snap and a sparkle, a rush, and even an airiness, that stimulate you with enthusiasm quite as much as they cheer or even warm. You are affected by this enthusiasm, you feel this atmosphere on the very threshold of the room, and these so fill you and so sway you after you have accosted the hearth rug a little that you throw into your greetings of your own hosts as they enter an enthusiasm and a glow no mere diner out even knows how to feel.

"With the family come the tea urn and the kettle, the merry faces about the board, and then—the lettered! Being privileged, as I began by saying, I hear many of these, and that is how I happened to hear one from my old friend Molly, in another part of the country, who has written a congratulatory letter to her niece on her engagement. The letter differed little from others of its kind, except that in underscored capitals it contained this one bit of advice, "Don't nag."

How like Aunt Molly! every one said with a laugh. But for myself, I found much food for meditation in what she had said. For I remembered with how many people this perpetual nagging was going on. How many fathers were forgetting how their sons had grown, and were constantly correcting them before others, only to wonder afterward why their influence had lessened. I remembered how many mothers were always at their daughters about the way they held their feet and hands, or how they laughed and spoke, and all this before the embarrassed visitor, instead of in quiet talk up stairs. I began to think Aunt Molly the wisest of women, for I remembered husbands and wives were not always altogether exempt from this little failing. What sometimes began as playful fun often degenerated into disagreeable teasings, into twittings about peculiarities, about personal tastes and failings, unpleasant for others to hear, and alienating to those who indulge themselves that way.

And then I remember how old a fault this was, this nagging, and to refresh my own memory I turned to this testimony, in all its quaint phraseology, from Lady Jane Grey:

"When I am in presence either of father or mother, whether I speake, kepe silence, standes or go, eate, drinke, be merie or sad, be sewing, playing, dancing or doing anie thing else, I must do it as it were in such weight, measure and number, even so perfitelie as God made the world, or else I am so sharplie taunted, so without measure rebuked, that I thinke myselfe in hell till tyme com that I must go to M. Elmer. —Harper's Bazar.

How to Set a Table.

A round table is better than a square table if the dining room is large enough to permit it. If not, then the ordinary oblong extension table must be used. The round table is much more preferable and easier to seat people at, because it gives a suggestion of the famous "King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table." A few prominent society women still cling to the old fashioned long, narrow table. Mrs. Astor, for example, still uses that style of dining table in order that her famous gold dinner set may be placed to the best advantage. Mrs. Abram Belmont, on the contrary, prefers an oblong table, and the decorations for an elaborate dinner are carried out to make the shape more pronounced. Flowers should never be absent from the dinner table. No matter how homely, they add to the picturesqueness of the feast.

Let us see how a table is set for a fashionable dinner party. On the table is first placed a thick flannel cloth; the thicker it is the better, as it gives a softness to the dishes as they are placed on it. Over this is spread a snowy white damask tablecloth. Sometimes over this is placed still another, of elaborate embroidery and lace, lined with pink or yellow satin, as taste dictates, or whatever color is to predominate at the dinner. The plates are first placed upon the table. As these are to remain until after soup is served, they are always the handsomest in the gold or china sets, as the case may be.

Don't crowd. Each guest should be allowed a space of two feet or twenty-six inches, if the table will admit of it, and the plates placed at equal distances apart. Place two dinner forks to the left of each plate; also an oyster fork with prongs resting on the edge of the plate. On the right must be a dinner knife and a spoon for soup. The glasses are arranged at the right of each plate, on a line with the inner edge of the plate. The water glass is set next to the plate. Then glasses for whatever other beverages are intended to be served. A glass, whether it be water or any other liquid, should never be filled more than three-quarters full.—Delmonico in Ladies' Home Journal.

Headaches Among Girls.

Languor and headache in a girl may seem a slight malady to a teacher used to the subjugation of her own feelings, but it will not do to take this ground. Headaches mean functions out of order, and the way to have genuine physical relations is not to treat them as if nothing were the matter. The headaches of the schoolgirl have a relation to the hysterical breaking down of mature womanhood, and a course of early symptoms makes it no easier to cure final derangements.

I can remember too well oppressive days in school at the age of eleven, when a patient little scholar bent over her desk learning lessons as in a dream, with weight pressing down upon her head and limb. The proper course would have been to let her curl up comfortably on a lounge for a rest of an hour or two, followed by a pleasant stroll or drive in the sunshine, with a glass of lemonade or soda water, as the digestion might require, an evening without books, and an early, long, refreshing sleep to set all right again.

The indulgent mothers are nearer right than the strict teachers, as long as the food of children remains what it is. When the system is oppressed with digestive injuries steady thinking the brain is a rare way to overthrow the nerves altogether. The harm done young people by bad feeding and strict schooling together has laid the train for many a middle age of impaired usefulness and invalidism. At boarding school, where the fare is of various degrees of unwholesome plainness, headache and hysterics spring from two causes—indigestion and want of fresh air.—Sir Dare's Letter.

Don't Scold.

For the sake of your children, don't scold. It is a great misfortune to have children reared in the presence and under the influence of a scold. The effect of the everlasting complaining and fault finding of such persons is to make the young who hear it unamiable, malicious and callous hearted, and they often learn to take pleasure in doing the very thing for which they receive loud abuse. The voice of the always getting the blame of wrong doing, whether they do it or not, they think they might as well do wrong as right. They lose all ambition to strive for the good opinion of a fault finder, since they see they always strive in vain.

Thus a scold is not only a nuisance, but a destroyer of the morals of children. Many a mother who would not beat a child feels free to scold on any and all occasions and thus becomes a scolding mother, a defeated embroidery and lace, lined with pink or yellow satin, as taste dictates, or whatever color is to predominate at the dinner. The plates are first placed upon the table. As these are to remain until after soup is served, they are always the handsomest in the gold or china sets, as the case may be.

A much better way than either scolding or beating is quiet, earnest talk with a child, and such a talk usually carries more weight and is remembered longer than half a dozen whippings and scoldings, for a child soon learns that a scolding is a fit of passion, meaning much less than a quiet talking, and soon blowing over. Children often come to have a certain don't care satisfaction in the wailing shrill until a scolding mother has blown off her surplus feelings. Most parents scold their children more or less, and many families are well trained notwithstanding. But no child is ever benefited by any scolding. Scolding is not always ruinous, but it is always out of place.—Housekeeper.

Southern Women in Colleges.

The fact that so large a proportion of the young women now attending southern colleges are securing an education not for ornament but for use, not for social culture merely but in preparation for self support, has had the very natural effect of making them more earnest and diligent in the prosecution of their studies. A much larger proportion of college girls comes from the middle classes than was formerly. Many of the poor girls of the south today are the daughters of educated parents who have seen a good wealth swept away during the war, their culture surviving the loss of home and property.

And what will an educated and refined mother not do, what sacrifices will she not make, in order that her daughter may have the benefits of an education? If poor she will practice the most rigid economy and submit to the severest personal self denial if thereby her daughter is enabled to enjoy the advantages of an education; and many are the southern mothers who since the war have done this, and more, to give their children an education.

And there are many noble instances in which an elder daughter, having been thus educated through the labor and economy of her parents, has generously requited their loving self denial in her behalf by going to work herself and helping each of her younger sisters to obtain the education which their parents were anxious but unable to give them.—Professor Wilbur Fisk Fillet in Century.

American Women's Jewels.

'Tis doubtful if the women of any two nations on the face of the earth own as many jewels as do the women of the United States. A large dealer in diamonds in Maiden lane assures me that the number of precious stones worn this day by our women, not to count cheap stones, pierres d'imitation. Rhinestones, so called, etc., are not worth less than $800,000,000. This is due to the great wealth distributed everywhere, and to the love of precious stones shown by American women. Almost every well dressed woman you see in any part of the country has a diamond stone or solitaire in her finger rings or earrings. Diamonds are the most popular, because they show off better by their brilliancy.

Comparatively a few women own a large number of the stones representing this $800,000,000. The jewels, most of which are diamonds, of Mrs. Astor would, it is said, would far exceed $5,000,000, and the late Mrs. Astor wore on all public occasions and many private ones a tiara which, as has been well said, few crowned heads of Europe or Indian princes could boast. These stones so flashed when the wearer moved that it seemed as if her head was encircled in flame.—New York Herald.

The Usefulness of Dyes.

The handling of beautiful and effective dyes is not as well understood as it ought to be by the mighty army of home beautifiers. The colors to be obtained from them are most delicate, when so needed, and yet very strong and deep, when that is required. They usually need much diluting, water only being used, thus rendering the process an extremely simple one.

With them one can match almost any shade in wools or silks, for which reason they are most desirable. For painting lace, nothing but these dyes is to be thought of. A friend of a neighboring city has upon the round glass globes in her guest room, which she trimmed in yellow tones, quite deep flounces of point d'esprit of a soft yellow hue, having only an inch wide hem, and a small frill around the top, drawn by narrow yellow ribbon. The effect is prettier than one can imagine who has not seen them. Of course these could have been any other shade, according to the designer's fancy and to suit the room in which they were placed. The dye used in this case was lerre de sienna Watzrelle, a perfect yellow when properly thinned.—Mrs. M. R. Ramsey in Good Housekeeping.

A Queen's Influence on Fashions.

Marie Antoinette had as much influence upon the fashions of her time as any woman who ever lived. When she entered Paris in 1779 she waved her hand to a milliner—one Mlle. Bertin—who made her fortune by it. This queen was one day making her toilet, when she discovered some peacock's feathers, which had been placed on her dressing table by accident. Mechanically she picked one up and put it in her hair. The effect was so pleasing that she added another. She called for more, and on leaving her dressing room astonished every one by the originality of her headdress. The king admired, all Europe applauded, and thus the custom of wearing feathers spread.

In 1788 she was one day dressed in a material of brown lustring, when the king observed, in a happy moment, that it looked to him like fleas. Immediately the color of fleas became fashionable, and such was the rage that the different shades between old and young fleas were separated, and the latter named puce to Gobelins. Finally the vendors of silks presented a new set of samples to the queen, of a gray color, and the king this time remarked of one that it was the color of the queen's hair. This color quickly superseded all others, and in order to get the exact shade some of her majesty's hair was submitted through a brilliant lens to Gobelins, Lyons and other places where the silks were made.—Cloak and Suit Review.

A Tribute to American Women.

The freedom enjoyed by American women has enabled them to mold themselves in their own fashion, if they do not copy any other women; they are original. I can recognize an American woman without hearing her speak. You have only to see her enter a room or a car and you know her for Jonathan's daughter. Married or unmarried her air is full of assurance, or a self possession that never fails her. And diamonds, rather than any other stone, would far exceed $5,000,000, and the late Mrs. Astor wore on all public occasions and many private ones a tiara which, as has been well said, few crowned heads of Europe or Indian princes could boast. These stones so flashed when the wearer moved that it seemed as if her head was encircled in flame.—New York Herald.

Milk and Water for Children.

Neither tea, coffee, cocoa nor chocolate, nor in fact any stimulant whatever, should be given to children. While the brain is developing it is exceedingly sensitive and easily deranged. Children are also extremely liable to inflammatory affections, sudden in their attacks, rapid in progress and often fatal in termination.

Any nourishment or medicine upon which they discharge the delicate adjustment of vital processes, and disease quickly follows *in consequence. All have doubtless recog*nized the extreme excitability of children from the excess of vitality. If the nervous system becomes deranged by any powerfully acting cause, the trouble does not stop there, but as long as the irritability which exists between all the important organs of a child, mere nervous excitement may induce *organic disorder and even dis*ease.—Boston Herald.

Something About Flour.

In these days of high grade patent flours some knowledge upon the subject is very necessary to have two grades for family use—one strong and rich in nitrogenous matter for bread, the other lighter and rich in starch for pastry. The different brands have nothing whatever to do with the quality or grades of various flours. One hundred pounds of wheat will yield very nearly the same mill, perhaps from the same bin, may each have their individual brand put upon the barrels. This is done perhaps to save confusion; and the grocer feels confident that he has always the same grade of flour under the same name. Buy a spring wheat flour, or a mixed flour, for bread, and all winter wheat for pastry. Bread flour may be slightly granulated; pastry flour must be soft and smooth and easily packed.—Washington Star.

Really Woman's Work.

Nathaniel Hawthorne in the "Blithedale *Romance," indulged in this fervid aspira*tion on the subject of woman preachers:

Oh, in the better order of things, heaven grant that the ministry of souls may be left in charge of women! The gates of the blessed city will be thronged with the multitude that enter in when that day comes! The task belongs to woman; God meant it for her. He has endowed her with religious sentiment in his utmost depth and purity, refined from that gross intellectual alloy with which every masculine theologist—save only One, who merely veiled himself in mortal and masculine shape, but was in truth divine—has been prone to mingle it.

Many Pairs of Scissors Needed.

One needs many pairs of scissors, and true economy consists in having a pair for each sort of work. The cutting of paper is very trying to sharpened steel, and a pair might be kept for that purpose. Long, sleader shears are handy for general use; buttonhole scissors could find a place in every basket; a pair of scissors for trimming lamps in the kitchen is necessary where there is no gas; grape scissors for the table are not altogether new; scissors to cut flowers in the country are a convenience.—Hardware.

Where Women Speak.

Kansas women are often able speakers. They give lectures and talks all over the state. The Women's Relief corps and the Social Science club have made scores of orators. The Alliance has brought out women as political speakers. Mrs. Jacobs, of Sedgwick, has been a missionary to India, and is licensed to preach. Women editors, ministers and physicians are not uncommon. There is no interest, no trade, no profession without a woman in it.—Kansas City Star.

It is one of the strangest problems in human nature that one should of her own accord implicate herself in other people's affairs and take upon herself an onerous responsibility by giving her unsolicited opinion in matters which do not concern her. It is a disagreeable task and a very thankless one.

Clara Barton, of Red Cross fame, is the only woman who ever sat in the Swiss National council, the only woman to be decorated with the Iron Cross by old Kaiser William, and the first person to decorate soldiers' graves as a patriotic rather than a personal act of homage.

A pretty spread of unbleached sheeting: A center pattern and border of flowers in large open design was stamped and then worked in white cotton. The work is heavy and the large heavy flowers in pure white, massed against the creamy background, produce a charming effect.

—A number of students from Rutgers college at New Brunswick visited this city last evening and witnessed the performance of Tuxedo by Mr. George Thatcher's company. During the performance they presented Mr. Ed. Marble with a large bouquet. Mr. Marble coached the students last year for one of their amateur minstrel performances.

—"Joe" English had a good audience at Reform Hall last evening. His address was an able one. Rev. Dr. Yerkes was invited to the platform and made a short but appropriate speech. President Spencer occupied the chair, and at the solicitation of Mr. English made some well timed remarks. Mr. English has concluded to remain the balance of the week. Go and hear him.

—James Farley, one of the best known hackmen at the depot in this city, died at his home on West Fourth street this morning after a lingering illness with consumption. Deceased was very popular among his associates. He has on a number of occasions taken part in amateur entertainments given in this city and bore the reputation of being the best jig dancer in Plainfield. A wife and two children survive him.

THE HARP RECITAL.

THE BEST OF MUSICAL TREATS OF ITS KIND.

The Event at the Casino Last Night. Mr. and Mrs. Cheshire and The Mendelssohn Quartet.—A Delighted Audience.—Proceeds for the Boys' Club.

Some Plainfield ladies, conspicuous in the work of doing good to others, about two years ago started a boys club, the object of which was to help the boys improve themselves and grow to make good citizens. The club is supported by contributions of the philantropic and by entertainments.

Above are pictures of three of the many members of the club. Who knows what the club boys may in time become? Possibly among them is to be found one who will become a President, a great Statesman or man of affairs or a well-great power, and control the destinies of men in the time to come. So the wheel of destiny rolls around. It is well, therefore, to give these little men a show, and it is well for them that they have such good friends as the noble Plainfield women who have become interested in them.

The finest of the entertainments given for the club's benefit was that of last night, at the Casino, where Mr. John Cheshire gave a harp recital assisted by Mrs. Cheshire at the piano, and The Mendelssohn Quartet Club.

Mr. Cheshire has considerable fame in London. One of his pupils was Mrs. William L. Patton of East Ninth street, who, learning that he was visiting New York, induced him to give the entertainment referred to. He is certainly a master.

Just what the proceeds will be can not at this time be determined, but it is hoped that it will be sufficient to encourage the noble women in their laudable efforts. Annexed is the programme:

A Prosperous Circle.

The annual report of the "Dorcas Circle" No. 2 for the year ending Oct. 20th, 1891, shows that Society to be in a prosperous condition. The Circle numbers twenty-five active and seven honorary members. Meetings are held every Monday afternoon, and the Lord is remembered in service.

During the past year the work of the Circle has been chiefly to help to relieve the poor of Plainfield.

Money was raised last year by a lecture on "How the Other Half Lives," by Mr. Riis, and this year by a "Yellow Tea."

The treasurer's report, for the year from Nov. 1, 1890 to Nov. 1, 1891 is as follows:

Money received	$8.37
" paid out	2
Balance in treasury	$191.7

Will anyone knowing of needy and worthy families, please address Louise K. Green, president.

A Case for Investigation.

The mail this morning brought us the following, which may be of service in the above connection:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—There is a poor widow with three little children residing in the Eight Row, Front street, near Dunellen. The family is on the verge of starvation. The widow tries to pick enough coal on the railroad to keep herself and little ones from cold, having no money to buy coal, and when I started to write you this they had only a few apples to appease their hunger. If the people knew how they were suffering no doubt something would be done to relieve their destitution. Hence I write, I am not able to help the poor creatures, or I would. My heart aches for them.

The letter was not signed, but gives the widow's name.

HISTORY OF THE HARP.

Its Origin and Gradual Development. Some Celebrated Harps.

The harp originated in the east and spread from the Assyrians and Egyptians to the Jews; from them to the Greeks, the Picts, the Welsh, the Irish and other nations. Ireland did a great deal for the instrument in the Middle Ages, and the Italians, who borrowed it from them, wrongly credited them with its invention. Why the Irish should have selected the harp as their national emblem is not quite clear. The Welsh, as well as Irish, have an equal claim to it. They have clung to the instrument, while in Ireland it has all but disappeared.

The Egyptian harps have no pillar and were played in a standing position, the number of strings varying. The Welsh harp had nine strings for many centuries and only a single row. The double row succeeded, and the present triple row perfected the instrument. It is said to have been first noticed in the Fifth century. Merenanus, in 1632, delineated the triple harp, giving it four octaves, and in all seventy-five strings.

The celebrated Irish harp, of which we give an illustration, has long been in the family of Noah Dolway, Esq., of Bellahill, Ireland. Every part of it is covered with inscriptions in Latin and Irish. It was made A. D. 1621. It contains twenty-four strings more than the noted harp called Brian Boroihme's, now in Trinity college, Dublin, and, in point of workmanship, is beyond comparison superior to it, both for the elegance of its ornaments and for the general execution of those parts on which the correctness of the musical instrument depends.

Law of Sidewalks.

Judge Dixon, in his charge to the Passaic county grand jury recently, laid down the law in reference to sidewalks. Judge Dixon said he had been asked to call the attention of the jurors to the construction of sidewalks, permanent and temporary. Permanent obstructions were made by buildings which encroached upon the lines of the public highways, and temporary obstructions were made by storekeepers who monopolized too much of the sidewalk. Every obstruction which substantially interferred with the use of the public highway was a public nuisance and the person or persons causing it should be indicted without regard to the question as to the subject except in cases where the encroachments were incidents of necessity, areaways, etc.

Bicycle Club News.

The good old times of last Winter will be renewed at the club house on Saturday next, when the fines in gymnastic will begin to get up its muscle and develop its agility under the tuition of Professor Burnham.

This class is for club members only, of course, but the professor intends to establish a class for ladies to meet on Saturday afternoons at the Bicycle Club House, the club having kindly tendered the use of the house for this purpose, in order to accommodate its many lady friends.

Professor Burnham is too well and favorably known to Plainfielders to need any introduction.

Arrested for Malicious Mischief.

Janitor Walker, of the Irving school, a few days ago made a complaint against a small boy named Spillane, charging him with breaking window glass in the school building. Spillane succeeded in evading arrest until this morning. At about ten o'clock as Policeman Lynch was standing on Park avenue a wagon passed and he noticed two feet sticking out from under the seat. That was all that was visible. Mr. Lynch became suspicious and investigated. He ordered the driver of the vehicle to stop and caught hold of the protruding feet, which, when pulled, brought Spillane. The officer arrested him and locked him up.

A Thief Caught.

Several of the farmers residing in the vicinity of Scotch Plains have been missing vegetables. For several nights past a watch has been kept and last night their vigilance was rewarded. At about ten o'clock they espied an Italian stealthily enter a garden and make an attempt to decamp with a large bag of cabbages. They arrested him, brought him to this city and placed him in the station house. He was arraigned before Justice Nash this morning, waived examination, and was held to await the action of the Grand Jury.

MR. PEEL'S EXPLANATION.

Denying the Charges in Other Papers Against Him

Mr. William Peel called at THE NEWS office this morning and requested us to deny the statement published in two Plainfield papers and several New York dailies branding him as a defaulter and a wife deserter. Mr. Peel stated that on election day he had a misunderstanding with Mrs. Wheeler, the wife of Manager Wheeler of the Johnson farm and that he left her husband's employ, going to Philadelphia on a visit to his sister, where he remained two days and then returned to this city. In the meantime, he says, his family was well provided for and that his wife knew of his whereabouts. He further states that he is now living with his family on North avenue. Mr. Peel showed a NEWS reporter a recommendation from Mr. Wheeler, his former employer, together with his account books which had been audited and marked correct. He feels much hurt over the reports which were spread broadcast reflecting on his character. The New York Times stated that his defalcations amounted to fifteen hundred dollars. He says he has been a resident of this city about seven years and that he has been in the employ of Mr. Wheeler for the past five years.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. M. M. Dunham has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to walk out.

Miss Bowen of Brooklyn, N. Y., is the guest of her brother, Mr. Henry E. Bowen of Netherwood.

The Misses Lillian and Nellie Clickner of Manasquan are spending a few days with relatives in this city.

The Four-in-Hand Social Club entertained a number of its friends at the Club House in Fanwood Wednesday evening.

Mr. Harry Stiff, the manager of the United States Express Company in this city, has gone to Harrisburg, Pa., to attend the funeral of a friend.

Miss Adams of West Fourth street is at Boston attending the conference of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union which is in session there.

The Rev. Hobart Clark, the pastor of the Unitarian church, is attending the seventh annual conference of the Middle States and Canada, which is in session in New York.

Master Jack Bartindale entertained a number of his young friends at his home on Kensington avenue Tuesday afternoon and evening. All present had a most enjoyable time.

Mr. John R. Hodgetts has accepted a position as salesman in the Werner Clothing House in this city. Mr. Hodgetts thoroughly understands the business and is fast making many friends.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Rudolph Laurent took place from his late residence on Somerset this afternoon at two o'clock and from the German Reformed church at half-past two.

Messrs. Eli M. Odam, Joseph Newman, John B. Carney and S. E. Dewey will contribute to the entertainment of Manisquan Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, which is to take place in their wigwam to-night. Members of the order only will be admitted.

Miss Collinshaw of New York gave an interesting talk to the members of the Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters at the Park Avenue Baptist Church last evening. A large number of members of the Circle and their friends were present. Miss Collinshaw gave an account of her work in the Mariner's Temple in New York. At the conclusion of her address a collection was taken up.

A pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. John Allen, at Annandale, on this last Wednesday evening, the parties were Mr. S. C. Sigler of Bacheis town and Miss Maggie Allen late of Plainfield. The knot was tied by the Rev. J. M. Allen of Dingman's Ferry, brother of the bride. After the ceremony they all proceeded to the dining room and partook of a sumptuous repast. The bride received many useful and handsome presents. Mr. and Mrs. Sigler will make their future home in Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania.

—The employes of the United States Express Company have received their new uniforms.

—Tuxedo was presented by George Thatcher's Minstrels at Music Hall this evening. One of the largest audiences that has ever been seen in Music Hall greeted the famous burnt cork artists and his company. The piece was very much from the beginning to the end and it put the audience continually laughing. A number of local hits were loudly applauded. The company will repeat the performance at Elizabeth this evening.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

A PROMINENT MINISTER DEAD.

Dr. Taylor Suddenly Expires While Traveling.

SALT LAKE City, Nov. 12th (Special.)—Rev. Dr. J. E. Taylor, a trustee of Rutgers' College, and two years a pastor of the Chestnut street Reformed church died suddenly yesterday while traveling on the cars between Colorado Springs and Salt Lake City, in the seventieth year of his age. He was on his way to Salt Lake City to deliver a lecture in the interest of the American Sabbath Society, of which he was at the time of his death secretary, residing at Washington, D. C. He leaves a wife and four sons, two being ministers.

The Yale—Princeton Game of Foot Ball.

President Max, Farrand of the Princeton Football Club, and President W. J. Wright, Jr., of Yale Football Association, recently met S. J. Gerrett at the Manhattan Athletic Club House, and came to an agreement about the final arrangements for the Thanksgiving Day football Game which is to be played at Manhattan Field.

The passenger agents of the several railroads have agreed to run special excursions on that day for the benefit of out of town people who desire to see the game. They will make a fair rate, and a ticket upon shall be attached to the ticket that will admit the holder to see the game.

The committee recognize that the practice of allowing speculators to charge enormous prices, to get hold of the tickets is unfair to the general public, and they are going to do everything in their power to keep the tickets out of the speculators hands. It was decided to sell the choice boxes, reserved seats and coach stands at public auction. The auction is to be held in the Manhattan Athletic Club theatre Saturday afternoon and evening, Nov. 7th. After the sale the tickets will be sold to the first comer, but no one will be allowed to buy more than four tickets, unless he is known, or can show who is to use them.

The other stands which will accommodate 17,000 will be for the use of those who paid the regular admission, which will be $1. There will also be stand room for 5,000.

Arrangements have also been made for the accommodation of 83 coaches and carriages, the admission price of which will be $10 besides the regular admission fee of $1 for each occupant.

The prices of boxes will vary, according to the location in the grounds. Those nobbing ten will be sold at $20 those holding six at $12 and those holding four at $8.

Yale and Princeton Colleges will have the choice of seats and positions. The Yale people have the choice of seats on the upper left hand tier of the grand stand, 8 boxes, and 10 positions for coaches. The Princetonians took 7 boxes directly under Yale, 5 boxes and 11 positions for coaches.

Pen Sketches From Life.

A little old country woman, feeling tired no doubt, set down on the raised entrance to a barber shop, on Park avenue, this morning.

She had a large, empty, market basket the contents of which she had sold. These she had taken to rest, she put her basket around so as to get at it conveniently, pocket out of which she scooped handfuls of small change—the proceeds of her sales.

The change was deliberately counted piece by piece, meanwhile all unconscious of the fact that she was creating a sensation. When the counting was finished to her satisfaction she arose and trudged sedately homeward.

A

An old man, gray-haired, comfortably clad, with a cotton umbrella, clumsily rolled, in his right hand, after a prolonged effort, yesterday afternoon, to walk a couple feet of sidewalk, gave up the attempt as a bad job, in the—to him—freezing condition of the earth, and fell and broke a front of the Methodist church yard fence.

It was a sad scene. A workman passing, with an effort, for the inebriate was like a wet rag, raised him to his feet and braced him against the fence. Then after a breathing spell, he started him on his way, keeping a firm clasp on his arm to prevent another fall.

After holding him thus for a short distance he let him go in an opposite direction, he [illegible] alone. When last seen he was going "Spanish" far out [illegible] screen.

STATE RAILROAD TAXES.

The Valuations Raised Eight Millions.

The State Board of Assessors have sent the assessments of the railroad property for the year 1891 to the comptroller, and the figures show an increase over last year's assessments of over eight million dollars, and an increase in the total assessment of $ which will be about equally divided between the State and local uses. The annual tax imposed on the roads gradually increasing. The increased valuation is very impartially distributed, and all the roads showed an increased valuation over that of last year.

The Pennsylvania railroad, which last year was assessed at $ is now valued at $ 2. This valuation will increase the tax upon the company of $ This, of which $ is for the State tax and will be divided among the localities. This is an increase of $ on the tax of last year.

The Central railroad was last year valued at $ and now at $ This year the board has increased the valuation to $ 50, and the tax will be $ of which $ is for State use and $ for local uses.

The Philadelphia and Reading was last year assessed at $ and this year the company is assessed at $ and they are taxed $ of this $ is for State purposes. On tax for local purposes.

The Lake Erie and Western system was assessed last year at $ and this year the property has been increased to $ and they are taxed $ of this $ is for State purposes and $ for local purposes.

The Lehigh Valley was assessed last year at $ and this year the valuation has been increased to $ The tax will be $ of this $ is for State purposes and $ for local purposes.

The other roads doing local business generally have been increased about one million dollars over the last, and the tax has been increased about $ The total valuation of the railroad property in [illegible] is $ and the total tax $ This is for State purposes and the balance, $ is for local tax. The total tax of the Plainfield corporations is $

The war is so nearly ended that a national organization of "we uns and you uns" has been formed. Both Federal and Confederate veterans may belong to it, and it is called the Blue and Gray association. Mobile organized one of the first lodges of the new society.

Russia, which has probably given to the world more varieties of dynamite bomb than any other country, in the course of the nihilist attempts to get czars out of the world, will hold an antifire exhibition at the close of the winter. Fire escapes and fire extinguishing inventions from all nations will be on exhibition.

The usages of society make it practically impossible for a convict to reform, even if he would give his life to do so. When employment is given to penitentiary convicts, the cry is raised that work is taken from honest men and bestowed on thieves and cutthroats. After serving a term in prison, if a man tries to get employment then the cry is raised of "jail bird," and no respectable workingman will labor alongside of him. The gates of the world where an honest living may be earned are so hopelessly closed against him as were certain gates in Bible history against the rich man in sheol. What is the man who wishes to reform to do under these circumstances?

A Champion of Ghosts.

W. T. Stead, who is always with the under dog in the fight, stands forth ready to break a lance in defense of ghosts. His Review of Reviews for December will contain an assortment of well authenticated ghost stories. Whatever strange appearances and experiences have been encountered by any person who is willing to sign his name as evidence of veracity, Mr. Stead invites this individual to write down the story of them and send it to him for publication.

Mr. Stead does not say whether the appearance he classes under the head of ghosts are apparitions, hallucinations or even real spirits. He inclines to think the apparitions cannot all be accounted for under the head of hallucinations, but even where they can thus be accounted for they will be a valuable contribution to psychic science, such contributions as Mr. Stead thinks the world stands greatly in need of at this stage of its progress. He himself is thoroughly in earnest in the belief that there are genuine appearances and experiences outside the realm of the material senses. As to those who laugh to scorn these manifestations as lies and delusions, Mr. Stead characterizes their amusement as the "laughter of fools which the wise man of old compared to the crackling of thorns under a pot."

American Art.

A fair summing up of the present condition of American art appears in The Century, from the pen of Francis D. Millet, vice president of America's leading art organization, the National Academy of Design. We as a people became conscious of our artistic deficiencies after the Philadelphia exposition and at once sought to remedy them. After the close of that summer of education in 1876 art schools and art museums began to spring up throughout the country. Before then many American artists had studied in Europe, after that they went across to foreign art schools more than ever. They have now come home in numbers, and the result of their education and of their subsequent labors is to some extent manifest.

To begin, our American artists have proved apt scholars. They reproduce the lessoning of their foreign masters with care, labor and fidelity to detail. Such care and fidelity, indeed, that when their pictures are hung upon the walls of galleries with foreign paintings they cannot be distinguished from the foreign work by anything in either subject or treatment. This, Mr. Millet thinks, is the chief criticism to be made on our native pictures. American art is now in that stage of development in which it is able to "compete with distinguished skill in the methods of others." But for the rest we are still in the leading strings of school tradition and the glorification of technique."

There is no such thing as an American school of art or American style in the treatment of a picture. But our progress is full of hope. The artists who have been educated abroad have devoted labor and fidelity to teaching those beginners who are at home. So the fundamental principles have been well grounded. The rest will come. The field most attractive that lies immediately before the American artist is that of portraiture. We have a national type of feminine beauty distinguished for symmetry and refinement; we have a "strongly accentuated masculine type." The typical American face is nervous, high strung and keen, possessing great elements of beauty. To reproduce this face will be one of the first achievements of the American school of art. Finally, in the art institution which Mr. Carnegie has presented to Pittsburg, with its income of $50,000 a year, we have the greatest and richest art museum in the world. The feature of most interest to the American art world is moreover the fact that 90 per cent. of the money spent there for pictures must purchase works of art produced in this country.

Nine Cruisers to Be Mobilized at Valparaiso.

CHILI WILL KNOW WE HAVE A NAVY

Outlines of a Great Demonstration Soon to Be Made by the United States Government—Washington Officials Reserve, State That It Is Not a Warlike Move.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—It is quite evident that the president and Secretary Blaine do not propose to let Chili long remain in ignorance of the fact that the United States has made substantial progress in the building of a navy. The news has leaked out that there is to be a change in the assignments of a number of vessels which will result in the concentration of such a fleet of warships in the harbor of Valparaiso as to amount to a naval demonstration.

Gherardi Ordered to Chili.

Orders have been sent, it is said, to Rear Admiral Gherardi, now on board his flagship, the Philadelphia, at St. Thomas, to proceed at once to Valparaiso and assume command of the South Pacific station.

Rear Admiral Brown, now in command of that station, will be detached and placed on waiting orders.

Acting Rear Admiral John G. Walker will retain his flagship, the Chicago, and relieve Admiral Gherardi in command of the North Atlantic station. This fleet, however, will be cut down from the imposing proportions of the white squadron to the Chicago and the old Kearsarge.

Four More Cruisers to Be Sent.

Rear Admiral A. K. E. Benham will be sent on board the Newark to take command of the South Atlantic station, with headquarters at Rio de Janeiro. The Atlanta, Concord and Bennington are all to sail on Sunday or Monday for Chilian waters. The Charleston has already been ordered to return from the Asiatic station to the South Pacific.

A Fleet of Nine Warships.

These orders will result in placing under the command of Admiral Gherardi at Valparaiso a fleet composed of the Philadelphia (flagship), San Francisco, Charleston, Boston, Baltimore (now already at Valparaiso), Atlanta, Yorktown, Concord and Bennington, while the Newark will be within comparatively easy call at Rio. This concentration of warships will bring together a formidable array of guns and men. The Philadelphia carries twelve guns in her main battery, the Baltimore ten, the San Francisco twelve, the Charleston eight, the Boston eight, the Atlanta eight, the Yorktown six, the Concord six, the Bennington six. These guns are all new and launch rifled steel breech-loading and each vessel has a powerful secondary battery of rapid firing and machine guns.

But It Doesn't Mean War.

Each ship's company will average 330 or more men. Officials of both state and navy departments deprecate placing any warlike meaning upon the demonstration, and insist that there is no special significance in the concentration of a powerful fleet in South American waters. The selection Admiral Gherardi to command the South Pacific station is sure, however, to be regarded as significant. Gherardi is known as the principal diplomat among the officers of the navy, and it will be remembered that he, in a sense, superseded Minister Doug'ass in the delicate negotiations with Haiti for the possession of Mole St. Nicholas as a coaling station.

The Charge Against Admiral Brown.

VALPARAISO, Chili, Nov. 13.—Efforts are being made to keep the conservative members of the junta's cabinet in office. Ministers Irarrazabal and Walker Martinez, who resigned, may reconsider their action. It is regarded as the best effort to discover that the anti-American feeling is general among the members of the revolutionary party. The conservative Chilians say that the present meeting will not continue and that commercial relations with the United States will not be affected after sufficient time has elapsed to allow the present trouble to be forgotten.

But among those Chilians who are most open in their opposition to America the feeling is strong. The Balts speak to accept any explanation whatever of Admiral Brown's visit to Quintero on Aug. 20, when the revolutionary troops landed to make the final attack upon the constitutional forces near Valparaiso. They declare that Admiral Brown's visit to Quintero to watch the landing of the troops and his subsequent return to Valparaiso for the purpose of sending a calm message to Washington, which had to pass through the hands of Minister Egan, who arrived at the most critical moment of the war, when it was necessary that every foreign naval commander at Valparaiso should preserve the most strict neutrality.

They say that Balmaceda learned definitely of the movements of the troops at Quintero through the United States consul, either from the cable dispatch or else by means of information received by some one connected with the San Francisco.

To Make Fonseca Life Dictator.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 13.—Reports are current in this city to the effect that the army and navy forces are making preparations to proclaim General Fonseca a life dictator of Brazil.

The government is securing a full complement of men for the army by means of impressm nt, and many unlucky citizens have been seized in the name of the government for this purpose.

A number of officers have started for Rio Grande do Sul, at which place, it is reported, those who have taken part in the revolutionary movement against the dictatorship of General Fonseca are now completely under the control of the government.

Did Canada Abduct Gale?

OTTAWA, Nov. 13.—The United States government has demanded the release of a lad named Harry Gale, who is alleged to have been arrested at Waddington, N. Y., and forcibly brought back to Canada. Gale was charged with having committed a crime at Cornwall, and was sentenced to prison for three years.

Yellow Jack in Brooklyn.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 13.—Four men who died on the United States and Brazil mail steamship Alliance are supposed to have had yellow fever, and the Brooklyn health board will investigate.

A Conspiracy in Greece.

ATHENS, Nov. 13.—A conspiracy has been discovered in Athens to overthrow the ruling dynasty of Greece.

PREMIER MERCIER'S PERIL.

The Evidence Is Strong Against Him in the Canadian Railway Scandal.

MONTREAL, Nov. 13.—The royal commissioners investigating the Baie des Chaleurs railway scandal have concluded their labors so far as the taking of evidence is concerned. The evidence adduced, though principally of a circumstantial character, has proved that Ernest Pacaud, editor of Le Canadien, received $100,000 from C. N. Armstrong, a former contractor of the railway; that several ministers received large pecuniary advantages from this money; that subscriptions collected were in part employed in paying obligations to the amount of over $30,000 for which Premier Mercier, one of his colleagues, and prominent members of the Liberal party were personally responsible.

Hon. Charles Langelier, provincial secretary, came back from Quebec to attend the Mercier cabinet. The Mercierites claim that while members of his party may be implicated no case has been made out against the premier, and they dare the governor to dismiss him.

FASHIONS

The Poke Bonnet Once More.

The old-fashioned poke bonnet is again here, direct from Paris. One of the last Paris shapes is merely a revival of the bonnet of more than fifty years ago; it is of velvet, with high brim in front, pastes of ostrich feathers on one side, and velvet crepe, with strings tied under the chin. Certainly it has not the frilled cap affected by our grandmothers, which filled up the sides of their bonnets, and the shape is more cut back from the face, but otherwise the resemblance is great. It is the real old poke bonnet of the past, disguise the fact as we may, and conjures up visions of ladies in skimpy garments, with abbreviated waists, sandaled shoes, and headgear with nodding plumes, plodding their way daintily, with held-up gowns, along the streets.

The Relative Cost of Pattern Dresses.

Pattern dresses are always more expensive than the plain material, if one counts only the cost of the cloth by the yard. But taken in the long run, they are not very expensive, because they do not require trimming, being trimmed in themselves. With a pattern dress there is no need to be bought, no passementerie, usually no buttons, and no trimming of any kind. The garment has simply to be made up and, from its very nature, it is so elegant in design that it cannot very well be spoiled, unless very badly fitted.

The Fashionable New Materials.

Stripes, checks and spotsare all fashionable in the new materials, the former, perhaps, predominate, some of the stripes being of shaggy, upstanding nubs. Nearly all the recently introduced fabrics have the designs in a more woolly substance.

Dress skirts retain their sweeping plainness despite the prediction of pinkies. They are made with a single seam down the middle of the back, and small train.

SAM SMALL BADLY HURT.

Assaulted by an Atlanta Saloon Keeper and Severely Wounded.

ATLANTA, Nov. 13.—Sam Small, the noted evangelist, was attacked and severely beaten here by Tom Minor, an Atlanta saloon keeper. The liquor man's fists were wielded with great force and the sensational preacher came out of the encounter badly bruised up. Last Sunday the reverend gentleman delivered an address to a large crowd at the Prohibition hall in Atlanta, and after attacking the whisky traffic generally directed an address to a large crowd at the Prohibition hall in Atlanta, and after attacking the whisky traffic generally directed an allusion to one of them, he charged Tom Minor with having deserted his family, leaving them to starve.

Minor saw small enter a barber shop in the morning, and followed him. As Mr. Small hung his overcoat up and started toward a chair, Minor struck him on the nose. Small fell to the floor and before he could rise Minor sa kel him in the face. Small's face is badly bruised, his underlip is cut and he has lost three teeth.

More Reciprocity Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Sir Nevill Lubbock, who has been sent to Washington to negotiate a reciprocity treaty between the United States and the British West Indies, was introduced to Secretary Blaine and other officials of the department by Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British minister. Sir Nevill and Mr. John W. Foster, representing the state department, then had a conference on the subject of reciprocity.

Dr. Erway on the Rack.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 13.—The cross examination of Dr. Erway took up most of the day's session of the George trial. The judge permitted the prosecution to put the same question to the witness in a dozen different forms, by which means some trifling contradictions were elicited from him, but nothing to break down his story. After a little more kleptomania testimony the defense rested its case.

Three Switchmen Arrested.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 13.—The switchmen on the Z.-so road in this city have gone out on a strike for the scale. There are fifteen of them and already three of them are under arrest for interfering with the company's business. More arrests are threatened. The arrested men persuaded the new men who were hired to quit, and all the switching is now being done by the officials of the road.

Violent Anarchists in Spain.

MADRID, Nov. 13.—Anarchists of this city, Barcelona, Cadiz and other cities held a meeting last night in memory of the Chicago anarchists. On Sunday in Cadiz attempts were made to destroy public buildings with dynamite. Several persons were imprisoned.

Charged with Stealing $14,000.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 13.—Otis C. Palmater, chief clerk in the warehouse of the St. Louis Transfer company, has been arrested and taken to Olney, Richland county, Ills., to answer the charge of embezzling $14,000 from the county.

Heidfritter for Mayor.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 13.—Frederick I. Heidfritter was this evening nominated for mayor by the Democrats of this city.

RAIDED BY BLUECOATS.

One Hundred Policemen Descend Upon Anarchists.

SEVERAL PISTOLS WERE PULLED.

The Followers of the Red Flag Were Very Defiant, and for a Short Time It Looked as Though the Haymarket Riot Might Be Repeated.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—One hundred policemen, under the leadership of Inspector Klyman Lewis, marched down upon an anarchist meeting in Grieb's hall, at 534 West Lake street, last night. The moment the first squad of police, headed by Lieutenant Wheeler, burst in upon the anarchists, a man named Daniel Setter, who claims to hail from Buffalo, N. Y., reached for a revolver in his hip pocket, but before he could use it officers overpowered and disarmed him. Setter made a desperate resistance, biting and kicking the officers until the irons were put on his wrists, and he was hustled off to the Desplaines street station, fighting like a madman all the way.

They Locked the Door.

The twenty-five or thirty men who were sitting in the barroom tried to force their way out to the street, but were prevented by the police. Every man in the saloon was then searched for weapons. While this was going on another squad of police dashed up the narrow stairway into the halls above.

"The police are coming; lock the door!" shouted a man in the meeting on the second floor. The door was quickly barred, and the twenty-five men who were assembled in this dingy little hall making inflammatory speeches waited for the attack. Only one man here made any resistance. His name was Henry Miller. "D—the police!" he shouted. "They are cowards, or else they would not draw their revolvers on inoffensive men!"

He Had a Big Revolver.

Two officers grasped Miller and searched him. He had a big revolver, and fought desperately before he could be taken. Several copies of the speech delivered by Parsons on the night of the bomb throwing in Haymarket square were found in a box in the hall. After the building had been thoroughly searched about thirty of the most rabid anarchists were taken to the station. Some of them were booked for carrying concealed weapons, and others for making inflammatory speeches calculating to incite riot.

Compelled to Show the Stars and Stripes.

The agitation against the anarchists was caused by the fact that Wednesday night a squad of police under Inspector Hubbard compelled a meeting of over 1,000 anarchists at the West Twelfth street Turner hall to display the American flag among the red bunting which decorated the hall at the commemoration of the hanging of the Chicago Haymarket rioters.

The police entered the hall while Henry Weisman, of a New York paper, was delivering an incendiary speech. Weisman referred to the fact that the American flag was not to be seen in the hall, and was hooting at it.

They Hissed the Nation's Colors.

Inspector Hubbard and ten officers then advanced to the platform. The inspector said: "This is a meeting at which the Stars and Stripes must be displayed among the colors here or I shall close up this meeting. It is all red here. You have no American flag and you are hooting of the fact. I want to see the flag produced or this audience must disperse."

Quick as a flash the great audience was on its feet and there were threats from every side. The police placed their hands on their clubs and revolvers preparatory for the fight, which seemed inevitable. It was ten minutes before order was restored, and the American flag was brought into the hall and unfurled on the stage, being greeted with cheers mingled hisses and cheers. The speaker then concluded his harangue, the police remaining in the hall.

HAS UNCLE SAM BACKED DOWN?

An Italian Paper Says He Will Pay for the New Orleans Affair.

ROME, Nov. 13.—The Italian papers understands that the United States government has recognized the responsibility of the federal government for a breach of international law in the New Orleans lynching affair, and that the only question that now remains to be settled is the amount of the indemnity to be paid by the United States government to the friends of the Italian citizens who lost their lives through the violence of the New Orleans mob.

Woman Suffragists Adjourn.

AUBURN, N. Y., Nov. 13.—At an executive session of the officers of the Woman's Suffrage Association committees were announced as follows: Committee on programme, Miss Emily Howland and Miss Isabel Howland, of Sherwoods, and Miss M. B. Clark, of Rochester. Committee on legislative work, Mrs. Harriett N. K. Goff, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Elnora Babcock, of Jamestown, and Mrs. Mary E. Welch, of Lansingburg. Printing, Mrs. C. C. Smith, Miss Mary S. Anthony and Mrs. J. G. Manrer, of Rochester. This concluded the business of the convention.

Work of the Board of Pardons.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 13.—Action was taken by the board of pardons in a number of cases, among them being that of W. James Stewart, of Fayette county, murder in the second degree; refused. Joseph Buecker, of Philadelphia, murder in the first degree; commutation recommended. John McManus, Philadelphia, murder in the first degree; refused. Andrew Luth, Michael Sabol and George Rushok, Allegheny, murder in the first degree; commutation recommended in the cases of Rushok and Luth, but Sabol's application held under advisement.

A Prominent Pittsburg Man Dead.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 13.—Henry Dallmeyer, who last Friday night imagined that his house was burning down and jumped from a window to the sidewalk, is dead. Dallmeyer, who was sixty-six years of age, had amassed a fortune in the tobacco business. He was a director of the Third National bank, the German Insurance company, of Pittsburg, and a Mason of high degree.

Engineer Roberts' Suicide.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Nov. 13.—Howard Roberts, a well known member of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad engineer corps, now working on the Morgantown extension, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. No cause is known for the deed.

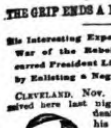
COL. DONN PIATT IS DEAD

Famous as a Soldier, Journalist, Author and Politician.

THE GRIP ENDS A NOTABLE CAREER

His Interesting Experience During the War of the Rebellion—How He Incurred President Lincoln's Displeasure by Enlisting a Negro Brigade.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 12.—Word was received here last night announcing the death of Donn Piatt at his home, Mac-O-Chee, Thursday afternoon. Colonel Piatt had been suffering for several weeks with a complication of diseases, induced by "la grippe," but it was only in the last few days that his illness was regarded as at all serious, and his death was a complete surprise to his many friends in this vicinity.



DONN PIATT.

Colonel Piatt was born in Cincinnati, O., on June 29, 1819, and was educated at St. Xavier college, and in 1851 was appointed judge of the court of common pleas of Hamilton county. At the end of his term he was made secretary of legation at Paris during President Pierce's administration. During part of the civil war he was on the staff of General Robert C. Schenck. Since then he has devoted himself to farming and literature, having founded and edited the Washington (D. C.) Capital for ten years. He has published a sharply critical work, "Memoirs of the Men Who Saved the Union."

A Savage Antagonist.

Colonel Piatt had been twice married and his second wife, for many years an invalid, survives him. The funeral will take place on Sunday. Donn Piatt was a man of very strong convictions, a savage antagonist and a bitter controversialist. For politics and politicians generally he entertained a general and indiscriminate contempt, save for individual members his heart and his purse were always open. Donn Piatt was a man of ideal learning and refinement. His country place at Mac-o-chee, in Logan county, O., was a treasurehouse of rare books and souvenirs.

The only political office which Colonel Piatt held after the war was that of representative from Logan county in the Ohio legislature.

Colonel Piatt's first wife was Louise Kirby, the authoress, who died in 1864, and was possessed of rare intelligence, culture and social qualities, which she displayed to advantage while her husband was in the diplomatic service in France during the administrations of Presidents Pierce and Buchanan.

Minister Mason was attacked with appendicitis, from which he died in October, 1890, and for nearly a year Colonel Piatt served as charge d'affaires. On returning home he took an active part in the presidential canvass in behalf of Abraham Lincoln, and stumped southern Illinois for him with General Robert E. Schenck.

His Army Record.

Colonel Piatt served with gallantry during the civil war and was conspicuous in many ways. Having been sent to observe the situation at Winchester, Va., previous to Lee's invasion of Pennsylvania, he, on his own motion, ordered General Robert H. Milroy to evacuate that indefensible town and fall back on Harper's Ferry. The order was countermanded by General Halleck, who in his rage threatened to cashier General Schenck, Piatt's superior officer, until President Lincoln interfered to prevent it. Three days afterward Milroy, surrounded by the Confederate advance, was forced to cut his way out with a loss of 2,000 prisoners. Had Colonel Piatt's order been carried out the command would have been saved and two regiments of brave men (who under Schenck and Milroy were the only force that ever whipped Stonewall Jackson) would not have been needlessly sacrificed. He was Judge advocate of the commission which investigated the charges against General Buell and favored his acquittal.

Why Lincoln Was Angry.

In his "Memories of Men Who Saved the Union," Colonel Piatt gave a graphic story of the civil war, and one chapter was devoted to a reminiscence of President Lincoln on the only occasion when he saw him angry. It grew out of an order which Colonel Piatt, when in charge during General Schenck's absence, gave General William Birney to recruit a negro brigade in Maryland. The colonel was summoned to Washington and found that at that time the policy of making Maryland a free state was distasteful to the administration. Mr. Lincoln threatened Piatt with a shameful dismissal from the service for issuing the order and spoke so harshly in terms that the colonel would not use the words in his book. He was finally permitted to countermand the order as best he could, but the word had gone out that slaves were not to be enlisted as soldiers and Piatt's policy proved beneficial in its results, for his order resulted in making Maryland a free state.

Piatt Was Ashamed of It.

Subsequently, when General Schenck resigned command, the Union men of Maryland and Delaware waited on the president with a request that Piatt be promoted to brigadier general and put in command of the Middle department. Mr. Lincoln heard them patiently and then refused, saying: "Schenck and Piatt are good fellows, and if there were any rotten apples in the barrel they'd be sure to hook on to us. But they run a whisky machine on too high a level for me. They ever understand that I was boss." Colonel Piatt said afterward that he never blamed Lincoln, and sometimes felt ashamed of his act of insubordination in issuing the order, for it amounted to that.

Drugged and Robbed.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Nov. 13.—W. F. Reed, seventy years old, a wealthy Freehold farmer, came here to visit relatives. Late in the evening he wandered over into Bonnemo, a colored settlement, and was enticed into a disreputable house kept by Rebecca Clark, colored. The inmates filled Reed full of drugged beer, and after robbing him of his money, threw him into the road. The house was raided.

Next Grand Army Encampment.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The council of administration of the Grand Army of the Republic has fixed upon Sept. 20 as the date for the meeting of the grand encampment at Washington next year.

TO REFORM NEW YORK CITY.

A Big Movement on Foot by Prominent Citizens of the Metropolis.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—A circular letter earnestly asking the co-operation of all religious and philanthropic societies in a determined effort to make New York city a better place to live in was sent yesterday to the pastors of the various denominations in New York city and vicinity. The new movement is called the "New York Union of Religious and Humanitarian Societies for Concerted Moral Effort," and the committee of organization consists of the following well known men:

Rev. William S. Rainsford, D. D.; Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D.; Rev. Heber Newton, D. D.; Rev. David J. Burrell, D. D.; Rabbi Gustav Gottheil, Rabbi Kaufman Kohler, Rev. Charles H. Eaton, D. D.; Rev. William Lloyd, D. D.; Rev. Madison C. Peters, D. D.; Abram S. Hewitt, Richard Watson Gilder, Dr. Albert Shaw, De Witt J. Seligman, Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., chairman, and Walter Vrooman, secretary.

The circular which is signed by the above named men says: "An attempt is being made to unite the moral forces of New York city and vicinity for concerted effort to secure the enforcement of such reform measures for the benefit of the poor as can be agreed upon. The first practical reform to be taken up will be the establishment of parks and playgrounds for children. Then other evils will be attacked.

"The plan for the winter is to have weekly mass meetings, each to be held in a different church or synagogue and addressed by several well known speakers.

"It is certain that these meetings will be reported in full by the great and progressive daily papers, and more than fifty ministers have already agreed to co-operate with the movement and announce the meetings from their pulpits.

"It is the desire of the committee on organization that the new movement be the subject of discourse in as many churches and synagogues as possible on Saturday, Nov. 21, and Sunday, Nov. 22."

This is the first really serious attempt ever made to combat the organized powers in civilization, the press and the pulpit, with the one object of exterminating the monstrous evils of city life that heretofore have been but feebly antagonized.

TO KILL THE LOTTERY EVIL.

Big Mass Meeting Held at New York City.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—A grand demonstration was held in Chickering hall last evening to show sympathy for and help the anti-lottery movement in Louisiana. The hall was packed to the doors, and prominent men of all sects, parties and occupations occupied seats on the stage. Bishop Potter presided and introduced Judge Noah Davis, who delivered the opening address, in which he scored the lottery company as a poisonous octopus which demoralized the morals of persons all over the country.

Judge Davis was followed by General George D. Johnston, President Seth Low, of Columbia; Professor Charles Elliott, of St. Paul's, and ex Mayor Hewitt also spoke.

The latter said: "This question develops a weak spot in the constitution of the United States. It is, that a single state can determine, has determined, a presidential election. The state of Louisiana has determined a presidential election. Its vote was offered to me for money, and I declined to buy it. That vote was sold for money." Mr. Hewitt's words created consternation and surprise.

THE $100,000 LOAN TO HOEY.

Clapp Spooner Tells What He Knows About It.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 13.—The deposition of Clapp Spooner, to be used in the case of the Adams Express company against John Hoey, the hearing of which is to take place in New Jersey next week, recites that Spooner concurred with his co-trustee in making the $100,000 loan to Hoey, the request for which was made verbally by telephone by Hoey. In answer to the telephone message Spooner says he wrote Hoey expressing his willingness to make the loan in a businesslike manner, insisting that the matter should be submitted to the company's counsel.

Counsel, Spooner says, did not report until after the loan had been obtained by Hoey. Spooner says that there was no agreement between Hoey and himself as to the character and manner in which the company should hold the bond and mortgage or any assignment of it that evidenced the loan of $100,000. He understood it, he says, that the company was to own it absolutely. The understanding was, says Mr. Spooner, that the company should hold the mortgage as a pledge only.

The Ocala Platform Indorsed.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 13.—The State Farmers' Alliance convention adopted resolutions indorsing the Ocala platform, declaring in favor of the government ownership of railroad and telegraph lines, the election of president, vice president and United States senators by direct vote of the people, making the issuing of free passes a criminal offense, compelling oleomargarine to be sold for what it really is, prohibition of alien ownership of land, discriminating in taxation on all kinds of property, prohibiting the dealing in stocks and grains on futures, to prevent the adulteration of food products, etc. Adjourned to meet in Williamsport next year.

Captain Greenwood Has Fled.

NORFOLK, Conn., Nov. 13.—Captain Green wood, of the steam barge Hiebe, of New York city, whose vessel sank at Westport harbor two weeks ago, and who was placed under $5,000 bail charged with violating the law relating to the employment of licensed engineers and pilots and for running his barge in forbidden waters, has fled.

Habib Saad Found Guilty.

BUFFALO, Nov. 13.—The jury in the Habib Saad case at Lockport rendered a verdict of murder in the second degree. The jury was out about an hour. Saturday Saad murdered his cousin, Katharine Saad, a young Turkish girl peddler.

Ex-Treasurer Turner Said to Be $31,000 Short.

TOLEDO, Nov. 13.—The sensation of the Knights of Labor convention was the report of a committee appointed at the last session, at the request of General Secretary Hayes, to investigate the treasurer's books, which he found in unsatisfactory shape. The committee reported that Ex-Treasurer Turner refused to appear before them or to give up the bank deposit books, cancelled checks and other documents in his possession.

They made the best investigation possible in the absence of these documents and find that there is over $31,000 unaccounted for. Even crediting Turner with $17,000, which his statements show to have been expended, but which the books of the order do not show, leaves a balance of over $14,000 unaccounted for. In discussing a complaint from the Bakers' union, of Rochester, N. Y., delegates from all parts of the country complained bitterly of unfair action by the American Federation of Labor toward the Knights.

Manual Training for Knights.

TOLEDO, Nov. 13.—The general assembly of the Knights of Labor attended the Manual Training school in a body, and so well pleased were they with the practical work of that institution, which is a part of the Toledo common school system, that a resolution recommending such schools will be introduced in the general assembly.

The "John Bull" Railroad Monument.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 13.—A large meeting of railroad officers was held here Thursday afternoon at the dedication of the "John Bull" railroad monument. It was the sixtieth anniversary of the running of the first train of cars by a locomotive in New Jersey. The celebration was managed by the Pennsylvania Railroad company. The old "John Bull," the little locomotive preserved as an historical relic, was placed on a pedestal close to the monument, standing on the original rail on which it ran sixty years ago.

Nanticoke's Explosion Accidental.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 13.—The coroner's jury which investigated the recent Nanticoke explosion, which killed twelve men lost their lives, returned a verdict that the explosion and death of the men were accidental.

EVERYDAY INCIDENTS.

THAT READ LIKE FICTION, YET ARE TRUE.

Miss Emma Eames, Unknown a Few Years Ago, Returns From Europe Followed by the Plaudits of the Musical World.

Miss Emma Eames, who left America a few years ago a struggling, unknown vocalist, will soon return to this country, followed by the plaudits of the European musical world and accompanied by her newly wedded husband, Julian Story, son of the eminent American artist. Theirs while unknown singers has now taken rank as a prima donna of promise, and of performance, too. Technically Miss Eames, or Mrs. Story now, is not a native of the United States, for she was born at Shanghai and spent the first few years of her life in China. Boston, however, has the strongest claim to be accounted her home, for out of the slender total of her years the harbiomer portion has been spent there.

Miss Eames comes of a highly musical stock, although no member of her family before herself has joined the professional ranks. Mrs. Eames is a highly accomplished musician and was her daughter's earliest teacher. She did not, for a long time foresee or desire that her daughter should go upon the operatic stage, but when it became manifest that her musical destiny would summon her thither she did not endeavor to restrain the development of her daughter's great gifts. At Boston Miss Eames was heard for a short time at some of the principal churches and at concerts, but the day came pre-eminently when one of the principal teachers under whom she had been studying said to her: "I can teach you no more now, and no one in America can teach you what you still want to learn. For that you must go to Europe." So to Europe—or, more narrowly indicated, Paris—Miss Eames and her mother went some five years ago. Then followed a spell of very hard work under the direction of Mme. Marchesi.

She Killed the Wildcat.

Recently Miss Ellen Stoddard, the nineteen year-old daughter of R. O. Stoddard of Forks township, Pa., and Miss Amelia Crane, a neighbor, had a thrilling experience on Barren Mountain, two miles from Mr. Stoddard's house. The young women were on their way home from gathering beech nuts, and were trudging along a

...ing path that led through sever... acres of scrub oaks on the summit of the mountain. Miss Stoddard was ahead, as the way up had found a crooked root which she was using as a cane.

As Miss Stoddard turned a short curve she saw a wildcat crouching in the path only a few feet in front of her. It snarled and glared at her, and she gave a scream, whirled around, and told Miss Crane to turn and run. Both ran as fast as they could, and the next thing Miss Stoddard knew the wildcat was chasing them. In an instant more she felt it tearing at her skirts, and she realized at once that further flight was more dangerous than giving battle to the animal.

So she sang out to Miss Crane to come to her assistance, and, whirling around, she struck at the wildcat with the root she raised it, and the wildcat sprang at her left arm and tore the sleeve off, scratching her arm badly. Miss Stoddard then went at the wildcat in dead earnest, and dealt it a blow with the root that sent it sprawling in the path.

By that time Miss Crane had found a club, and she immediately hastened to her friend's assistance. The wildcat sprang at them again, and the girls met it half way with their clubs and knocked it heads over heels. The wildcat soon got on its feet, and while it was crouching for another spring the plucky young women rushed at it and mauled it to death. Then they tied its feet together, stuck the root between them, and carried the carcass home.

A Strange Life.

Henry Duncan, an old-time steamboat man, once the captain of the famous steamboat Mohawk, and who amassed a fortune as an owner of race horses, died in Louisville, Ky., recently, aged seventy-eight years. More than fifty years ago he was married. His wife died, leaving him with a baby boy.

At the age of ten the boy left home, and for many years no tidings of him reached his father. As old friends died, the old man's marriage and widowhood were forgotten, and, until his death, he was thought to be a childless old bachelor.

His son Frank, after leaving home, came south and lived for a time in Mississippi. Many years ago he settled in Memphis, Tenn., and is now engaged in the grocery business.

All these years until recently father and son heard naught of each other. Frank married, and his wife bore him a son whom he named Henry after his grandfather. Henry has now grown to manhood. But nature's ties were strong, and at length the lonely old man began a search for his long lost son.

Celia Prentice, an old negress, who had been Frank's playmate when a child, after a long search found him, and Frank visited his father, whom he found boarding at the St. Nicholas hotel in Louisville. On October 18 the old man died. His son did not hear of it for a week after, when the ever faithful Celia Prentice wrote him.

Buried Like a Pauper.

Filepe Gutierrez, a young Cuban student, was recently killed by the accidental discharge of a shot gun, while returning from a hunting trip. On October 23 he was buried, and under rather distressing circumstances. His parents being dead, neither relatives or friends accompanied the body. In two years he would have come into a fortune of $500,000, but as the undertaker was unable to see the bankers who have charge of the dead man's funds, and could find no one with authority to do anything in the matter, his body was placed in a cheap rough coffin and so buried.

PHOTOGRAPH ON BLACK GROUND.

Interesting and Amusing Photographs Made by Multiple Exposure.

The color known as black is not, properly speaking, a color at all, but the absence of all color or light. A substance that absorbs all the rays of light falling upon it would be perfectly black, but no such substance is actually known, as all dyes or pigments, even of the darkest shades, reflect a small quantity of the light falling upon them.

As black, however, is the total absence of light, it follows that nothing can be so black as a perfectly dark room or the outdoor world on a cloudy night; and, as under such conditions there can be no light, there will be no action upon a photographic plate exposed in such a room or upon such a night. Therefore, if we desire to take a photograph against a perfectly black background, we need not trouble ourselves with hangings of black cloth, but simply open a window on a cloudy evening, if we are to use a flash light, or if the picture is to be taken by daylight, we may open the door of a dark room or building and obtain a background both theoretically and practically nonactinic.

With such a nonactinic background many interesting and amusing photographs may be made by a process of multiple exposure. The cut, for instance, represents a man playing ball with his own head. This picture was taken at night by means of a flash light, three exposures being necessary, the open window forming the background. The two small heads were first taken in succession, the person represented standing on the balcony outside with a black cloth thrown over his body and the light from a flash lamp being thrown upon his head as he posed in the different positions. He then took the position represented in the engraving, and another flash imprinted his whole figure and the walls of the room upon the plate, which, when developed, gave the amusing result shown in the illustration.

Numerous other applications of this principle will at once occur to every photographer, and the process is so simple that very unique effects can be obtained by any amateur possessed of the ordinary amount of patience and ingenuity. An important point in such pictures is to have the different images fall upon their respective places on the plate. This is easily attained by sticking to the ground glass a bit of ground paper showing the position of the smaller images—the heads in the cut, for example. Then, when the principal exposure is made, the position of the other different images can be accurately adjusted by moving the camera in the usual way. The foregoing illustration, which originated in Science Progress, is recently described, as here told, in The Popular Science News.

Hardening Steel.

The operation of increasing the hardness of steel, says the Horological Review, is by heating it to redness and then cooling it suddenly. Boiling water will be sufficient for ordinary steel, but if extra hardness is required. Either mercury or salt water will give great hardness, but the steel is rendered brittle. Oil is the best medium for hardening steel.

Recording the Contour of River Beds.

An instrument for taking and recording the contour of a river's bottom has been invented by Herr Stechner, and tried on the River Elbe. It consists of a long curving arm, which hangs from a boat into the water and rests on the bottom. Its inclination under the varying depth is caused to work a pencil and draw a curve of the contour on a band of writing paper as the boat proceeds. During the trial on the Elbe the contour line of 297 miles of the river bed was drawn in ten days.

Modern Methods of Coloring Flowers.

Blue roses have heretofore been ranked among the things unattainable. By the most modern method of printing, however, all difficulties are said to vanish. For example, water a pure white rosebush continuously with a solution of Prussian blue and the ensuing buds will take on a sympathetic tinge. In like manner proceed with green sulphate of copper and hope for a similar satisfactory result.

Worthy of Note.

Long before the advent of the white man in California, forest fires raged, and from the charcoal thereby left it is probable that giant trees were thus destroyed, in comparison to which the much lauded sequoias and redwoods of the present are but saplings.

The Scientific World says that a certain amount of air admitted to the furnace above the live coal is advantageous rather than otherwise if the supply be regulated. The oxygen of the air thus introduced assists in the more effective combustion of the gases.

According to Engineering, half the tin in the world is exported from the Malay peninsula, where mining is carried on almost entirely by Chinese. The mining is that of flood tin, and the metal is taken from the ore near the mountains, where it is found in pockets ten to twenty feet or more below the surface.

It is told that a Frenchman, M. Teysac, has been experimenting, and seriously considers the advisability of substituting bees for carrier pigeons in carrying messages. A tiny piece of paper is pasted on the back of the bee, with a short message on it, and, when the bee returns to its hive, it can enter only through round perforations which will not let its paper through, so the message is easily found.

EFFECTIVE FANCY WORK.

Quaint Little Bags, Mats and Covers Made of Cloth and Ends Considered.

Odd pieces of cloth can be converted into a variety of attractive articles that make an effective appearance for the amount of work and expense involved. Among these are quaint little bags in oriental style, composed of several long, narrow strips of cloth, all of different colors, sewed together inside. Each piece is cut to a point at the bottom of the bag and rounded off at the top and notched. Two yellow silk cords are run through little slits cut in the cloth, for drawing up the bag. If the cloth is dark and dull in color a simple design worked in each piece of cloth in gold or bright colored silks will enliven it.

Pretty mats are made from pieces of cloth by cutting them square and working around the edges in blanket stitch, or with a few stitches of gold thread embroidery here and there they can be used to cover old photograph frames. They also serve for small book covers when joined together with embroidery, and would make tidies and covers for various purposes.

Pieces of cloth furnish material for a very pretty border for a table cover. Work a few rosebuds on each piece in crewel, or silk, then sew the pieces on a lining and cover the seam with feather stitching or chain stitching worked in a color to harmonize with the embroidery. A very attractive cushion is made in this style.

Scotch Scones.

Tempting homemade cakes are always to be seen at the breakfast and tea tables in Scotch country homes, and highly popular among these are dropped scones, which are delicious, and may be eaten hot with either butter or jam. Put two heaped teacupfuls of flour into a basin, add two tablespoonfuls of fine sugar, one teaspoonful of carbonate of soda and half a teaspoonful of tartaric acid; mix thoroughly, make a hole in the flour and break an egg into it; add a little buttermilk, stir with a wooden spoon and beat well, make it into a thick batter and beat it briskly for a few minutes; the surface should be covered with air bells, when it is left to stand for five minutes. Have the griddle quite hot, grease it well all over and put out the batter in spoonfuls on the griddle, keeping the scones as round and neatly shaped as possible. When beginning to look dim and dry on the upper side slip the blade of a knife under them, turn the scones over quickly and brown them to a fine golden color. After a little practice you soon learn to know the proper thickness to make the batter.

Aprons Easy to Wash.

A useful idea in view of facilitating home washing is represented by a tasteful apron in sprigged muslin plainly made out of a straight breadth of material. At the narrow edge at the top are sewn the two ends of a bright colored ribbon, forming a loop to slip over the head a little below, at the left side, is attached a cabbage bow, from under which issues the belt, which confines the fullness at the waist and divides the seam into skirt and bib; the extra width of the latter naturally drooping in the center of the bust, which is carefully draped and kept in place by a fancy pin.

Embroidery Stitches.

A characteristic of present fancy needlework is the introduction of a very great number of stitches. There are as many as fifty different stitches in use, according to Golden Days, which illustrates and describes a number of them, from which we select the two following as effective and useful for many purposes:

Ordinary blanket stitch, as shown in the upper figure of the cut, is merely buttonholing rather coarsely, and with spaces of from an eighth to half an inch between the stitches, according to the fancy of the worker and the kind of materials used. Many very elaborate blanket stitches are now much used for the finishing off of the edges of ruffs, but most of these are only varieties of the common kind.

This pretty stitch, called battlement stitch, is suitable for laying down hems or for edging leaves and scrolls in conventional designs. It looks best when worked in several shades of the same color, but may be worked altogether in one shade or in contrasting colors with good effect. Commence by working a row of blanket stitch, the stitches to be half an inch in height and half an inch apart. This proportion is for coarse wool on thick material; for finer materials the stitches should be worked in suitable proportion. This first row of blanket stitch should be very carefully worked, for upon its evenness depends the regularity of the following rows, and consequently the effect of the completed work. When the first row is finished, commence again at the left hand side and work a second row of blanket stitch on the top of the first, but a little to the left of it and a little below it. Then work a third row a little to the left of and a little below the second row. Work a fourth row in the same manner. In the last row, the tops of the stitches should touch the horizontal threads of the first row (see illustration).

BLANKET STITCH—BATTLEMENT STITCH.

One Thing and Another.

Some fashionable drawing rooms seem to be all gilt.

Pretty, small table covers for afternoon tea are bordered with embroidered flowers and scrolls.

Moorish lamps for lighting entrance halls are made of colored glass and wrought iron. They are very decorative.

Some handsome sofa cushions have a groundwork of terra cotta satin sheeting, with a conventional pattern in dull shades of red, blue and gold.

There is certainly nowadays a great revival in decorative work. Broad bands of fine crochet decorate cambric and muslin gowns, while easy edgings are used for finishing sachets, cushion covers, etc.

—A few days ago the World had a column article written by its local correspondent who understands the situation, and feelings of the community. Yesterday the World sent a strange reporter here who was got hopelessly muddled by the members of the combine, and made a garbled report which must make all Plainfielders smile. But there is one thing the combine is noted for more than another it is trickiness. Last night they had a private meeting in the stable of one of their number.

—Mayor Place of the Borough of North Plainfield has promptly acted upon our suggestion made several weeks ago that some steps be taken to compel the laying of proper side-walks in certain localities, where the neglect of the owners is nothing short of criminal. One death has been caused, and several persons have been injured, and it is high time some action was taken to abolish the rotten board-walks altogether, and compel the laying of flagging, at least in the most frequented thoroughfares.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

AN ADJOURNED MEETING LAST NIGHT.

The Question of More Hose, and Better Sidewalks Considered.—A Timely Communication from Mayor Place.

The borough Council met in adjourned session last evening. Mayor Place and Councilman Hegeman, Powell and Sebring responded to roll call. Councilman Buckle, Hummer and Needham were absent.

On motion of Mr. Hegeman the resolution authorizing the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps to purchase 900 feet of cotton jacket hose was taken from the table.

Mr. Hegeman stated that the Finance Committee held a meeting Monday evening and examined the Fire Department fund that there was a balance amounting to $612.50 credited to that fund. He further stated that two fire department bonds amounting to $400 would be due next month and it would require all the money to cancel them. Continuing he said, "In view of the low state of the finances of that fund I think it would be wise to defer for the present, the purchase of new hose.

Mr. Sebring said that it was essential that the department should have some new hose, and he thought by the time the hose arrived the borough would have sufficient funds to pay for it. He said the borough could get sixty days' credit and it would cost no more to purchase the hose now than it would if Council deferred the purchase for sixty days.

Mr. Hegeman said the department had 1,100 feet of hose at present, and although he was aware of the fact that more was needed he did not think it advisable to purchase it until the borough was in funds to pay for it.

Mr. Sebring moved that the resolution be adopted. The motion prevailed.

Against Bad Sidewalks.

The following communication from Mayor Place was read:

To the Borough Council:

For several weeks past much complaint has been made to me, that residents of the borough, in certain localities, are allowing their board sidewalk to remain in a dangerous condition. It is only a few weeks ago that one of our residents, Mrs Geo. Giddis, died of an injury received from walking upon a wretched delapidated board walk. As a matter of law every resident who maintains a dangerous sidewalk is liable in damages for all personal injuries sustained. It would be well if a test case at some time could be brought by some one injured, to show residents who, with impunity and knowingly maintain dangerous walks, that they must take the consequences, and suffer the penalty therefore. Every resident can keep his sidewalk in good condition if he fails to do so, he should be made to comply at once with the ordinance.

I am aware there is no money available in the hands of Council to repair these broken neglected walks. The owners of the property of the occupants whose these dangerous walks exist, pay little attention in many instances to the request of the Street Committee to repair them. In this case, it is the duty of this Council—and I believe Councilmen will agree with me—to transfer from some other fund, sufficient to pay the money necessary for such purpose, if it can be done, and cause these old dilapidated board walks to be put in a proper condition. It is equally important and to have our sidewalks in good condition as it is to have the roads in good condition, for where there is good roads one dollar is saved where two dollars. It is an injury to the borough that so many of its residents neg ect to keep their board walks in repair, in many places they have become a positive, unbearable nuisance, and though the authorities are blamed for their condition. In my judgment the evil does not upon this Council any more imminent duty than to enforce the sidewalk ordinance. Section 1 of that ordinance passed Oct 5, 1885, reads in part, "In default of such owners doing such work (repairing or laying side walks) themselves, after such (30 days') notice, the same shall be done" by the Street Committee and Council of said Borough, at the cost and expense of said owners." Now it is evident fail to do this: duty in this matter, let the Council pass an ordinance—which it has the power to do under the General Act—prohibiting, within certain districts, the laying of board walks, and compel property owners to lay flagging instead. I will not longer come before the people of the borough are ready to demand that such action be taken for their health and comfort in passing over the walks within our limits. If this condition of things are to continue, one of the principal reasons for coming here will be defeated. I trust this matter will receive your careful consideration and that such action be taken by this Council as the case demands.

CHAS. PLACE, Mayor.

On motion of Mr. Hegeman it was referred to the Committee on Streets.

The same gentleman moved that the Council go into executive session. So ordered.

A Rumored Mass Meeting.

It is rumored that the combine are arranged for a mass meeting to be held at Music Hall one week from next Thursday. It is stated that the object of the meeting will be to show that no combine existed in Common Council and that the members were working for the best interests of the city.

The Crescents Defeated.

The Crescent league bowling team visited New York last evening and rolled a game with the Ivanhoes of that place. The Crescents were not in condition to ball and consequently were defeated by six pins. The score was Ivanhoes, 1250. Crescents 1490.

City Court Notes.

Thomas Flynn was fined two dollars in the city court this morning. He was charged with violating the hack ordinance.

In the case of Patrick Brennan sentence was suspended.

Mischievious Boys.

Some small boys in North Plainfield have been amusing themselves by breaking the street lamps. They had better cease the practice or they may be arrested and called upon to answer to a charge of malicious mischief.

TRUMPET PRESENTATION.

Governor Abbett Made the Presentation Speech Last Evening.

Governor Abbett visited Westfield last night and it is the first time that a real Governor has ever honored the town with his presence. He was given an enthusiastic reception and his arrival was heralded by a salute of thirteen guns from the brass cannon that formerly belonged to the Star of the West, a famous government vessel, during the war.

The governor arrived on the 7:30 train. He was met at the depot by Hon. Chauncey B. Ripley, LL. D., and the reception committee of Empire Engine Company comprising Messrs. L. G. Cohn, Jr., C. B. Peddle, and G. W. Peck, and the members of the Westfield Fire Department.

The procession was formed and headed by the Plainfield Cornet Band marched to Arcanum Hall, where the presentation took place. The residences along the line of march were illuminated and Governor Abbett received an ovation.

Chauncey B. Ripley presided at the meeting. He made a few introductory remarks in which he complimented Father Smith, the pastor of Holy Trinity Catholic Church, on the means he chose to liquidate the debt on the church. He also complimented Empire Engine Company in securing the silver trumpet and for in inducing Gov. Abbett to come to Westfield and presented it. In speaking of the Governor he said he did not know of a harder worker in the state; that he had been a practiced orator for twenty-five years and now held the highest office within the gift of the people of New Jersey, and the only thing for them now to do was to send him to the United States Senate. Mr. Ripley then introduced Governor Abbett who said he was more than pleased to see such a large audience, that he was pleased to be in Westfield for the first time; he spoke of the place, the fire department, the seven churches and two schools, and complimented the Catholics by reducing the debt on their church by over one-half by the recent fair. He commented on the friendly strife between the firemen and thought the public should give them proper recognition. He then presented the trumpet. Foreman Hensel received it behalf of the Company with well chosen words.

Among those who occupied seats on the platform were, Father Smith, the pastor of the Holy Trinity Church at Westfield, Father Torr of Jersey City, Father Smyth and Stafford of this city, and Messrs. Clark, Endicott and Gardner, members of the Town Committee. A banquet followed the presentation.

Gone but Not Forgotten.

Several servant girls in this city are bemoaning the sudden departure of a young bartender, who recently left for parts unknown. Rumor has it that he won their confidence to such an extent that he succeeded in borrowing various sums of money, amounting in all to about thirty dollars. Dame rumor further states that he also stole a watch and a pair of bracelets from one of his fair admirers. While here he played the role of the gay Lothario to perfection and was what is generally termed a "masher."

Mrs Sarah J. C. Downs Buried.

Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs, late President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of New Jersey, was interred in Rosedale Cemetery, Orange, yesterday. Services were held in the Halsey street M. E. Church, Newark. The body was borne into the church by Rev. D. Randolph, of West Brighton, L. I.; Rev. H. Bellfus, of Clayton, N. J.; E. Sawyer, J. F. Downs, Rev. C. S. Downs, and S. S. Downs. The three last-named are sons of the deceased. Addresses were delivered by Rev. G. Hughes, J. Atkinson, Dr. Stokes and Dr. J. B. Graw.

Death of Erastus Freeman.

Erastus Freeman died suddenly yesterday morning at his residence, near Iselin, in his eighty-eighth year. Mr. Freeman was born in Iselin and in early life went to New York to engage in business. He returned to Iselin about thirty years ago and built a handsome country seat. He leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. L. V. Clark of Westfield.

Suspicious Characters.

Policeman Lynch noticed two tramps acting very suspiciously early last evening and he placed them under arrest. Later in the evening he arrested another knight of the road for soliciting alms from pedestrians.

City Judge Codington sentenced two of the trio to fifteen days in the county jail and the othe one to thirty days.

—There were 268 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 238 in the preceding week and 200, 217, 178 and 203 in the corresponding weeks of 1890, 1889, 1888 and 1887 respectively. The total number of failures in the United States January 1st to date is 10,389 against 8,703 in 1890.

—Edsall reports that there is every prospect of a large increase in trade in Plainfield this Winter. Already he has been obliged to put on extra help in order to meet the increasing demand, and will soon put on more. Every year the citizens of Plainfield are more content to do their shopping at home. This certainly speaks well for our home merchants.

THE COMBINE'S GAME.

TO TAKE THE POWER FROM THE PEOPLE.

The Way They Did It, and the Only Chance the People Have Had to Protect Themselves.

The following from THE NEWS of Feb. 18, 1890, will be interesting matter to remember at this time, when Moffett, Hetfield and Spangenberg, are seeking reelection:

"Over a year ago there was much deliberation among our leading citizens over the operations of "An Act for the construction, maintenance and operation of a system of sewerage in cities, towns and boroughs." Meeting after meeting was held, able counsel being present and what was considered most proper act was presented to the Legislature and adopted.

This bill required the consent of one-half of the number of persons who shall have been assessed as owners of real estate, and assessed upwards of twice as much as those who were required to pay the taxes were given a voice in the matter.

But Councilmen Moffett, Hetfield and Spangenberg seem to desire no such impediment, and go to Trenton as a Committee of the combine of Common Council and have a supplement to the act referred to introduced repealing the clause which requires the consent of one-half of the number of persons who shall have been assessed as above stated.

The supplement is as follows:

A supplement to an act entitled "An act for the construction, maintenance and operation of systems of sewerage in cities, towns and boroughs," approved June thirteenth, one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the second section of the act of which this is amendatory be amended to read as follows:

2. And be it enacted, That such persons desirous of forming a company for such purposes, shall make, sign and acknowledge, before some officer authorized to take and acknowledgment of deeds, a certificate in writing, which shall state the corporate name by which the company is to be known, the capital stock, the term of its existence, the number of directors, the name of those who shall manage the affairs of the company for the first year, or until their successors are elected and qualified, and the name of the city, town or borough in and for which such sewerage system is to be constructed and the business of the company carried on; such certificate shall be filed in the office of the secretary of the State, together with the consent in writing of the owners of lands and condition or consents upon which the consent has been granted by the corporate authorities, if any. A copy of the city, town or borough in which such sewerage system is to be constructed.

3. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect immediately.

This supplement removes the only obstacle, apparently, in the way of granting any franchise any half dozen men who may happen for the time being to be in power, may see fit to grant, though their acts may result in the ruin of the town unfortunate enough to be at their mercy. Everyone who will take the trouble to read the bill as amended will see that it is full of snares and pitfalls, to mulct the property holders of this city of their property sold for the debts that will be piled up against them. This will be the record that we have sounded timely warning.

This is the bill that Assemblyman Moylan moved to lay on the table, because it was exceedingly dangerous to take from the people their rights and place it in the hands of half a dozen men. But the combine got it passed nevertheless, and Mr. Moylan's words have come only too true, as we all know.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. C. W. Dilts is seriously ill at his home in this city.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wortman celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage at their home in Bound Brook last evening. About one hundred guests were present including friends from New York, Brooklyn, Manasquan, Bound Brook, Somerville and Plainfield. Among those present from this city were: Mr. and Mrs. Horace Martin, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Van Middlesworth and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Force, Miss B. Fisher, Miss Ella Feuner, Mr. M. Lunger, Mr. Wm. Crawford, Miss Minnie Zlegz, Mr. Herbert S. Feuner, Mr. L. Woolley, Mr. F. Reynolds, Jr., and others. The evening was spent very pleasantly and Mr. and Mrs. Wortman received the congratulations of their many friends.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A Divorce Colony.

In writing a sketch of some of the well known individuals who have fled to Sioux Falls, S. D., to reside until the law of that young state shall release them from galling matrimonial chains, Mr. James Realf, Jr., believes that he has rendered humanity a service. The colonists are of his opinion, too, and are so thoroughly in sympathy with his efforts to set them right that several of the number permit him to publish in The Arena along with his contribution their portraits. Among these is young Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., whose pathetic story of illness and domestic infelicity is more or less familiar to our readers. To add to this young lady's misfortunes, while she was recovering from rheumatism she met with an accident which left her with a broken leg, so that she is probably lamed for life.

A beautiful Englishwoman was one of the ladies at Sioux Falls. The inhuman treatment of her husband, an officer in the British army, drew her to America and to that refuge of unhappy married people, Sioux Falls. Yet another victim was one of the alleged stronger sex. We say alleged, so as to offend neither man nor woman. This gentleman was Dr. Thomas D. Worrall, and a good looking old gentleman he is if he resembles his picture. His wife ran away and left him when he was supposed to be suffering from a mortal disease. Either the shock of it or the fact that there was a prospect of his getting free caused him to recover rapidly, and he, too, became one of the divorce colonists at Sioux Falls.

Mr. Realf sums up his case as follows:

"Men and women suffer enough before they seek a divorce court. It is ghoulish to pursue them in the press with misrepresentation and ridicule or with exposure of their marital miseries.

How a Poet Writes.

That delightful talker, Sir Edwin Arnold, told an interviewer that he had in his life written no less than 8,000 editorial leaders, each averaging over half a column. That is nothing remarkable. Sir Edwin Arnold is sixty years old. There are numbers of American editors who write 1,000 leaders a year. But English editors do not write as rapidly as Americans.

One thing connected with his work is remarkable, however, and that is the way in which Sir Edwin writes poetry. His poetry will be read and quoted long after Arnold, the editor, is forgotten, yet the poetry comes to him unsought and of itself. He does not grub and grapple after it with pain and hunt for rhymes in exhausting thought. These exquisite verses which have given his fellow men so much pleasure float into his brain of themselves, unheralded, unexpected, at all times and at any time. When they come he "jots them down in the rough," wherever he happens to be, and later polishes them up at his leisure.

Sometimes they float to him in the midst of editorial writing, and he "lets them come as they will." If he is writing a long poem he sets down what comes to him each day and files the notes away. This is the ideal way to write poetry or anything else. It seems to be the method of that mysterious quality we call genius.

For generations the Cherokees have occupied their lands in common in the Indian Territory, each family taking possession of and retaining for its own use as much ground as was needed for stock, tillage or business. This is the ideal state of the school of economists headed by Henry George, and it is interesting to know that under this system the Cherokees have become the wealthiest individuals per head in North America. Many attempts have been made to induce them to divide their lands in severalty and become actual owners of the land individually, like the white farmer. Such attempts have hitherto been always unsuccessful, but now numbers of Cherokees have filed a petition in equity asking that 14,000,000 acres of their lands be divided into separate farms and assigned to individual ownership. Undoubtedly their petition will be granted. There will then in the next few years be opportunity to see which system is best for Cherokee Indians, at any rate.

The ammonia motor has not achieved great progress, though experiments are still making. The inventor produces what he calls a "motive vapor" by adding fifteen parts ammonia to eighty-five parts water. The volatile nature of the ammonia causes a vapor to be formed so readily that the process of converting the mixture into steam is rapid and easy, and the inventor claims that only half as much fuel is required to make steam from this mixture as to make it from water alone. The claim is also made that the ammonia mixture is nonexplosive and leaves no deposit on boilers. It is to be hoped by all means that all this may prove true, for the invention would be valuable for ocean steamers. Not only would they require less storage room for fuel, but they could run at their highest speed at much less expense, and the four day ship would soon be with us with lower passenger rates than at present.

To our friends, the reporters: Don't talk about wedding suppers or funeral suppers.

ARE WE TO HAVE HAWAII

Rumor That the Islands Are to Be Annexed.

A WAR VESSEL SENT TO SEIZE THEM

The United Press' Correspondent in China Claims That the Cruiser Charleston Has Been Dispatched to Honolulu to Acquire the Kingdom.

SHANGHAI, Nov. 14.—The special correspondent of the United Press who was sent to China to investigate the matters which have been causing so much uneasiness in diplomatic circles throughout Europe and the United States is now in this city and has learned from a high authority that the United States cruiser Charleston has left these waters for Honolulu, capital of the kingdom of Hawaii, and that Commander George C. Remey has received instructions from the United States government to send to the Hawaiian islands should certain eventualities occur.

Her Ostensible Mission.

Ostensibly the mission of the Charleston is simply to protect American interests there and to afford a refuge for American citizens on those islands should the political upheaval expected there take the form which some people anticipate it may take.

It is recognized by all except, perhaps, the representatives of two powers that the Hawaiian islands are naturally under the wing of the United States, and that the United States is the country to police, if not to annex, that somewhat disturbed country under "certain circumstances." It of course has been for months by that the events apprehended in the Hawaiian islands will not turn out to be so serious as some people in the United States fear they may, but the United States government apparently has resolved to take the most energetic measures should it feel thoroughly justified in so doing.

Not a Bold Swoop.

The Charleston's mission is not a bold and uncalled for swooping down upon and seizure of the Hawaiian kingdom; it is simply the taking of a firm, diplomatic step in what are considered by the United States government to be the best interests of the United States.

These facts have undoubtedly been cabled to the British foreign office, and there has been in consequence an exchange of dispatches between the British admiralty and the admiral in command of the British fleet in Chinese waters.

The Chinese Situation.

So far as the Chinese disturbances are concerned matters seem to be calming down considerably, owing in a great measure to the concentration in Chinese waters of many foreign warships. China will do little or nothing to protect foreigners so long as the diplomats alone take a hand in her game, but when foreign ministers are backed up by warships, and plenty of them, protests are heeded.

The Ichang indemnity, however, has not yet been paid, and the hatred expressed for the missionaries does not abate in its bitterness.

The province of Hunan is seething with uneasiness in a manner most ominous and strongly indicative of the intrigues of Russian agents.

British agents also are said to be at work there, though the average British official would turn pale with horror and disgust were it even suggested to him that such a thing were possible.

Great Britain, however, is without question creating considerable trouble now in Hunan.

To Divide Up China.

Sooner or later the Russian bear and the British lion, to say nothing of the French eagle, will tear large slices out of Chinese territory in order to appease momentarily their hunger for Asiatic territory. Then there may be developments of a sad nature for the foreign residents of China.

MINISTER GRANT'S VICTORY.

His Efforts to Get American Pork Into Austria Successful.

VIENNA, Nov. 14.—A decree will shortly be issued revoking the prohibition of American pork in the Austrian-Hungarian empire. Minister Fred D. Grant has just been notified that his efforts were successful, and that the restrictions on the entry of empire would soon be opened to American salt meats.

Not Anarchists but Socialists.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Seventeen of the alleged anarchists who were under arrest at Greif's hall on West Lake street by the police were tried by Justice Woodman for disorderly conduct and resisting officers. The incompetent evidence submitted seemed to show that Inspector Lewis' men had made a blunder, and in looking for a gathering of bloodthirsty Haymarket fiends, had captured a meeting of socialists, who print The Arbeiter Zeitung. The hearing will be continued.

Poisoned by Cheese.

WOODBURY, N. J., Nov. 14.—The family of Samuel Turner, consisting of himself, wife, two daughters, aged nineteen and twelve years, respectively, and a little son, were taken ill immediately after their breakfast. They fell insensible and had convulsions. The two daughters are still insensible and suffering from convulsions. The doctors assess poisoning caused by eating cheese.

John Jacob Astor's Illness.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Mr. John Jacob Astor is ill with typhoid fever at Mrs. J. Coleman Drayton's house, 374 Fifth avenue. His wife is with him, and two doctors and two professional nurses are caring for him. It was said at the house last night that Mr. Astor was slowly recovering and that he was practically out of danger.

Squires Sues for Libel.

COURTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 14.—District Attorney-elect Squires has brought an action against Tom Democrat for libel, placing damages at $15,000. During the recent campaign The Democrat charged Squires with one of the Republican candidate, with misappropriating funds belonging to a certain estate.

An Illinois Postmaster Short.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Arthur A. Boyington, the postmaster of Highland Park, a suburb of this city, was arrested by a United States marshal on a charge of embezzling $2,000. He admitted his guilt and was held in $3,000 bail.

Fatal Colliery Explosion.

WHITE HAVEN, Pa., Nov. 14.—An explosion occurred at the Oakdale colliery by which John Stevansky was killed and George Merold was fatally injured. The mines are operated by G. B. Markle & Co., of Hazleton.

THE HOLY SEE'S ULTIMATUM.

If Dr. McGlynn Will Obey He May Be Forgiven.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Ever since the visit of Bishop Moore, of Florida, to Rome reports have been circulated periodically that the Dr. McGlynn case was to be reopened. One of these reports was submitted yesterday to Archbishop Corrigan, and he made the following statement: "In regard to the case of Dr. McGlynn, it will suffice to quote a letter sent to me some time ago by the sacred congregation. This letter has been approved by the holy father, and no departure will be made from its provisions.

"Referring to the efforts made by a friendly prelate in behalf of Dr. McGlynn the sacred congregation says that a petition for the review of his case would be granted only by submitting to the following conditions:

"First—That McGlynn himself make the request and state his grievances.

"Second—That he publicly condemn all that he has said and done of an insulting character as against the archbishop and as against the holy see.

"Third—That he be ready to abide by the orders and submit to the judgment of the apostolic see.

"Fourth—That he promise to abstain from any public utterance or assistance at any meeting on the matter under consideration.'

"This," said the archbishop, "is the ultimatum. I would be most happy to see Dr. McGlynn relieved from the penalties under which he is suffering. I have no hope that anything will be done for him until he submits to the authority of the holy see. This can be no grievance to him, as it is a condition of Catholic faith. Let him obey, and through obedience he will obtain pardon and peace."

A copy of this statement was shown to Dr. McGlynn. It was the first intimation he had of the papal ultimatum.

"You may say," said he, "that I have not seen or heard of the article before and know nothing about it. I have nothing to say at present for publication."

The letter and the accompanying remarks of the archbishop have caused a sensation in Catholic circles.

FASHIONS

A Fashionable Walking Dress.

FOR SUNNY DAYS.

This sketch represents a smart visiting dress. It is of silver-grey damask, with revers, full sleeves, and waist-belt in pale pink satin, and a full chemisette, which is also pale pink. The skirt is edged with a barred flouncing of grey velvet, and the hat is grey and pink to correspond.

From Bonnet to Hat.

Hats can be turned into bonnets at very short notice. All they need is the addition of black velvet strings. The strings should be very narrow, and should come from the back of the hat and be tied under the chin. A hat with strings gives a very ceremonious appearance to a costume, and it is always considered more dressy than one without strings.

Buttons of all sorts and sizes are again to be much used on cloaks and children's costumes; and even skirts, like old Grimes's coat, are "buttoned down before."

Threw Acid in Her Face.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Ella Garrison, a girl of nineteen, who lives with her parents at 2,731 Eighth avenue, was last night disfigured by acid thrown into her face by George Hynes, a plumber. Some of the acid got into the girl's left eye, and she will lose the sight of it. Her left cheek was also burned. She says that Hynes deliberately threw the acid in her face and ran. He was jealous.

County Clerk Conway Removed.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 14.—Governor Hill has removed County Clerk Conway from office and appointed in his stead Charles Kreen Jones, a deputy county clerk, and son of ex-Congressman Greenman. Conway is charged with presenting bills against the county which included illegal items.

Another Gambler's Suicide.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Julius Spier, a young jeweler, crazed over gambling losses, ended his life at the Sturtevant House. He was born in Norwich, Conn., thirty years ago, where his father had accumulated a considerable fortune.

A New New York Paper.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The New York Gazette appears today, under the joint editorship of Charles Mattiesany, Archibald F. Wood and Paul J. Needham. It will be independent and general, and consists of eight pages, illustrated.

A Rich Girl's Romance.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 14.—Miss Henrietta Crowell, daughter of the late Stephen Crowell, of Brooklyn, a rich and beautiful young woman, has been married to Henry Nilsen, a Lakewood hotel servant, and has disappeared with him.

A Workman's Fall.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 14.—J. P. Fortsel, of 226 North avenue, New York, while at work on the roof the Pennsylvania railroad waiting room in this city, fell to the ground and was seriously injured.

REVENGE THEIR MOTIVE

A Yankee Tar Says Two Civilians Had Been Killed.

THEN THE BALTIMORE'S MEN DIED.

New Light on the Valparaiso Affair, Showing That Our Sailors Were Attacked Before the Baltimore Incident and Slew Several of Their Foes.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The attack upon the sailors of the United States steamer Baltimore was made Oct. 16, nearly a month ago, but up to this time neither the state department nor the navy departments has been supplied with any news of the attack that explains its suddenness, or furnishes any specific occasion for so violent an exhibition of dislike for Americans.

Possibly there was provocation for the attack that has not been made known. There was received in this city yesterday a letter from a seaman on the Baltimore. He is just a plain, ordinary sailor, but he tells an interesting story. He says:

Two Chilians Had Been Killed.

"I would say that I am sick of Chili. It was bad enough before their rebellion came to an end, but now it looks like they want to do the Americans up. Just after the rebels captured Valparaiso the San Francisco was here. Her captain gave the men liberty, and while there it was shown that night the Chilians tried to mob them. The sailor boys had to fight like tigers to hold their own. There was two Chilians killed and quite a number that was badly used up. There was several of the 'Friscos get hurt, but no one was killed. So it is all fair with the Americans, they say, if any of them comes on shore again. Captain Schley won't give us any liberty until the trouble is settled. They call the Baltimore 'the white devil' and the 'Frisco 'the white spy.'"

As this letter was written not later than Oct. 19, and the attack on the Baltimore's men occurred Oct. 16, it is just possible that the Chilian rabble waited for the first visit ashore of the American sailors to "get even" with them.

Three Cruisers Ready for Sea.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 14.—Yesterday special orders were received at the navy yard from Secretary Tracy to have the Bennington, Atlanta and Concord ready for sea today. An important part of Secretary Tracy's order was that 100,000 six-pound cartridges be sent immediately to San Francisco by express. This is the first time since the war that ammunition has been sent overland. It was intimated by a prominent official at the yard that every available vessel of our navy would be in the harbor of Valparaiso by the middle of December.

Diary of Balmaceda's Minister.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 14.—The second volume of the diary of Banados Espinosa, Balmaceda's minister of theInterior, has been discovered. The following entry throws some light on the situation of personal cruelty made against Balmaceda's representatives:

MR. INTERIOR—Order to be shot immediately, without trial of any kind, all commanders, officers, soldiers or private persons guilty of conspiring. BALMACEDA.

March 10, 1891.

MR. PRESIDENT—Agreeably to your excellency's instructions and by agreement with the military governor, there were shot last night eighty noncommissioned officers and soldiers who yesterday attempted to embark in the vessel belonging to the revolting fleet.

VILLEGAS.

There is nothing in the diary to indicate that Minister Egan interfered with domestic affairs at all. He is only once mentioned as having asked permission for the Edwards family to leave Valparaiso.

Better Feeling in Chili.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 14.—Judge Foster is making all due haste in the investigation into the recent attack on the Baltimore's sailors. He is now engaged in examining foreign witnesses at the jail. There seems to be every disposition to bring the investigation to a close as quickly as possible, and the feeling against Americans has toned down in a marked degree.

Fighting in Brazil.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via GALVESTON, Tex., Nov. 14.—The rebel leader Mello is fortifying in the state of Rio Grande do Sul has decided to join the insurrectionary movement.

Fonseca is displaying great energy in his efforts to crush the revolt. He is massing his warships for an early attack on the revolutionary forces.

BROWN NOT A SPY.

Our Admiral Denies the Slanders of the Chilians.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The charge made by Chilians that Admiral Brown, the commander of the United States naval forces in Chilian waters, had furnished information to Balmaceda about the landing of the Congressional forces to attack Valparaiso before the capture of that city by them, caused Secretary Tracy to send to Admiral Brown, at Arapisco on Tuesday last, a cable dispatch in which the admiral was asked if he had furnished any such information. The admiral was also requested to state if he had any Chilian refugees on board.

Admiral Brown's response was as follows:

ACAPULCO, Nov. 10, 1891.

To Secretary Navy, Washington:

Do not invite or take any Chilians. Invited foreign officials only. German went. No one from this ship gave information. Full information asked leading war bureau at Santiago and Valparaiso before I sailed at home.

BROWN.

In addition to the foregoing positive statements by Admiral Brown he distinctly states in his report to the department, dated Aug. 31, that he was informed before he sailed from Valparaiso that the Congressional forces had effected a landing.

Senor Pedro Montt, the Chilian minister, will be presented to the president today by Secretary Blaine.

Shot Dead by a Policeman.

READING, Pa., Nov. 14.—Officer Beidaman, of Berks county, a deputy county, discovered three men at 1 a. m. trying to break into a building at that place. They ran and he fired, killing one of them. The dead man's companions escaped. There is no clew as to who the deceased is.

Explorer De Brazza Honored.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—It is rumored that M. de Brazza, the explorer, has been massacred in Africa.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION

He Has Fixed Upon Nov. 26 as Thanksgiving Day.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The president has signed a proclamation fixing Thursday, Nov. 26, as day of thanksgiving. The proclamation is as follows:

It is a very glad moment of the storytelling year which has crowned the year now drawing to a close that its helpful and reassuring touch has been felt by all our people, has been as wide as our country, and so special that every home has felt its comforting influence. It is too great to be in words of man's power and too particular to be the device of his mind. To God, the benefactor and the all father, who makes the labors of men to be fruitful, redeems their losses by his grace, and the measure of whose giving is as much beyond the thoughts of man as it is beyond his deserts, the praise and gratitude of the people of this favored nation are justly due.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States of America, do hereby appoint Thursday, Nov. 26 present, to be a day of joyful thanksgiving to God for the bounties of his providence, for the peace in which we are permitted to enjoy them, and for the preservation of those institutions of civil and religious liberty which he gave our fathers the wisdom to devise and establish, and which he constrains us now to observe. Among the appropriate observances of the day are rest from toil, worship in the public congregations of the several of family the about our American freedom, and thoughtful helpfulness toward those who suffer lack of the body or of the spirit. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington, this 13. A. D. 1891, and of the 116th year of the independence of the United States.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

Suicided Before His Wife's Eyes.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 14.—A sensational suicide occurred on the Harrison bridge last evening. John Morris, forty-two years old, a well known confectioner of this city, drove across the bridge with his wife. Morris jumped from his buggy, mounted the handrail and plunged into the river. The wife's screams attracted several men, who pulled Morris from the water. He was still alive, but died a few moments afterward. Morris had been drinking heavily.

Pennsylvania and the Fair.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 14.—The subcommittee of the executive committee of the World's fair board who are to select a plan for Pennsylvania's building at Chicago will meet the architects and others interested in this city next Tuesday.

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON

Luna Will Hide Her Face on Sunday Evening.

SHE WILL ENTER EARTH'S SHADOW.

What the World Famous Astronomer, Camille Flammarion, Says About the Interesting Celestial Event—How Columbus Used the Eclipse.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—A total eclipse of the moon, an interesting astronomical event that will not occur again until 1909, will take place tomorrow evening, and the celestial phenomenon will be visible all over the United States turned away from the sun for an hour and a half. The eclipse will be caused by the moon passing through the earth's shadow. In the western states the eclipse will commence before sunset. In the middle and eastern states, however, the moon will be well elevated above the horizon before it enters the earth's shadow.

How Christopher Fooled the Red Men.

Christopher Columbus, who is popularly believed to have discovered America in the year 1492, once used this eclipse to awe the poor red men and make them believe he possessed supernatural power, whereas he was only better posted on celestial phenomena than his copper colored brethren.

The eclipse occurred on the night of March 1, 1504. He was shipwrecked on the island of Jamaica without provisions, and the Indians refused him assistance. Christopher scratched his head a moment, remembered that the eclipse was about due and predicted that it would occur, remarking in parenthesis as his thoughts reverted to the hollow feeling in his interior, that the gods were displeased with the natives because they kept their pantry doors locked. When the moon hid her angry face, as he had predicted, the red men fell on their knees and gave Columbus and his men the first square meal they had enjoyed in some time.

What Astronomer Flammarion Says.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—Camille Flammarion, the world famous astronomer, has given his views concerning the coming eclipse to a reporter. The celebrated student of the celestial regions says: "If the weather is propitious and no new cyclone arrives, Sunday's total eclipse of the moon will be observed on that day under exceptionally favorable conditions, for it takes place at the precise hour in which the moon crosses the ecliptic.

"The middle of the eclipse will be observed at Paris at twenty-nine minutes after midnight. Perhaps with scrupulous attention it will be possible to distinguish about twenty-nine minutes past 11 p. m. the profile of the chin of the (lunar) Cordilleras under the form of a very slight elevation on the shaded circular rim of our planet. In general what has been taken for this profile of the Cordilleras or Andes was a very deep shade of certain lunar plains.

A Glass Needed.

"Nevertheless, the earth will be in such a position during the eclipse that it will not be possible to attempt an observation without the aid of a weak glass which will roughly allow the entire disk of the moon upon its field. This will make it very interesting at the exact moment of the beginning and the ending for the purpose of computation.

The Color of the Moon.

"The color of the moon in eclipse will probably be a deep red, with some shade. The tone of the color will depend upon the solar rays passing through the earth's atmosphere and their operation upon the lunar disk. The red may be variegated, light or dark, and even of a yellowish tinge. Sometimes the eclipse will be entirely invisible. These eclipses occur at regular intervals—eighteen years and eleven days. The eclipse of Sunday will be the recurrence of that of November, 1873.

The Celestial Pyrotechnics.

"Probably there will be a great number of shooting stars tracking the heavens during the eclipse. They will appear to emanate from the constellation of Leo. These shooting stars are, as a matter of fact, debris of Tempel's comet, which appeared in 1866, making a magnificent passage in a clear sky."

KILLED BY CHICAGO BURGLARS.

A Woman and Her Son Choked to Death and Robbed.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Mrs. Gretchen Lenzenbauer, who kept a saloon at 444 South Clark street, was choked to death by robbers, who then beat and choked to death her fifteen-year old son George.

The crime was discovered by Mr. Gruenwald, a coal contractor, who came to the saloon about 9 a.m. for a glass of beer. He found Mrs. Lenzenbauer seated in the center of the room, her head lying on a table. Green said nothing, but, going to the door threw her lifeless body from the chair and exposed her neck, blackened and bruised and bearing the imprint of fingers, which had clutched the throat.

Gruenwald summoned the police. They found that the till had been forced open and the drawers behind the bar ransacked. In one of the three living apartments at the rear of the saloon the body of the boy George was found stretched on the bare floor. On his head were marks of fingers, and his face was blackened and bruised by blows, and on the neck of his flannel shirt was the well defined mark of a bloody hand. Two men are suspected.

Editor Swift Nearly Killed.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 14.—Editor Fred K. Swift, of The Sunday Herald, was assailed by Peter Keeley, of Keeley & Co., hardware and junk dealers of this city, in front of the Keeley House at noon. Keeley kicked him on the side, breaking a rib and otherwise badly hurting him. Dr. Charles T. Frost thinks the editor's nose is broken. But for interference Keeley would probably have killed Swift. Keeley gave himself up immediately and was admitted to bail. The Herald had accused Keeley of being a police spotter.

Named the Triplets Cleveland.

NEW ENYRE, N. J., Nov. 14.—Three children were recently added to the family of Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Hopkins—two girls and a boy. The name of Grover Cleveland Hopkins was conferred upon the boy, and the girls were named respectively Frances Cleveland Hopkins and Ruth Cleveland Hopkins.

Seven Bodies in One Grave.

HOLYOKE, Mass., Nov. 14.—Edmond F. Jofts, sexton of the Forest Dell cemetery, has been suspended on the charge of burying seven bodies in one grave to save the trouble of preparing a separate place for each body.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Nick Young Re-elected President of the League.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The National Baseball League meeting postponed the free pass and deadhead receipts questions until the spring meeting, which will be held in New York. Nick Young was re-elected president for a term of three years. Robinson, of Cleveland; Scandrett, of Pittsburg; Byrne, of Brooklyn, and Day, of New York, were elected directors, and Day, Brush and Hart were appointed schedule committee. A. G. Spalding was elected an honorary member.

"Slump" Weidman to Litch Again.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 14.—George E. Weidman, ex-pitcher of the famous Detroit team of the National league, intends to re-enter the diamond next season. "Slump," as he is familiarly termed by his friends of the profession, said today: "I expect to sign with Anson, of the Chicagos, next season. My arm is all right now after my two years' rest. I am after my old friend Galvin, of Pittsburg. I'm going in to beat him pitching and batting next year."

A Purse for Slavin and Jackson.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—In response to "Parson" Davies' recent challenge on behalf of Peter Jackson to Frank P. Slavin the National club of London wired an offer of a $5,000 purse, for Jackson and Citizen Jackson to ascertain if the California club will advance the recent offer it made of a similar amount, and will await a reply before taking further steps in the matter.

New York Gets "Silver" King.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 14.—Manager "Pat" Powers met Catcher Buckley and Short stop Glasscock here yesterday and claims to have secured them both for New York next season. The deal with "Silver" King was closed by the payment of $500 advance money.

Fulford Again Beats Brewer.

MARION, N. J., Nov. 14.—In the second game of match here D. Fulford again defeated Captain J. L. Brewer. The score was: Fulford, 99; Brewer, 98.

AN ENTIRE FAMILY BURNED.

Five Persons Burned in Their Beds at Columbus.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 14.—One of the most disastrous fires in years, from the fact that an entire family was consumed, occurred here early this morning in the tenement houses on North High street. The firemen endeavored to enter the rooms, but the dense smoke made this impossible. One of the captains slid part way in side the building, but was pulled out again nearly suffocated. Two hours were consumed in gaining control of the flames and long ere that time no person was supposed to have escaped. Such, however, was not the case.

Half an hour after a little girl living in the neighborhood rumaged through the ruins and found a naked arm, which led to a search and the ultimate discovery of five blackened bodies. The dead are: The entire family of Charles Bethers was destroyed while sleeping in a little 8 by 12 foot room in the second story. They were Charles Bethers, aged thirty years; Elnzabeth, his wife, aged twenty-eight; Carrie, aged nine; Myrtle, aged six, and James, aged three years.

In fighting the flames two of the pipemen stood in a window sending a stream into this room without discovering the dying occupants, who were unconscious and unable to utter a cry. The search among the ruins following the victory over the fire was not as rigid as it should have been, and, nothing being found, the entire force was ordered back to quarters. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin, as two suspicious characters were seen hastening from the scene of the ravage was done. A full investigation will follow, and not a little criticism is passed upon the action of the fire department in not making a thorough examination before leaving. The room was only ten feet from the ground and the entire family might have been rescued.

VICTORY FOR BULKELEY.

Connecticut's Superior Court Says His Acts Are Valid.

HARTFORD, Nov. 14.—The Republicans are elated over the decision of Judge Robinson, of the superior court, in the matter of the mandamus brought against State Comptroller Staub by Governor Bulkeley's executive secretary, Mr. Brainard, to compel the payment of his salary. The court holds that title to office cannot be tried in mandamus proceedings, and that Gov. Lyman Bulkeley, having in possession of the executive office, was de facto governor, and his acts were valid, including the appointment of an executive secretary.

The salaries of the officers were fixed by statute Comptroller Staub had no discretion but to pay it. A mandamus will be issued to compel the payment. Staub's counsel has appealed the case to the supreme court. This was a test case, Staub having refused to pay the salaries of any of the holders of Republican state officials. Governor Bulkeley has come to the relief of the farmers. The State Agricultural society was unable to pay the premiums awarded at the recent state fair because the society could not obtain the state appropriation. Comptroller Staub refused payment because no appropriation has been made, owing to the legislative deadlock. Governor Bulkeley has notified the society that he will advance the money.

Mr. Cleveland and Baby Ruth.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 14.—Ex-President Cleveland has written a letter acknowledging the receipt of the spoon presented to baby Ruth at the recent dinner of the Clover club, in which he says: "While I intend to be entirely loyal to the conceded-ly wonderful child which has come to my home, I will not be denied the intense satisfaction of acknowledging that the pleasure attending the advent has been greatly enhanced by the delicate remembrance by the members of the Clover club of the mother and child."

Stunning Up the George Trial.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 14.—In the George trial, Dr. E. R. Mackey, who was called in support of Dr. Erway, created a sensation by saying, "If all the doctors were arrested who were guilty of criminal operations you'd have to turn all the churches into jails." The district attorney announced that the case was closed. The arguments are being made today, each side being allowed three hours.

Davidson Ahead of Call.

TALLAHASSEE, Nov. 14.—The supreme court has handed down its decision compelling the secretary of state to sign and seal Governor Fleming's commission of R. H. M. Davidson as United States senator. The opinion nowhere touches upon the question of Call's election, declaring that the United States senate is the only authority having jurisdiction.

MARVELOUS ESCAPE OF MINERS.

Fifty Made to Safety Through Water Up to Their Necks.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 14.—About 2 p. m. the great pumps that coax out thousands of gallons of water from the Leggett's Creek coal mine broke, and the mine began to flood. Fifty miners hurried in great alarm to reach the carriage which conveys them to the surface. They found that their avenue of escape had been cut off. The only other way to reach the surface was to face the raging waters, pass through them and reach a narrow passageway which led to the shaft of the Von Storch mine.

With stern faces the miners waded into the water. Soon it reached their knees, then their waists, and then their shoulders. To turn back meant death; ahead was hope of safety. For a thousand feet the men trudged on with the water up to their necks. Soon they were compelled to throw their heads sideways. With one ear in the sulphur water, and occasionally gulping in the water as they breathed, they steadily strove to reach safety hundreds of yards away.

John Jones, a Welsh miner, finally despaired and asked the others to go and leave him to perish, but they would not and assisted him along. Suddenly one of the men found his shoulders rising above the water, and five minutes later all were on dry land.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Thomas Joseph and William Jones, little boys, found $900 in money hidden in the woods near Harper's Mills, Pa.

A second flag has been presented to patriotic Schoolmistress Conners, of Ladoga, Ind., by the G. A. R. s of V. and Patriotic Order of Sons of America.

Sophia Schmitzlein, one of a notorious band of thieves at Chicago, scratched out the eye of a young girl on whom she had been an apprenticed and ran away.

Allen G. Thurman celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday at Columbus, O., Nov. 13. Owing to the recent death of Mrs. Thurman there were no public demonstrations.

Suit has been brought by the state of Iowa against the state of Illinois to ascertain in whose jurisdiction a strip of territory along the Mississippi between the state lies.

Masked robbers entered the store of the Farmers' Trading company at Spokane Falls, Wash., and holding the employes at the point of a pistol, stole $2,000 in money and valuable jewelry.

A confidence man who had prepared to swindle banks throughout New York state by representing himself as William Lane, bard, cashier of the Wheatland (Cal.) bank, was arrested at Binghamton, N. Y.

Ex-Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, stated before the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association at Waterloo, Ia., that he had proof that the Hiscock oleomargarine bill had failed to pass the last congress because certain members had been bought.

Advices from Stockton, Cal., say the contractors on the Mountain Railroad, in Fresno county, have discharged all their white laborers and have substituted Chinese.

By a fire in the coal shaft at North Springfield, Ills., six miners were rendered insensible by gas, two of whom may not recover. Fourteen others escaped.

Charles Wall, who murdered his wife at Tunkhannock on May 25, was convicted of murder in the first degree at Wilkesbarre.

Owing to the prevalence of smallpox in Trenton the Pennsylvania railroad company will vaccinate all its track laborers in that division.

THE KNIGHTS WANT PEACE.

TOLEDO, Nov. 14.—The Knights of Labor convention spent the morning discussing highly important resolutions off-red by Mr. A. W. Wright to settle the differences between the Knights of Labor and the American Federation of Labor. They were finally adopted by a vote of 95 yeas to 3 nays. The resolutions are accepted by the federation it means that over 600,000 laboring men will be united in organized labor assemblies.

The resolutions provide that Knights shall recognize and respect Federation working cards and labels, providing the Federation respects K. of L. cards and labels.

Many Witnesses for Graves' Trial.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 14.—J. H. Conrad, son-in-law of Mrs. Josephine A. Barnaby, who was murdered in Denver, and District Attorney Stevens, of Denver, have been in this city securing witnesses who will appear at the trial of Dr. T. Thatcher Graves, who was charged with the crime on the 24th. About forty witnesses will go to Denver from the east. Considerable testimony has been obtained from Danielsonville and neighboring towns in Connecticut which is claimed, by defendant counsel on Dr. Graves reputation while living here, based on allegations of malpractice.

Young Emmet Arrested.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 14.—Superintendent of Police Weir arrested J. K. Emmet, the comedian, and about thirty others for violating the Sunday law by getting up a parade on Sunday last for the purpose of advertising Emmet's play. Emmet was taken before Alderman Grigg, when he entered $800 bail for a hearing.

A LOOK OVER THE FIELD

THE HEIGHT OF BALL PLAYERS AS JUDGED BY THE SEASON JUST ENDED.

Will the Short Men Force Out the Tall Ones—They are Now Holding the Bases—Some in the Outfield—Virtue's Clever Work at First.

When we look back at the base ball season just ended, and note the men who have distinguished themselves, it will be seen that they were almost all short men, and in fact, that the short, stocky man is beginning to predominate in base ball nowadays. Formerly a tall player, like a policeman, was selected as much on account of his physique as for his ability on the diamond. In fact, an impression prevailed not many years ago that a small-sized man had no business trying to play ball, and the remark was frequently heard regarding some new aspirant for fame on the diamond: "He plays well, but he's too small." This has all changed, and to-day the majority of baseball players are short, stout, and even squatty. No matter of fact is the Cleveland team that it travels around the country weighted down with the nickname of "Dumplings." Second Baseman Childs is a veritable human dumpling, and, with the exception of Young and Zimmer, the team is composed of short, stocky men.

Ever since baseball has been played, the opinion has been held that a tall man on first base was an absolute necessity. His ability to reach high for thrown balls was the chief ground for the claim, and so up to the present time a tall man is usually found on first base. The theory that a six-footer is an absolute necessity on first base has, however, incurred a rude shock as a result of the work in that position of Virtue, the Cleveland first baseman. His play has been phenomenal, both on low and high thrown balls, and yet he is barely five feet nine inches tall. As a matter of fact, Virtue's work has given rise to the belief that a man of his build is far more valuable as a baseman than one of gigantic proportions, for the reason that the larger man is necessarily unwieldy, and while he may reach somewhat higher, he cannot handle low-thrown balls so well as the facility of the shorter and more active player.

The tall first baseman usually possesses a quality which the shorter man lacks, and that is ability to hit the ball with vigor and frequency; and where this quality of so pronounced as in the case of Dan Brouthers, the failing in the matter of fielding can be overlooked. Where a big first baseman does not hit hard and often, his presence on first base is less to be desired than that of an expert fielder and fast hitter like Virtue. Occasionally there is combined in a first baseman the ability both to field superbly and bat hard. Examples of this sort are shown in Beckley and Anson, who play all around most other first basemen.

An exception to the general rule of short players is found in the New York team, which, owing to the height and size of the players, is easily entitled to the name of "Giants." The Detroit team of 1887 was also an example of large men on the ball field. The latter, however, did not depend so much for success on field work as on the ability of the players to "ally" the ball. They were experts in that branch of the game. On the contrary, the New Yorks, while nearly all large of stature, include in their membership a number of extremely fine fielders.

While as a rule the first baseman are tall, the remainder of the infield in most teams is guarded by small men. The pennant-winning ball is that the progress of the game requires increased activity in those positions. A short man can get his hands to the ground quicker than a tall one, and appears to be able to move more rapidly. One of these "dumpling" infielders will make a dash at an apparently safely hit ball, manage to get close to it with his hands, feet, or some portion of his anatomy, roll over as he is trying to grab the leather, clutch the ball as he is turning, and then by throwing before he is fairly on his feet, get the man out at first. Among the short stops, Glasscock is an exception to the rule, as he can, when so disposed, play a game that will surprise even the "dumpling" wonders. Among the short, stocky short stops may be mentioned Long, Cooney, McKean, and Shugart, while of the second basemen, Richardson, Quinn, Myers, Ward, and Collins are examples. Fogarty, of medium height and angular, while Bierbauer and McPhee are of medium height and trimly built.

The short stocky man is also invading the outfield, where he seems to do quite as well as close to the diamond. Hamilton, Griffin, Davis, Brodie, Holliday, Ryan are all examples. In the case of Hamilton, a sensational outfielder, no one would suppose to look at him that he could get over the ground with any speed. Not over five feet seven inches tall, he is very stocky, and has a particularly large calf. He looks like anything but a sprinter, but he skims the earth like a gale of wind, and seldom lets a game go by without a phenomenal catch. In addition he is a strong, steady batsman, and stands at the head of the League hitters.

Almost a counterpart of Hamilton is Griffin of Brooklyn. His strength resembles Hamilton in looks and also in play. Both men are base runners of the first class.

That the short man is in the field to stay appears to be certain, and while the little chap does not present so imposing an appearance when marching upon the field as does his tall brother, it cannot be denied that the former gives a very satisfactory exhibition of the national game.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN PUTS UP.

$2,500 as a Forfeit to Fight Slavin for the Championship of the World.

On November 10 Charley Johnson, the well-known sporting man of Brooklyn, N. Y., called at the office of the New York Herald, and deposited $2,500, on behalf of John L. Sullivan as a forfeit for a match between John L. and Frank Slavin the Australian, for the championship of the world. The fight to take place either in September or the early part of October, 1892. Mr. Johnson says that Sullivan will fight Slavin under Queensberry rules to a finish, the winner to take all the money

The Volunteer's Rival.

As near as one can now judge, yacht racing next year will be among 90-foot schooners, the 46 and 30 footers, though there may be several 53-footers on the water. The Volunteer will have a new rival in the Gardner 90-footer. In her lateral plan or under-water profile she will show a shape not unlike the Gloriana. She will draw not far from 13 feet of water, and is just under 23 feet extreme beam. She will have long overhangs, and, like the Gloriana, will not have what might be called a graceful-looking bow.

MUSICAL FANCIES.

As a medical agency music has in times past been much in request. At the present day in semi-civilized countries where it is unanimously believed that sickness is produced by the malignant influence of evil spirits, the usual method of driving these away is by music. In Burmah, when severe illness of any kind has baffled all human skill, it is customary to abandon all further medical treatment, the patient's complaint being supposed to be caused by an evil spirit, which must be driven away before any chance of recovery can be expected. This is accomplished by means of music, during the performance of which certain mystic rites are observed.

But apart from the idea of demoniacal possession as the cause of disease, music has from early times been in repute. Pythagoras and Xenocrates cured maniacs by melodious sounds; and, coming down to modern times, music as a cure for insanity is alluded to by Shakespeare in "Richard II" (Act V, scene 5), where the king says:

This music mads me, let it sound no more,
For though it help madmen to their wits.

In me it seems it will make wise men mad.

Burton, also, in his "Anatomy of Melancholy" has given an account of the medical qualities of music, telling us that "besides that power it hath to expel many other diseases, it is a remedy against despair and melancholy, and will drive away the devil himself." Indeed, music may be said to form an interesting and important chapter in the history of medicine of bygone years, numerous remedies from its effects being recorded in medical and other works.

M. Burette was of opinion that music has the power of affecting the whole nervous system "so as to give a temporary relief in certain diseases," and Jacques Bonnet tells how on one occasion he was entertained by a friend, then in the service of the Prince of Orange, with the performance of three first rate musicians. This was the remedy, he informed him, which his master employed to get rid of melancholy whenever therewith oppressed.

Jean Ingelow's Poem "Divided."

Miss Jean Ingelow, in a letter recently published, tells the history of her well known poem "Divided." She says: "I wrote that nearly thirty years ago. My mother (newly a widow) took a house in the country for a few weeks, near Ongar, about a mile from where our friends the Isaac Taylors then lived. Passing one day through a field between the two houses I saw a little brook. We paused for some reason on its brink, being all on one side of it. It was too wide to be crossed, and we did not want to cross; but in imagination I followed it up to its source. It was a cause for division of interest, I suppose, that we did not be; and I naturally appeared to perceive the two children at the source, and how it would divide them as they followed it. It was a symbol of those events in human life which naturally and inevitably divide. That really is all of the poem. It had only to be set down in words, and what little art there is in it is mainly with in the first few words; for an "empty sky" is always to my imagination as solemn as it is beautiful, and the beginning does not satisfy my notions unless in a way that

A GRASSHOPPER'S EARS.

A Funny State of Affairs Discovered by Modern Naturalists.

Here is a funny state of affairs. A grasshopper has its ears in its forelegs! Supposing one of your friends had an ear on each of his arms, between the wrist and elbow, would you not think it a very queer place? Yet this is just where the ears are situated in crickets and grasshoppers, tells a writer in St. Nicholas.

PART OF LEG OF GRASSHOPPER SHOWING EAR.

On the tibia of their forelegs may be seen a bright, shiny spot, oval in form, which has been found to be a true ear. Old naturalists supposed these strange structures helped in some way to intensify the pene trating, chirping sounds of crickets. No one for a moment thought they might be ears, and I don't much wonder at it. However, Sir John Lubbock and other modern naturalists have decided that crickets, bees, ants and other little animals shall not keep their sense organs a secret from us any longer; and although these are often in the least suspected places, still by careful experiments they are sure to be discovered, as was the cricket's ear. Some grasshoppers have no ears in their legs, and as a rule these cannot sing.

While on the subject of ears I have something else to tell you. There is a certain member of the crustacean family whose two ears would give you much trouble to find; for where do you suppose they are? In one of the segments of its tail!

The part of the leg of a grasshopper showing the ear in the illustration is, of course, greatly magnified.

A Chicken Story.

Very tame hens frequently show a desire to talk in their way, and it is often possible to make out their meaning. "One day a Cochin hen," tells a chicken fancier in Golden Days, "came and stood in front of me, looked me full in the face and compressed loudly of something I could not translate further. Patient investigation revealed that one end of her perch had slipped down, and she. Buff had no idea of sleeping on an inclined plane. Another time a nervous little Leghorn met me at the henhouse door, fairly screaming and jumping with excitement. I understood from the cackle which finished each sentence that she had been disturbed on her nest. I did not wonder at her new powers of cackling when I found the nest occupied by a cat and three small kittens. When the chickens first begin to move in the eggs, the soften hatching, the mother hen sings to them a low, cooing song, very sweet and never heard at any other time. A friend tells me that her canary

"IT IS IT!"

When Tommy Brown came home from school
A frown was on his brow;
His mother said, "What's he appened, Tom?
What is the matter now?"
Said Tommy, with a darker scowl,
"I wish that you could see
The way the other children act!
They're bad as bad can be!

"They push and pull and tear my clothes,
And make a horrid noise;
They fight at noon time, and the girls
Are worser than the boys!
They plague me so I cannot learn;
It is no comfort to be stern!"
There's just one good one in the school,
And that one, it is I!"

Said Mrs. Brown, "Oh, dear! Oh, dear!
Now, I have heard them say
That all the other children talk
In just that very way.
And such, if anything goes wrong.
When questioned, will reply,
'There's just one good one in the school,
And that one, it is I.'"

A Lemon Party.

"Bring a lemon" is a puzzling addition to an invitation which is printed on lemon hued paper. You, however, carry a lemon to the party as you were bid. After all the guests have piled up their golden fruit the lemons are cut and the seeds counted, and the owner of the lemon containing the largest number of seeds is the prize winner, while the luckless individual whose lemon is seedless, or nearly so, gets a large tin or leather medal. The prize is usually some inexpensive but pretty trifle, such as a pocket pincushion, a collar button, a silver brooch or a paper cutter. The cut ribbon for me to make a pitcher of delicious lemonade, which is served with the usual refreshments of a party.

BREVITIES.

—The underbrush on the mountains was afire again last night.

—Mr. Dodworth's dancing class will hold its first meeting, Tuesday, Nov. 25th.

—Mayor Rankin has been re-nominated for office by the Republicans of Elizabeth.

—Wetumpka Lodge 3401, Knights of Honor will meet Thursday evening, Nov. 19, 1891.

—A disgraceful fight took place on Somerset street last evening. No arrests were made.

—Commencing this evening the Scott Printing Press Works will run nights, owing to a rush for orders.

—The Crescent League bowling team were defeated by sixty pins in the game with the Ivanhoes, not six as reported.

—Engine No. 36 broke a connecting rod near the Scott Press Works Saturday morning. Travel was delayed about half an hour.

—Policeman McCue yesterday arrested a colored man from New Brunswick for fast driving. He will be given a trial next Saturday morning.

—The First Church of Christ will hold Gospel meetings every evening this week at Vanderbeek's hall, Park avenue. All are invited to attend.

—The fences in front of the residences on one side of Grove street, from the bridge to Mercer avenue, have disappeared. The change is inviting.

—A social meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. will be held to-morrow evening. A musical and literary programme will be provided.

—A new corps of the Salvation Army was opened at Summit yesterday. Mr. Belcher of this city took part in the exercises. Captain Russ is in command.

—The Rev. George Bowers of Mt. Bethel and the Rev. Nicholas Bowers of Stirling addressed the congregation at the Mary E. Wilson Memorial chapel last evening.

—The members of Goodwill Lodge, No. 102, Knights of Pythias of Scotch Plains, are arranging for an entertainment to be given in their lodge room Thanksgiving eve.

—Young men can join to-night the Y. M. C. A. classes in mechanical drawing and book-keeping. Fifty different students are already enrolled in these classes alone.

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Warren Mission chapel will hold a meeting in the parlors of the chapel to-morrow evening at eight o'clock.

—A meeting of the Young Men's Republican club will be held to-night at Republican Headquarters for the purpose of planning active work in the approaching municipal campaign.

—Saturday in the report of the borough Council meeting, the types made to say two fire department bonds amounting to four hundred dollars would be due next month. It should have read two fire department bonds amounting to $1,000.

—While ringing an alarm of fire from the bell of Warren Engine Company last evening, the rope broke. Burning brush on the mountain top gave the fire laddies a needless run to Westerveit avenue, from which point they returned to their house.

—The "Combine" has held more meetings and done less business for the good of Plainfield than any council in the history of the city, and more mischief than all previous councils combined. Previous councils have been composed of men of honor.

—The next of the series of Thursday evening popular talks at the Y. M. C. A. rooms will be given by Mr. George A. Newman of Orange who will describe a trip to Japan. All men whether members of the association or not are invited to be present.

—To-night at eight o'clock, the Bible Normal class, will meet in the First Baptist church, and any one in the city interested in Bible study is cordially invited to be present, either as visitors or members. Subject this evening, "The analysis of the Book of Genesis," continued.

—No more board walks ought to be allowed put down in the borough, particularly when laid lengthwise of the walk. One is in constant danger, in the latter case, from splinters running into the foot, and many accidents are reported. It is high time legal steps be taken to abate the nuisance.

A BOY MISSING.

Anxious Parents Search for Him Without Success.

Sunday morning, Nov. 1, Walter D. Voorhees, who was sixteen years old last July, the eldest son of Hiram K. Voorhees, of No. 40 Dunt street, disappeared from home and has not been seen since. He did not give his parents any intimation of his intention, and, as everything was very pleasant at home, they are unable to account for his strange behaviour and are very much worried.

He told a boy friend that in case he was not home Sunday afternoon he would not see him again soon as he was going to Newark. That city has been searched since, but no trace of the missing boy has been found, and the search has been so thorough that the parents are now satisfied he is not there.

He is about five feet six inches tall, has blue eyes, dark hair, and is slim, weighing about 120 lbs. He has two scars on the palm of his right hand at the thumb joint and near the wrist. One was made from a knife, and the other is from a wound received last July while celebrating the "Fourth." This was caused by the premature discharge of a revolver he held in his hand, the cartridge passing completely through the hand between the thumb and forefinger, leaving a scar after healing.

He wore a dark cheviot sacque coat, cheviot trousers, a Belmar cap with a crescent on it, and had congress gaiters.

The parents fear that the boy has met with some accident and hope all publicity possible will be given this matter to help them find him.

They say he only left school last Summer, and has never before been away from home.

A WOULD-BE ASSASSIN.

Two Shots Fired at a Passing Vehicle Last Night.

Last evening Mr. S. F. Randolph of this city with some friends went out for a drive. When returning two shots were fired at the occupants of the wagon from behind some bushes in the vicinity of Netherwood. Mr. Randolph reported the matter to Policeman Predrickson and that officer in company with Policeman Lynch went to Netherwood in search of the would-be assassin. The officers searched every bush and piece of woodland in that vicinity but could find no trace of him. Fortunately the bullets did not strike the occupants of the carriage.

It is thought that the intention of the fellow was robbery.

Injured on the Rail.

Saturday was the busiest day of the Elizabeth Hospital since its establishment, and Dr. Montfort and his assistants were kept active attending to the unusual influx of patients. Five surgical and one medical case were admitted.

John Kelleher, a youth of sixteen, was run over by a freight train Saturday morning and both legs were crushed. He was taken to the hospital, where he died in a few hours.

Timothy Houlihan, a young brakeman in the Central Railroad yard at Elizabethport, slipped and fell while making a coupling Saturday afternoon, and his left arm was crushed. It was amputated below the elbow.

A Lamp Explosion.

At about half-past six o'clock Saturday evening an alarm of fire was sounded from box 13, situated on Park avenue at the intersection of North avenue. The department responded. The fire was in Herbst's new store on North avenue, and was caused by a kerosene lamp exploding in the residence of Mrs. Cross. The damage was slight.

While responding to the alarm of fire Saturday evening the horse used in drawing Alert hose carriage became contrary at the corner of Madison avenue and Second street, and succeeded in landing the carriage upon the sidewalk.

A Bicyclist Injured.

A visiting bicyclist met with a painful accident yesterday afternoon. He was riding along East Front street and when near Schwed Bros., clothing store his wheel, which was a high one, collided with a carriage belonging to Mr. Richard Boyce of Somerset street, North Plainfield. The bicyclist was thrown off and his head struck the iron tire of the wagon wheel, painfully injuring his forehead. His wounds were dressed at a nearby drug store and he proceeded on his way.

A "Stag" Party.

The members of the Crescent league enjoyed a "stag" party at their club house Saturday evening. During the evening the three prizes were presented to Messrs. Frederick Green, Charles Lyon and Charles Van Winkle, the winners of the pool contest. The first prize was a pair of opera glasses, the second a scarf pin and the third a match safe. All present had a most enjoyable time.

Leal's Defeated.

Saturday afternoon Leal's foot ball team went to New Brunswick and played a game of foot ball with a team from Rutgers' Grammar school. Although the game was very exciting, the Plainfield boys were defeated by a score of 18 to 6.

—A horse belonging to Lewis Coddington fell on West Front street Saturday afternoon and one of the arteries of the leg was badly cut by coming in contact with a stone. A veterinary physician dressed the wound.

UNION COUNTY COURT.

Prisoners Sentenced at the Session Saturday Morning.

The Union county court convened at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, Judges McCormick, Wiley and Hyer on the bench.

Prosecutor Marsh informed the court that he held a writ showing that the motion for a new trial in the case of Jennie Wiley and Samuel Beekman had been dismissed by the Court of Errors, instructing the Court of General Quarter Sessions to proceed according to law. He asked that the two prisoners be resentenced, whereupon the court ordered that they be brought up.

Turning to Jennie Wiley the court said the sentence of the court was that she be confined in State prison for the term of ten years. The same sentence was passed on Beekman.

On being removed from the room Jennie Wiley turned deathly pale, staggered and would have fallen had it not been that she was caught by the constables removing her

Charles Conrad, charged with assault, was sentenced to pay a fine of $10.

James B. Finelan, convicted of assault on William McAdams, was sentenced to six months in jail, less one day.

Harry Johnson, charge, larceny of $3; two months in jail.

Valacia Bagatello, assault; thirty days in jail.

Frederick Austin, charge, assault; sentence thirty days in jail.

On motion of Prosecutor Marsh the trial of Daniel and Harry Fletcher, charged with larceny, which had been set down for to-day, was postponed for one week.

Mr. Voorhees, counsel for Theodore Blauvelt and Herman Zilinska of Newark, convicted of breaking, entering and stealing, asked that sentence in their case be deferred one week. Granted.

Something More to Remember at This Time.

That our readers may see for themselves something of how costly the combine has been to the city we give the record of moneys called for government every year since the city was first organized under its charter. This is republished from THE NEWS of last August.

It will be observed that there is an enormous increase in the expenses of government for the past two years. The city in that time received far city increased revenues from license fees by the increased number of liquor saloons, which is not included in the above, and amounting to round numbers to $111,000 each year

The excuse will of course be made that the extra expense was largely used for the County Roads. This, however, was more than met by License fees which the city did not have in 1889, when the rate was but $2.15, yielding $122,810.47 against the rate of $2.24 under "combine" wastefulness, taking $137,192.-83, or $14,382.36 more than before the days of the combine. But this is not all, as will be seen by the following from THE NEWS of last September:

Now the above is nearly $14,000 more in excess of amounts obtained from the same source in previous years.

The Republicans dealt as leniently as possible with those who were not dishonestly trying to shirk their share of public burdens, but who were really unfortunate and were trying to do the best they could.

But the "combine" required money, money, money! even though it squeezed the very life-blood out of the poor unfortunates struggling along.

When they have been kicked out of the offices they have used to bring so much disgrace upon the city, as they will be within a few weeks, perhaps an investigation may reveal how the money has been squandered, but not before.

Boys' Club Notes.

The average attendance last week was 71 per evening; the largest being 90 and the smallest 57. Number of visitors was 39. Six boys joined the Club during the week, total membership 430.

Our next entertainment will take place on Wednesday evening, Nov. 25. All are invited to attend. We shall have an extra fine programme on that evening.

Edwards Zouaves meet for drill on Wednesday evening at 6.30. Full attendance desired.

REFORM CLUB MEETING.

Thirty-three Signers to the Pledge Secured.

Reform Hall was crowded last evening to listen to that eminent temperance lecturer, Joe English. His twenty years experience as a shawman (for all that term implies) has taught him how to reach the heart of the drinking man, as was shown by the thirty-three signatures to the pledge roll. The Rev. Dr. Honeyman conducted the devotional exercises. President Spencer presided and said that the Sunday night meetings would be continued, and thought that a community which could afford over twenty legalized hotels and saloons, ought to support one Reform Club. First Vice-President Williams also made a short address in which he pointed out the duty of the voters of the city at the coming municipal election.

Mayor Gilbert, ex-Mayor Harper, Judge Codington, ex-Councilman Marsh, Vice, President Williams, Secretary Ayers, Messrs. Opdyke, Angleman, Dobbins, Lanphear and others occupied seats on the platform.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Daniel Nolan of Yonkers, N. Y., visited his old home in North Plainfield yesterday.

Mr. William VanDeventer is confined to his home on West Front street with pneumonia.

Mayor Gilbert was present at the Gospel temperance meeting at Reform Hall last evening.

Mr. H. R. Munger gave one of his interesting talks at the Mt. Pleasant school house last evening.

Mr. Walter Bass, formerly of this city, but now of New York, spent Sunday with his parents on West Eighth street.

Mr. G. M. Fletcher has returned to his home on West Fourth street from a two months' business trip in the West.

Mr. Theodore F. Miller has accepted the nomination for the councilmanic in the Third Ward on the Citizens' Ticket.

Mr. Richard Totten, formerly of this city, but now of Newark, spent Saturday night and yesterday with his mother in North Plainfield.

Miss Florence, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abram King, is dangerously ill at her home on Chatham street, North Plainfield.

Rev. C. B. Mitchell will preach a sermon before Franklin Council, 41, Jr. O. U. A. M. next Sunday evening in the Methodist Episcopal church.

Daniel Berdell and Alexander Roberts of the Mercury wheelmen of Elizabeth, visited ex-Governor G. H. Rockafellow of West Third street yesterday morning.

Mrs. Elizabeth Forbes, wife of James Forbes, died at her home on West Fifth street yesterday. The funeral will take place from her late residencenext Wednesday afternoon at 2.15 o'clock.

The Rev. Hobart Clark, the pastor of the Unitarian church of this city, preached in Orange yesterday. The Rev. Edward Hale of that city occupied the pulpit of the First Unitarian church here.

Ralph Bilyeu, at one time a resident of North Plainfield, and who several years ago went to Portland from here to California, where he entered into newspaper life, has returned to the former State.

The funeral of the late James Farley took place from his late home on West Front street yesterday afternoon at two o'clock and from St. Mary's church at half-past two. Interment was made in St. Mary's cemetery.

Miss Annie Titsworth, daughter of Mr. Rudolph Titsworth, died at her home on West Seventh street yesterday morning, after a short illness. Deceased was thirty years of age. The funeral will take place from her late residence Wednesday afternoon at 3.45 o'clock.

In referring to the thirteenth entertainment of the Epworth League of Madison the Madison Eagle refers as follows to a young lady from this city who took part in the entertainment: "Miss Alice O. Smith, of Plainfield, N. J., the pianist, was received with general enthusiasm. The arrangement from Gounod's Faust, by Franz Liszt, is an extremely brilliant one, involving many difficult passages of touch and technique, and it was generally admitted that she acquitted herself with great credit. As Miss Smith has given her attention to the study of music, it is safe to predict that she has a remarkably successful and bright future before her in the music world. In the other numbers, Miss Smith displayed that force, clearness and brilliancy in exaction which characterizes her playing and gives a charm to her entertainments."

—The city Common Council will meet in adjourned session this evening.

DEATHS

TITSWORTH—Entered into rest November 15, 1891, Anne E., daughter of Rudolph M. and the late Sarah Elizabeth Titsworth, in her 33d year.

Services from her late home, No. 39 West Seventh street, on Wednesday, November 18, at 2.45 p. m. 16-3-1*

FORBES—In this city, November 16, Elizabeth E., wife of James B. Forbes, aged 30 years, 5 months, 5 days.

Funeral services from her late residence, No. 5 West Fifth street, Wednesday, November 18, at 2.15 p. m. 16-3-1*

NEW ROLLING STOCK.

The Central Will Try the Compound Cylinder Locomotive.

The New Jersey Central Railroad is making additions to its rolling stock. It is about to order two new freight locomotives from the Rogers Locomotive Works, similar to those built by the Baldwin Locomotive Works. These engines will have three pairs of driving wheels. The engines now in use have 56-inch wheels. The new engines will have speed as well as power.

Orders will also be placed with the Baldwin works for a four-cylinder freight locomotive and one compound four-cylinder passenger locomotive, with four more compound engines to follow, if the compound engine proves a success. These passenger engines will be of the latest and best mechanical construction, having, if built on the compound system, 20x24 inch cylinder and 78-inch driving wheels.

When these engines are put on the road, it is expected that the running time between New York and Philadelphia will be reduced to something less than two hours, the present running time.

The Company is also about closing a contract for twenty-five new passenger coaches of the latest style, equipped with modern conveniences, heated with steam and lighted by the Pintsch gas system.

Pen Sketches from Life.

Friday a short, muscular office boy, after diligently hammering at a packing box on the curb stone in front of a merchant's store, near the heart of the city, took off the top, and, cheerily whistling, proceeded to carry the contents of the box into the store.

He all but had finished, and was leaning far over the edge of the box, groping around in the "excelsior" for stray pieces of goods, when a walking "awful example" turned the corner and wandered aimlessly by.

Against a tree, a foot or so from the box, stood a thin pine board, a part of the cover.

The bleak-eyed tramp just reached that when the boy discovered a bundle in the corner of the box and stretched to the utmost to reach it. His toes were just touching the ground. His short jacket exposed a breadth of well-worn, striped cloth, a hole and a patch. The patch was right where it would do service, and was light plaid.

The "man of leisure" sighed, picked up the board, swung it up, aimed at the patch—and hit it.

"We-ew-o-oh!" came muffled from the interior of the box, as the boy's toes left the ground. A moment's scrambling and he righted himself and stood up, redfaced and startled. What had happened? Against the tree leaned the light pine board, as he had left it. While the only living thing near was a tramp walking slowly away, had block away. Much mystified he wonderingly rubbed the patch.

This account may enlighten him somewhat.

—The residents of New Market are clamoring for electric street lights.

—John Layhe of North Plainfield has enlisted in the United States Navy.

—An interesting service of song was held in the First Presbyterian church last evening.

—The lecture which was to have been given at the seminary to-morrow has been postponed indefinitely.

—The funeral of the late Rev. John Cary, colored, took place from his late residence yesterday afternoon.

—The members of the Crescent league bowling team will roll a game with the Elizabeth Athletic Club's team on the alleys in this city to-morrow evening.

—The boys of the Holy Cross choir had a very enjoyable hounds chase Saturday afternoon. The course was six miles. Masters Herbert Scutt and Fred Tallamy came in ahead.

—At about eleven o'clock, Saturday evening, a tool house on the property of Mr. J. T. Vail on East Second street, was discovered to be on fire. The flames were extinguished before much damage resulted.

—Loza Munns, who was caught stealing cabbage from John H. Thys' garden at Scotch Plains Thursday night pleaded guilty at the Union county court Saturday morning and was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail.

—Dr. Tomlinson on Saturday took a tumor weighing over one pound from the neck of Mrs. Samuel Everett, formerly of this city but now of Orange. The operation, which was very successful was performed at the residence of Mrs. Everett's daughter on Duer street, North Plainfield.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Farming a Century Hence.

It will be the most fashionable occupation of the time a century hence, will farming, according to the picture drawn by C. S. Plumb in the New England Magazine. Rich men's sons will rush into it as they now do into the learned professions, rich men themselves will turn to it as they now turn to fancy steam yachts and fast horses. It will be the fad. Children will cry for it. The man most looked up to in the community—the handsomest, swellest, brainiest and most influential citizen of affairs generally—will be he to whom will be the farmer. Agriculturists will have nearly all the lawmaking to do, because this is an agricultural country.

A few of the minor improvements are to be noted as follows: Five acreage strawberries will make a quart. The same will be true of blackberries, gooseberries and raspberries, and the seeds will have all been educated out of them. Ears and manners in two or three generations naturally. Cows of the future will have horns. Jerseys will give pure cream. Holsteins will give milk. All the roads of the country will be asphalt pavements. Horses will be needed no longer except for racing and for their flesh, which will be a table delicacy. Wagons will have pneumatic tire bicycle wheels and will be run by electricity. They will be noiseless when they fly along the roads.

Nobody has any farm larger than fifty acres any more, and most of them are ten acres in size in the year 2000. Wheat produces always fifty bushels to the acre, corn, 200. The soils and farm products have been so carefully analyzed that the agriculturist knows exactly what kind of fertilizer to feed the ground to produce a given vegetable growth, whatever it is. Farmers are college graduates and there is an agricultural experiment station in every county. Machinery does all the work. Pneumatic tubes underground connect house and barn, so that conversation can be carried on between them. Moreover, the insect pests which do damage to crops are rapidly in course of extermination by means of the cultivation of cereals to destroy them. "Flies have come like locusts," as it says, "and eat them up. Each farmer has his insecticide breeding pen, in which he cultivates carefully the insects that devour those which are inimical to his fruit and grain. The population numbers 500,000,000 in the year 2000, and people use an immense quantity of dairy foods, deeming them most healthful. Hens lay but 365 eggs in a year as the cows do demand, and milking, like all the other hard work, is done by machinery.

Farmers raise all the sugar we need, much of it from the sugar beet, at a cost of one cent a pound. Electricity plays a part of immeasurable importance in the rural life of the year 2000. It cuts grain, mows away hay and plows. Electric shovels and hoes do work like miracles. Whatever on the farm is hard or dirty to do, that this obedient servant of mankind steps in and accomplishes with neatness and celerity. Every farmhouse has an electric plant. Fruits and vegetables of superior kinds are grown by electricity. But it is in the household that this magician performs its greatest marvels. It does everything, and farmers' wives dwell in a sort of earthly paradise. With prophetic eye our author sees this vision:

> In the house the rooms are lighted by electricity; doors and windows are opened and closed by means of an electric button, minor extractions are operated by electric power, an inventor's touch but with a handle, worked by a motor, and the most laborious work requiring simply the guidance of hand power, dish washing machines are run by electricity, lights are turned on and off by the touch of a button, the houses can not catch fire, cooking is combined in all electric stoves, and all clothing is washed and dried by electricity. Every farm household runs by electricity. As a result of the universal use of electricity on the farm, the average life of the farmer's wife in the twenty-first century is the longest period of the women in any country on earth where farmers' wives, finding their work the smallest part of their lives from any study to them. In fact, no women in America had greater enjoyment in their homes than these farmers' wives.

Miss Nellie Wilson is an Arkansas girl who has just gone to Australia to show her antipodes what kind of people we grow in a free country. If the antipodeans are not paralyzed with admiration not unmingled with envy, this mailing will paralyze them. Miss Wilson is 6 feet 2½ inches high. She was a farmer's daughter, and could pitch hay as fast as three men could move it. There never was a horse she could not break, or even a mule. Once when a mule offended her, she quietly picked him up under her arm and set him gently over a rail fence. What a woman that would be to train a husband!

A national bank failing with liabilities of $6,000,000 and "irregularities" dating back several years looks queer for somebody, bank inspectors or somebody else. "Irregularities" appears to be the fashionable word now for what used to be called by a much more expressive Saxon term. Gentlemen at present boarding in hotels belonging to the state achieved irregularities in various directions.

It is interesting to know that the highest authority of the Catholic church, at Rome itself, has at length settled the Connecticut marriage case and pronounced a marriage ceremony performed by a Methodist preacher to be binding and valid.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE

An Army of Farmers Meet at Indianapolis.

THE THIRD PARTY MOVEMENT.

Upon This Convention May Rest the Fate of the People's Party and the Result of the Presidential Contest in 1892. Livingston for the Presidency.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 16.—The great convention of the National Farmers' Alliance opened its session here today with an army of delegates in attendance from all over the Union. The gathering is one fraught with interest to both the great political parties. This meeting of the supreme council will be of immense importance, because much light will be cast upon the history of the Alliance, because new officers will be chosen to represent its present intentions, and because the lines of its future policy—that policy which shall guide its representatives in the People's party convention at Washington next February—will be laid down.

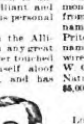
L. L. POLK.

The Ocala Platform.

A year ago the supreme council met at Ocala, Fla., and constructed the platform which has since become famous. Its strength will be tested at the coming meeting.

A president may be chosen in place of Colonel L. L. Polk of North Carolina; a vice president in place of Ben Clover, of Kansas; a secretary in place of J. H. Turner, of Georgia, and a treasurer to succeed J. F. Tillman, of Tennessee. Colonel Polk will retire. He has held the office for two years, and is not expected to seek a third term. His place is almost sure to be filled by L. F. Livingston, president of the Georgia Alliance, and member of congress from that state. Livingston is undoubtedly one of the most brilliant and cultivated men in the order. His personal record is excellent.

There have been scandals in the Alliance as there must always be in any great organization, but they have never touched Livingston. He has held himself aloof from every doubtful project, and has strengthened his hold upon the farmers by a steady career. His person and manner he gives one a slight suggestion of Lincoln. As President of the Alliance he will very likely be re-elected. Kansas is a strongheld of the Alliance, and will certainly demand recognition. Regarding Tillman and Turner it is safe to say that they will remain on the executive committee. Tillman, Turner and Macune will remain on the committee in any event, but Polk and Clover will not unless re-elected.



SENATOR PEFFER.

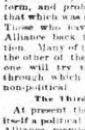
To Adopt a Platform.

The most important work in the convention will be over the adoption of a platform. That which was made at Ocala is only a year old, but there are many who think it already needs repairs. The delegates will be divided into three classes.

First—Those who expect something from one or the other of the old political parties. They will make their fight for a conservative platform. Second—Those who have nothing to expect from the old parties. They will urge a radical platform, and probably a strict adherence to that which was made a year ago. Third—Those who have been trying to hold the Alliance back from definite political action. Many of these will break to one or the other of the former classes, but some one will try to bring a resolution go through which shall make the Alliance non-political.

The Third Party Movement.

At present the Alliance does not call itself a political party. Many of the Alliance members are also members of the Peoples party. H. F. Taubeneck, chairman of the national committee of the Peoples party, and Colonel Ben Terrell, the labor leader are here. Some certain of the leaders who act in the interests of the Democratic party and others who look out for the Republican interests will be present in favor of the policemen if they are too much, said Jerry Simpson, treasury blank omitted and they are also interested in the utterance which may be made by the Alliance. Friends of Kansas and Nebraska will be used to maintain the Alliance doctrine as announced at Ocala.



JERRY SIMPSON.

At last year's session a resolution was adopted requiring the different state alliances to elect delegates to the meeting in Washington in February next. It is expected that a majority of these will be there. It is also understood that the next meeting shall be held for a convention to nominate candidates for 1892.

The Presidency in 1892.

The third party issues now have an idea that their possible candidate for '92 should be a farmer. The Alliance men are particularly strong in Kansas, and expect to bring a man from that section to Indiana, possibly from the people's party ranks. Ex-Governor Lewelling is one of the men who has been mentioned in connection with the presidency. His ideas would be a big plank in the platform. His disposition has led to some embarrassment of politics, and as he has given any amount of trouble to the old party politicians who have seen an advantage in his name. It is more than probable that he would decline a place in nomination.

At the convention here the Kansas is represented by Jerry Simpson, John Davis, Ben Clover, F. McLellen and J. P. Limbaugher. Nebraska has some good, hard fighters on the floor. Georgia has Livingston and Georgia Northen among its strong men. From Texas have come W. R. Skaggs and Jerry Dean. The sentiment in Texas is strongly against a third party movement. So in Georgia the rank and file are against it. Only the party fighters, Governor Northen was fought against everywhere he went. So the Alliance is not to any political party during the next year in Georgia, and he is in this convention prepared to do the same thing.

Governor Buchanan, of Tennessee, and J. H. McDowell, president of the State Alliance, are also here. So is Treasurer Tillman, and he will be a strong factor.

Prince George Very Ill.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—Prince George of Wales is very ill with enteric fever.

TO DYNAMITE THE CLOUDS.

The Rainmakers Will Try to Avert New York's Water Famine.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The rainmakers are to come east and try their bombshells on the clouds in the neighborhood of New York. The water famine in the metropolis has become so alarming that The World has offered to pay General Dyrenforth all expenses if he can arrange to repeat his experiments at some point in the Croton water shed within the first days of the present week. The government rainmaker has accepted the proposition. General Dyrenforth's theory is that the explosion of dynamite and other high explosives in the upper strata of the atmosphere will produce copious rains.

General Dyrenforth says he will undertake the matter in perfect good faith, but fears that a week or ten days must be required to prepare the apparatus. For example, he will require twenty-five balloons. He has five or six now at St. Louis, but they will require repairing. Twenty new ones must be made.

In the event of completing all the experiments the expense will approximate $5,000.

The enterprise will be conducted on a more expensive scale than in Texas, because General Dyrenforth feels he has wondrous importance and responsibility of this particular undertaking and desires to insure complete success.

General Dyrenforth will secure ten artillerymen from Fort Hamilton or Governor's island. The experiment will be made at ten stations on the Croton watershed simultaneously. The daily consumption of the city is 130,000,000 gallons. The engineers say a rainfall of at least two inches within the present week only can avert the threatened famine.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

An Offer for Fitzsimmons and Pritchard, of England.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—Bob Fitzsimmons has received the following message from A. W. Cook, at Boston: "Kindly name terms on which you will meet Pritchard at the National club, London, same time." Fitzsimmons immediately wired the following reply to Captain A. W. Cook: "I will meet Pritchard at the National club for a $5,000 purse and a $5,000 side bet; require $1,000 for expenses."

The World's Strongest Man.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—An enormous crowd at the South London Palace saw the attempt of the famous strong man, Louis Cyr, to break the weight lifting record of the world. Cyr lifted a 194 pound dumbbell above his shoulder with his right hand. Then he lifted one weighing 242 pounds the same way with both hands. His third feat consisted in elevating a barrel containing 281 pounds of cement with his left hand to his shoulder. Finally, putting on a harness, he lifted a weight of 2,619

Insurgents Capture the Capital.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 16.—Porto Alegre, the capital of Rio Grande do Sul, is said to be in the hands of the Brazilian junta, which has issued a proclamation denouncing Fonseca and calling for an election of a new president. Fonseca has 20,000 men at Rio Janeiro, which is in a state of great excitement.

FASHIONS

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

THE VERY LATEST NOTES REGARDING THE FASHIONS.

Interesting Reading for the Fair Sex Gathered From Everywhere—Extravagant and Economical Dress as Seen at Home and Abroad.

A silk-warped flannel is the best choice where the purchaser desires a flannel with a mixture to prevent its shrinking. Such a flannel certainly wears longer and does not shrink under the hand of an ordinary laundress as readily as a flannel made of pure wool. Silk-warped flannels range in width from thirty to thirty-four inches, and in price from $1 to $1.10 a yard. They are especially adapted to the use of infants and little children. For practical, every-day wear a soft, warm flannel of this description is the best to order children in. In place of the white flannel skirt and white cambric skirt formerly considered necessary for all occasions. The embroidered flannels in market are worked on the selvage. The skirts made of them must be made the wrong way of the goods and do not wear so well as those made up in the right way.

DOES ITALY MEAN WAR?

Minister Porter Home and Hurrying to Washington.

GRAVE RUMORS OF TROUBLE AFOOT

Belief That While the United States Is Engaged with Chili King Humbert May Bring Up the New Orleans Lynchings Again and Demand Satisfaction.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—United States Minister Albert G. Porter, the representative of this government at the court of King Humbert, has been unexpectedly summoned to Washington to confer with the president and secretary of state on the present situation of the controversy with Italy, growing out of the New Orleans mob violence by which the Mafia murderers lost their lives. The minister arrived yesterday by the Hamburg line steamship Normannia, and proceeded on a fast express to Washington. He declined almost abruptly to tell why he was going to Washington in such haste and secrecy.

Has Italy Demanded Redress?

The hasty summons and the arrival of the minister show probably that Italy has taken advantage of the trouble between the United States and Chili to make a demand for an apology and a money indemnity for the killing of the two Mafiosi who were found by the United States marshal who investigated the case to be subjects of King Humbert. It is believed to have appeared to the Italian Prime Minister Rudini that this is an opportune time to submit such a demand—it may even be an ultimatum, inasmuch as the naval vessels of the United States are concentrating in Chilian waters.

Not a Word to Say.

"Has Rudini made a demand for indemnity or for an apology?" asked a reporter. The diplomat threw up his hands, shook his head and answered: "You see," said he, "we men in the diplomatic service are not allowed to discuss anything publicly that is pending in negotiations between nations. You must excuse me, therefore, if I decline pointedly to answer."

Nobody who has watched carefully the course of the Italian intrigue and who is familiar with the methods of Italian diplomacy, has doubted that there was to be a hereafter of some kind to the shooting down by the soldiered American citizens of subjects of King Humbert. Public attention for several weeks has been wholly engrossed by the war cloud in Chili. Therefore, the Mafia incident and the sudden recall of Baron Fava, the king's minister at Washington, have been forgotten. But it is more than likely that a week will see a revival of the Italian "scare" in a much graver form than it assumed when the diplomatic drama was being enacted in March and April.

PARSON GEORGE'S SENTENCE.

Taken to Clinton Prison to Remain Fifteen Years.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 16.—Parson George, who was found guilty of manslaughter in bringing about the death of Lottie Townsend by a criminal operation, was taken to Clinton prison today to serve his long sentence. Monday he showed no sign of reaction from the excitement of his trial. In answer to a question as to his health he answered cheerfully:

"Why, I am in first rate health. I never felt better in my life than I do this morning."

Notwithstanding the fact that he perjured himself in the most boldfaced manner he still clings to his cant. He said today that his conscience was at rest, and he freely forgave all who had wronged him. He wrote a long letter to his wife this morning, and he spent the rest of the forenoon reading the Bible and religious papers.

If the man has simply been so dazed by his trial and conviction that he really was unable to express any feeling, the officers think that he will break down when he reaches the prison. His term of fifteen years will be reduced to a little over ten years by good behavior. Mr. Fiero thinks that if George is confined that length of time he will leave the prison a blind man.

CAPTAIN HATTIE FATALLY SHOT.

Sensational Tragedy in the Salvation Army at Omaha.

OMAHA, Nov. 16.—Captain Hattie Smith, of the salvation Army band, of Oskaloosa, Ia., was shot and fatally wounded last evening at Nettie Fidler, of the same company, who immediately shot herself dead.

The northwestern division of the Salvation Army mustered here to meet Lu Marchaie Booth-Clibborn, of France, and her brother, Commissioner Ballington Booth, and the soldiers were filing out of the barracks when the tragedy occurred.

The murderess came upon her victim as she was standing on the sidewalk conversing with Captain Wallace, from Marshalltown, Ia. Without speaking she drew a revolver from beneath the folds of her dress and fired.

The two captains started to run. Miss Birdier fired again, and this time Captain Smith fell. Without waiting to see the effect of her second shot, the murderess placed the muzzle of her weapon to her right temple, pressed the trigger and sank lifeless in the gutter. The motive for the crime seems to have been a combination of jealousy and religious frenzy.

In Court for Seventeen Years.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 16.—The case of Harriet A. Birdsall against Alonzo Wheeler, which has been in the courts for seventeen years, has been settled. Judge Hall rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff, which left the defendant without a defense. Judge Hall awarded Mrs. Birdsall $5,300 and costs. The suit arose over personal property amounting to $30,000.

Big Fish in Three Rivers.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 16.—Fishermen have captured in the Ohio, Monongahela and Beaver rivers this fall 182 fish, each of which weighed more than twenty pounds. Hundreds of bass of two pounds and over have been taken in hook and line. Seventy-five arrests for illegal fishing have been made.

Smallpox in Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 16.—The two-year old child of S. G. Eaton has been reported to the Newark health board as suffering with smallpox. It is the second case in the city during the past week.

IN MEMORY OF PARNELL

Depew's Eloquent Tribute to the Great Irishman.

THE CONVERSION OF GLADSTONE.

America's Famous Orator Thinks the Grand Old Man's Change of Front on Home Rule Is the Most Momentous Event in English Politics.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Services to the memory of Charles Stewart Parnell were held last night in the Academy of Music and Hon. Chauncey M. Depew was the principal. There was hardly a prominent Irishman in the city who was not present. Delegations from the Polish societies of New York were also in attendance, while Irish-Americans from Philadelphia, Boston, New Haven, Bridgeport and other nearby cities paid tribute by their presence. Perhaps the most prominent auditor of Mr Depew's eulogy was Governor-elect McKinley, of Ohio. He was accompanied by his wife and occupied a box. In the audience, too, were many more prominent persons whose names are notable in law, politics, literature and the pulpit. All the Irish and Gaelic societies were well represented in the audience.

From Parnell's Grave.

The theatre was draped with the Stars and Stripes, over which, in heavy folds, fell clouds of purple. To the right of the stage was a large portrait in oil of the dead leader resting against a large Gaelic cross wreathed with ivy. At the base of the portrait were two wreaths, one of shamrocks, moss and ivy, the other of laurel. The first of these was presented to the Parnell memorial committee by Mrs. Margaret Horgan, wife of the sexton of Cork. The ivy of which it was partly composed was gathered near the spot in Glasnevin cemetery near O'Connell's monument. The moss was taken from the grave of Parnell and the shamrocks plucked from the hills of Cork. The second wreath was a present from the Polish societies. It was bound with the Polish colors and bore this inscription, "Poland mourns with Ireland." By 8 o'clock the house was packed. The services opened with preliminary musical exercises. Then, amid cheers, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, the orator of the evening, arrived. He spoke in part as follows:

Mr. Depew's Tribute.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—We are here to pay tribute to the memory of a man who made an indelible impress on his times, and performed inestimable services for his country. In the audience are Irishmen of all creeds and widely different views on questions affecting Ireland, who for the evening lay aside their antagonism to plant a wreath of flowers on one of the most eminent of their race. The weaknesses and the errors of great leaders are in inseparable union with the elements which affect their fortunes while living, but, when they are dead, the sum of their services to their people in their struggles for liberty are crowded with battles, persecutions, imprisonments, defeats and triumphs, concentrating in one individuality the hopes and fears, the passions and resentments of a nation for centuries, could not and without bearing behind controversies which time and opportunity alone can solve. So we have not met to discuss or settle the party differences of the hour. It is our purpose to recognize and gratefully remember the wisdom, the patriotism, the courage and the statesmanship by which Charles Stewart Parnell organized and led his countrymen to within sight of the promised land of self government.

Mr Depew said that the historian of this period could not write the chronicles of Germany without Bismarck, of France without Gambetta, of Italy without Cavour or Garibaldi, of Ireland without Parnell. After reviewing the modern history of Ireland, which was the parable of nations, peace had not brought her prosperity, and when most at rest she had suffered the most misery.

Her soil was not to blame. She was fashioned by God to be an earthly paradise. Her fertile fields invite agriculture and abundantly reward the husbandman. Her noble harbors ought to shelter prosperous commerce, and hospitably entertain the mercantile marine of the world, and its innumerable locations for the successful development of varied industries should attract capital and enterprise. It was not the fault of the Irish people. Driven from home, they have settled all over the globe, and were everywhere distinguished for industry, enterprise and thrift. They took leading positions in the professions and in business. Mr. Depew added:

Gladstone, Grattan and Parnell.

Then her condition must be due to what Mr. Gladstone had recently characterized as centuries of wrong, each every parliamentary leader in England for a half century has, under the pressure of the existence of royal commissions, or when telling the truth to undermine the party power, denounced in language as vigorous as the passionate utterances of Irish patriots.

The forms of self government without the spirit of liberty work greater injustice than absolutism. The autocrat can be forced to listen to the cry of his people, but when they are misrepresented, or not represented at all, in the federal congress they have no voice. There was no possibility of the imperial parliament hearing or knowing or caring for the wrongs or aspirations of Ireland until Parnell. He compelled parliament to hear and know and care. Parnell was the first to wage organized, and whose organized appeals for liberty have been the inspiration of the patriots of many lands and many tongues. The man who took up the burdens of his failure and crystalized them into the forces of success after the lapse of ten decades had neither eloquence nor genius, but he possessed the tireless energy, the grasp of mind and character, the power of organization which command the business senates of our day.

The Career of Parnell.

After paying a tribute to the work of Daniel O'Connell for Catholic emancipation and the Irish people, Mr. Depew spoke of the great famine and the thought of home rule which engaged the youth of Parnell. He described in pathetic language O'Connell's attempt to reach the English ear and eye. The famine, but parliament was deaf, his colleagues from Ireland were indifferent, and O'Connell died of a broken heart. At the hour when the prospect was darkest and the Irish were despairing of their cause, there appeared upon the field a champion who presented none of the external of heroism or leadership, Charles Stewart Parnell. He was cold in manner, undemonstrative, self poised, imperturbable, neither elated nor depressed, and yet he became the idol of the most impulsive of people.

Mr Depew believed Parnell welcomed adversity and gave its possessor every opportunity for distinction. His superiors in eloquence, like Sexton and Redmond; in literature, like McCarthy and O'Connor; in journalism or popular appeal, like Sullivan, or O'Brien, or Dillon or Harrington, were given the positions where they could best serve. If he had ambitions, like them for his country, they were never uttered. If he had likes or antipathies, they never stood in the way of a useful man occupying his proper place.

He Blocked the House.

Of Mr. Parnell's constitutional agitation for home rule Mr. Depew said:

He became master of the rules of the house and then used them to stop its business. With only three who stood by Parnell, he attacked six hundred and odd, entrenched in the forms, the usages and the traditions of centuries. "If measures did not come," said the leader of Ireland are granted," was his battle cry. Tories were shocked. Liberals indignant, Radicals amazed and the speaker paralyzed. Isaac Butt feared the result and withheld his support. Shaw thought the movement was not responsible, and most of the Irish members agreed with him. The undismayed and unruffled leader baffled the statesmen who had led the house of commons for generations.

Then said Mr. Gladstone, "When you show us that a majority of the members from Ireland want legislation, we are prepared to listen and act." Parnell believed that the people of Ireland were with him, but that their representatives were not. He said to the Irish people: "If you believe in me, you must be represented in parliament by members who will act with me, and who can neither be misled nor intimidated nor bought. Give your answer to Mr. Gladstone's challenge." The response has no parallel in the history of the electorate under free governments. It was, "Select your own candidates, Mr. Parnell, we will elect them." For this purpose Parnell took control and perfected the machinery of the Land League which had been organized by Michael Davitt.

An Uncrowned King in Jail.

When Parnell entered parliament at the head of 63 out of 103 members from Ireland the commons were bewildered. "I have come with the majority you demanded," he said, "with you intact." The response from Ireland to the Irish question became the foremost factor in British politics. The timeworn policy of coercion put him in Kilmainham jail, and it became not the cell of the criminal, but the palace of an uncrowned king. The ministry which imprisoned him negotiated with him as with a conqueror. He demanded, and was accorded, the settlement of arrears of rent, the amendment of the land laws, local self government and a settlement of Mr. Forster, the coercion minister.

The Conversion of Gladstone.

Continuing Mr. Depew said that Parnell was insensible to flattery and unmoved by promises. He wanted measures and not pledges.

He was cordial with the party which was at the moment most likely to adopt and pass his bills, but he severed all friendly relations when it became the potential force in the government. He made and unmade ministries. He buried the Gladstone ministry from power and defeated that of Lord Salisbury. He compelled the appointment of a commission and an appeal to the country. The conversion of Mr. Gladstone to home rule for Ireland is the most momentous event in the English politics of a generation. In the heat of battle this hero of many fields does not waver, and home rule is a desperate struggle until an Irish parliament convenes on Dublin Green. Ireland no longer fights with one arm tied and the other held back by false friends. Parnell stood then both Ireland and no longer struggles alone, her cause is the stake of one of the great parties of England, and made so by Parnell.

The Lesson of His Life.

The lesson of Parnell's life, in the opinion of the speaker, was the superiority of constitutional over revolutionary methods. Home rule appeals to Americans as an American principle. Parnell appealed to them as the grandson of Old Ironsides. Of the exiled Irishman the leader when a storm of applause greeted the final defeat of the Pigott conspiracy, Mr. Depew said: "Parnell stood there with his arms folded, a block of ice amid the general flame." After a comparison of his hero with Garibetta, Cavour and Bismarck, the orator ended thus:

The Names of McCarthyites Hissed.

As the rays of the morning sun for coming ages penetrate the shades of the cemetery of Glasnevin and glint from the tomb of O'Connell the Liberator to the monument of Parnell the Deliverer, may they illumine the hopes of a contented, happy and prosperous people.

It was a noticeable fact that the names of O'Brien, Dillon, McCarthy and O'Connor were hissed by a considerable portion of the audience.

HERE'S A YOUNG ASTOR.

John Jacob Has an Heir to His Many Millions.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Baby McKee was rudely dashed from the throne when Miss Ruth Cleveland arrived to usurp the public attention not long ago. Her dynasty was overthrown by the advent of Hon. Oelrichs, and now there is a still newer comer. Mrs. John Jacob Astor gave birth to a boy at 4 o'clock yesterday morning at her home, 350 Fifth avenue. Mrs. Astor's mother, Mrs. Willing, and Dr. Lusk were present to welcome the little stranger, but the father, who was lying in another room, was too ill with typhoid fever to be told of the event.

At last reports both the mother and the baby were doing well. A number of prominent society people, friends of the Astors, called at the house yesterday and congratulated the young mother. Mr. John Jacob Astor was married to Miss Ava Willing at her residence in Philadelphia on Feb. 17. The wedding was one of great magnificence, and after the ceremony the bridal couple sailed away in the yacht Nourmahal, which had been painted white for the occasion, for a cruise in the West Indies.

Attorney Rand's Body Found.

READING, Pa., Nov. 16.—The body of William P. Rand, the well known lawyer who disappeared from his home ten days ago, has been found in the Schuylkill river, in the northern part of the city. It was generally supposed that he had gone west, as he had not been seen since the evening of Nov. 6. Financial troubles caused him to commit suicide by drowning.

A Negro in Her Room.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 16.—Minnie Hawes, the pretty 20 year old daughter of Henry Hawes, of 207 Halsey street, this city, was awakened at 4 a. m. by a man in her bed room. He seized her by the throat and threatened to kill her if she screamed. Her sister was awakened and gave an alarm. He was arrested and gave his name as Richard Fields.

Robbed the Minister's House.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Nov. 16.—A sneak thief entered the parsonage of the Rev. Mr. Woelfkin, pastor of the First Baptist church in Hackensack, on Nov. 6. Mr. Woelfkin was attending church. The thief stole two valuable watches, two gold chains and a sum of money.

Mrs. Durand a Centenarian.

IRVINGTON, N. J., Nov. 16.—Mrs. Phebe Baker, of Irvington, widow of Cyrus Durand, formerly chief of the bureau of printing and engraving, was one hundred years old yesterday. She is hale and hearty and takes long walks every day. She has never been ill.

Look Out for This Counterfeit.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 16.—Counterfeit five dollar treasury notes of series A, 1880, W. S. Rosecrans, register, J. J. Huston, treasurer, are circulating in this vicinity. In the title "United States" the "T" is not dotted.

So Here We.

"She may be well educated, as you say, but she uses very singular expressions."

"She does?"

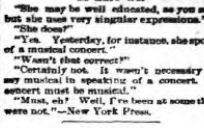
"Yes. Yesterday, for instance, she spoke of a musical concert."

"Wasn't that correct?"

"Certainly not. It wasn't necessary to say musical in speaking of a concert. A concert must be musical."

"Must, eh? Well, I've been at some that were not."—New York Press.

A Warning.



Turkey—Say, young man, do you expect to celebrate Thanksgiving?

Young Man—No—o, I—I dess not.

Turkey—Well, all right. I just wish to remark that I vowed to the wise is sufficient."—Exchange.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

THE ECLIPSE OF THE MOON.

Harvard Professors Ascertain That Luna Has No Satellites.

CAMBRIDGE, Nov. 16.—Professor Pickering and a dozen assistants aimed their telescopes at the eclipsed moon last night in a vain search for satellites. The weather conditions were perfect, and the various phases of the eclipse were photographed without any interference by clouds. To Harvard's famous astronomers the eclipse was of interest only as furnishing the means of determining whether the moon has any satellites. In 1860 observations were made from various stations, but no satellites were discovered.

Last night several more photographs were taken, but a brief examination of the negatives failed to show any stars or other heavenly bodies except those whose existence was already known. Professor Pickering said he is satisfied that the moon has no satellite big enough to be seen, and the telescope would reveal any object with a diameter of 600 feet.

At Other Places.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 15.—Professors Elkins and Brown made extensive preparations to view the eclipse at the Yale observatory. Owing to clouds no data were obtained.

ALBANY, Nov. 16.—Elaborate preparations had been made to view the eclipse at Dudley observatory, but nothing could be observed during the totality phase on account of clouds.

BARATOGA, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The eclipse of the moon was seen perfectly here, the sky being without a cloud.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—On account of cloudy weather no observations of the eclipse of the moon were made at the naval observatory last night.

Desperate Fight with Convicts.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 16.—Three keepers in the Onondaga county penitentiary had a desperate struggle with three escaping prisoners Sunday. The keepers were John Miller, Frank Leonard and Alfred Delong. Miller sawed away the bars of his cell door and unlocked the cells occupied by Leonard and Delong. The three had almost gained the main entrance door, when three of the keepers pounced upon them. The men fought desperately, but the guards succeeded in overpowering them. The saws were brought to Delong by his father and brother, who have been arrested.

"Dixie" Stopped the Panic.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 16.—During a crowded matinee performance at the Grand Opera House the cry of fire was raised and a scene of the wildest confusion followed. In the family tier a number of ladies endeavored to jump out to certain death, but were prevented. At the height of the panic Effie Ellsler rushed upon the stage and cried out that there was no danger and a man commanded the orchestra to play "Dixie," which it did with a vim. This calmed the audience. A number of persons were injured.

William W. Lyman Dead.

MERIDEN, Conn., Nov. 16.—William W. Lyman, one of the directors of the Meriden Britannia company, and one of the wealthiest citizens of Meriden, died here Sunday.

HER BED A COFFIN.

AN AGED NEGRESS GOES TO SLEEP IT EVERY NIGHT.

Her Husband Died Thirteen Years Ago.

After His Death she Bought a Coffin, Has Slept in It Ever Since—Imitating Sarah Bernhardt.

A little whitewashed cabin built in the midst of a grove of mountain cedars and scrub oaks, is a familiar object to scores of hunters whom the chase leads to a point in the Knobs, two miles north west of Greenville, Ind.

Mrs. McGuire, the mistress of the place, is an ex-slave totally devoid of education, yet possessing an ordinary amount of intelligence. She, however, has a peculiar flaw in her mental organs. For seven years she has slept nightly in a casket, something which the ordinary negro with his superstitious horror of death and everything connected with it would suppose that it would not do for any earthly consideration.

It seems that "Aunty" McGuire and her husband moved into the little cabin nearly a quarter of a century ago. They rented the place from a neighboring farmer, and eked out a scanty existence by tilling the rocky soil of the fifteen-acre farm.

One night thirteen years ago the husband died suddenly in his bed. The black rellet was particularly affected by his death. The dead body of her husband had hardly been returned to Mother Earth than, with a portion of her scant savings, she purchased a cheap wooden coffin. There was nobody in the house with her at the time but her son and daughter, who gazed with horror upon the casket when it was deposited upon the front room floor.

At night their wonder was increased when they saw their old mother fold a comforter neatly, and, after depositing it in the bottom of the coffin, jump into the receptacle nimbly and compose herself for her night's sleep. There was no sleep for the children that night, and the next day they fled, the son, three hundred in the yard and in the space of a few seconds smashed it out of all semblance of its former shape with an ax.

The next day "Aunty" made another trip to town and bought another coffin identical with that which had been destroyed, and that night used it as a couch. The son soon discovered that his mother was seized with a strange mania, that she feared death would overtake her as it did her husband, and that when the final summons should come, her children would be minus the necessary funds to bury her, so she determined to have the casket ever ready in her room.

Did saw that argument was of no avail, and that she would expend all the money she had in her possession if he persisted in smashing her uncanny bedstead, so he wisely concluded to let her have her own way.

Mrs. McGuire slept in the self-same coffin for six years, but she has been increasing in weight, and at the end of that time experienced much difficulty in squeezing into her bed. Seven years ago she buried the empty coffin beside her husband's grave, and bought another so large that it will hold a person of the greatest obesity.

The coffin shows evidences of wear on the sides nearest the handles, where the paint has been worn off by the owner getting in and out. The arrangements of the been rounded by the friction of aunty's callous hands, and her nails have worn the footboard away. Three years ago the casket would have standing on a pair of chairs was transferred to the top of two boxes in order that the woman might more easily climb into her cot. [illegible] has latterly simply a plain muslin [illegible] and this she does each night before lying into the coffin. SHE COURTED THE GHOST.

Strange Story Chicago Girl Sleeps for a Night on Dunsmuir's Couch.

Of Miss Letter, the handsome young daughter of one Chicago millionaire, there is a little story being told now, that smacks of the romantic. When in Venice recently the Chicago beauty was given a palace within the walls of which the famous pillow scene is said to have been enacted, and was shown a room where Desdemona slept on that fatal night when Othello took her life.

No one is allowed to occupy the room and few show any inclination to do so, for the story runs that at night, when the fatal hour comes, strange things appear to its occupants. The Moor, with jealousy, love and anger on his swarthy face, hangs over the couch, and for another time repeats the evil deed for which his soul still must wander and know no rest.

Miss Letter knew of this and with the desire to sleep in that room. Desdemona's couch was a temptation not to be resisted, and the idea that none had used the room for years made her determined to sleep there. It took an immense amount of talking, but the persuasive power that finally proved effective was like a tonic, American gold, and a good round sum at that.

Miss Letter's mother was not there, but a trusty companion accompanied her. She, however, was not to be persuaded to spend a night in that blood-stained chamber, and with the companion in the next room Miss Letter finally settled herself on Desdemona's couch. For a time between the rooms there was laughter and joking. Then the American belle fell asleep on the silken couch, and not even a dream of the hapless beauty came to disturb a long night's slumber.

Reads Like a Fairy Tale.

There is a club called the Mariahilf Matrimonial Club, in Austria, which is about the most chivalrous thing of modern times. All the members are rich men, and each pledges himself to marry a poor girl. If one should fail to keep his vow, and should marry a rich woman, he forfeits £200, which is devoted by the club to making some impecunious engaged couple happy by giving them a good start in life. The whole thing reads like a fairy tale, in which the king's son always marries a peasant girl, yet the club really exists.

His Agreement Kept.

"Look here," said a new tenant, "this house was to have been furnished, and it is absolutely empty."

"I have kept my agreement, sir," replied the owner. "I have furnished the house, and I expect you to furnish the furniture."—Harper's Bazar.

GOOD HEALTH

FLYING SPECKS BEFORE THE EYES.

Sudden Appearance—A Startling but Not Serious Affection.

People are often frightened almost out of their wits by the sudden appearance of flying specks before their eyes; sometimes they are only one or two, but often thousands of them can be seen, particularly when a person looks toward a white surface, as white clouds, white houses, white pavements or toward water surface. These flying specks are mostly small points, connected one with another by fine lines, and the points often presented a beaded appearance. At first persons are likely to try to knock them away, thinking it is something before their eyes. They come usually in both eyes at the same time. They may diminish or increase in numbers at times, but rarely ever disappear entirely. They never interfere with vision by settling over objects looked at.

Dr. A. D. Williams explains in the St. Louis Medical Journal that the nature of the flying specks here described is not well understood, but badly focused eyes are most likely to be troubled with them. He says that they signify nothing serious so long as they are mere points connected with fine lines, and do not interfere with the acuteness of vision. Treatment is more than useless. If the eyes are out of focus proper glasses should be selected. It is important that the patient should ignore their presence entirely; should avoid seeing them as much as possible and let them alone. Large floating masses before the eyes, which swim around and often obscure vision, are the result of serious disease and should be promptly looked after.

Ear Disease.

It is sometimes said that the left ear is more liable to be attacked by disease, or to be attacked first and suffer more severely than the right. In regard to what he calls the "lateralization of ear disease," Dr. Low enberg, of Paris, says that he has for a long time past been struck with the fact that while deafness is more common on the left side in men, the same does not hold good in the case of women. From statistics of 5,000 cases which have come under his notice he shows, in the first place, that the ear of man is more subject to ear disease than the female, there having been 1,700 of the former to 1,210 of the latter. Among those in whom only one ear was affected there were 475 men and 311 women. The right ear alone was affected in 212 men and 167 women; the left alone in 306 men and 144 women. Deafness existed in both ears in 1,074 men and 737 women. Among this number the right ear was the more deaf of the two in 437 men and 340 women, the left in 647 men and 397 women. Deafness was equal on both sides in 388 men and 162 women.

A New Remedy for Whooping Cough.

According to Popular Science News Dr. Neovius writes in a Finnish monthly that he has tried the wild thyme (Thymus vulgaris) in a considerable number of cases of epidemic pertussis, one of the patients being a little child of his, aged one and one half years. The remedy was employed in the form of an infusion, made of 100 grammes of the herb, 700 of water and 50 of syrup of mallow (syrupus malvæ), the dose varying according to the child's age from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful, from eight to twelve times a day. The results obtained from the single treatment surpassed the author's highest expectations, every one and all of his patients making a rapid and complete recovery.

ETIQUETTE

SOCIETY POPULARITY.

The Woman Who Is a Favorite with Everybody in Her Social World.

What is the secret of being "a popular woman," as the phrase is understood in society? There are some women who are extremely popular with their own sex, who have many women friends, but who are not popular with the opposite sex. Again, there are many women who are most popular with men, but who are unpopular with women, and are undeniably bored if thrown much in their company.

As a rule, the unpopularity of women is a verdict pronounced upon them by their own sex. Men proverbially make the best of women; if there is anything pleasant to be said about them they say it, and "a handful of good looks" weighs greatly in a woman's favor from a man's point of view. A woman must be very stupid, dull, disagreeable and plain before a man will boldly confess that "he can't get on with her." Unpopularity is derived from various sources. A woman may be ignorant, poor and pleasureless, she may live in good style and do all that fashionable women do in the way of society engagements, and yet be extremely unpopular with both men and women. Her women friends are afraid of her, and her men friends never feel sure of her because her perceptions of the foibles and weaknesses of her friends are so keen and so little tempered by genuine good nature that no one escapes from the sting made by her apparently innocent remarks.

Another type of the unpopular woman is the one with a chilling manner and standoffish demeanor, who, when she would like, cannot do so with any graciousness; though really kind hearted and duty loving, she is as unpopular in society as a woman can well be. A brusque manner renders a woman unpopular until her friends know her well; but acquaintances seldom get as far as this; therefore to the end of their days they remain the brusque, unpopular woman still. Egotism is a formidable barrier to popularity. Women of this type are agreeable only so far as the topics of conversation concern themselves, their aims, interests, amusements, etc.

Popularity has a like diversity with unpopularity. Some women are immensely popular because they are what is termed "good company;" they have high spirits, they are witty and full of good natured repartee, they have the geniality by their natural vivacity, but this is a popularity not to be acquired, being the outcome of a gift.

A woman can never be thoroughly popular unless, added to favorable position, she has an innate sweet disposition, is considerate, winning of speech and manner and has the gift of saying at all times the thing that will give the most pleasure. When a clever woman is also a truly kindly one she is liked by all classes and is foremost among popular women.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THE WOLF, WILD AND TAME.

Instructive Facts About the Largest and Most Ferocious of the Canine Family.

In its native state the wolf is the largest and most savage of the canine group. It is so fierce that many of the older naturalists regarded it as utterly untamable. In countries where they abound, wolves destroy not only cattle and horses, but men. The wolf is a very widespread animal, with slight variations in color and size; it extends from the east of Asia, through India and Europe, to North America, having in all these countries the same ferocious character, killing—especially in the cold season, when much pressed by hunger—men, women, children, cattle and sheep; but the wolf taken young becomes perfectly tame, is attached to its master, learns to live with dogs and acquires from them the habit of barking, which is entirely unknown to it in the wild state.

PERFORMING WOLVES.

Even when taken older wolves may be tamed, and our engravings show the performances of a pack which have recently been exhibited in London. Each of these animals, as it may be seen, knows its own kennel, and takes to it at command. They climb stairs at the order of the keeper and assume positions at command, and will leap over the shoulders of the keeper and form very striking tableaux.

The wolf, which is one of the origins from which the domesticated dog has doubtless sprung, is, to be gallant to say, a most intelligent animal, and hence it can be tamed by appealing to its mental faculties; but at the same time, as in the case of dogs, it must be impressed with the sense of the superior qualities of its master. There is no doubt that the instincts of the wolf reappear from time to time in the descendants of the domestic dog, and the action of no untamed wolf can be more terrible than some of the accounts one occasionally reads of savage and mad dogs.

All About Poppies.

Poppies wear scarlet coats like soldiers, and are favorites with children, who have always thought it fine fun to pop the long buds and unfold the crumpled red leaves that are inside. Perhaps from this habit of popping the buds the flower got its name. Who knows? In old England the poppy is sometimes called the corn rose because it grows in the fields along with the grain.

A SPRAY OF POPPIES.

Poppies are used as an emblem of sleep, because the white juice which drops out of the stem when you first break the flower off is said to give ease to people who are in pain and sleep to those who cannot rest. This juice is called opium. Our red poppy gives so very little that it would not be worth while to collect it; a large kind that has a white blossom is the plant from which opium is gathered, which grows in India, China and other parts of Asia.

Right Foot, Left Foot.

The following, from Good Housekeeping, is to be said over the little feet, each in turn, beginning with the right foot:

Two white ponies are Trot and Canter,
Gray and Prick, are two ponies more;
Every morning they all come prancing,
Gayly enter my open door,
While a coachman fair, very white as snow,
Tells all the ponies the way to go.

Nightfall comes, and the four white ponies
No longer prance on the nursery floor;
Caper and Prick and Trot and Canter
Are swift as the rushing wind, no more;
While the drowsy coachman nods on his seat,
And can't find the way to Bedford street!

Muffs are making their appearance in the windows. They are made of velvet and feathers to match bonnets.

1890—Trouble at Pine Ridge Agency, South Dakota, and threats of a Sioux outbreak.

Another Disappearance.

A finely dressed man, carrying a gold headed cane and displaying an elegant diamond pin, was about to take a Sixth avenue train at Chambers street yesterday, when he suddenly made up his mind to buy an evening paper. He snapped his fingers imperiously at a newsboy, but when he came to pull out his change he discovered that a two cent piece was the smallest coin in value he had. The boy had just changed a quarter, and was therefore without pennies.

"Well, then, run and get it changed," commanded the gentleman, and he stood at the foot of the steps while the lad scampered away.

A second newsboy had come up soon enough to take in the situation, and as three or four minutes passed away and the gentleman exhibited strong signs of impatience and anxiety, the older boy advanced with a penny in his open palm and said:

"That fellow who went fur change has probably left town and killed himself, and not wantin to take up your valuable time I'll give you the cent and take my chances of collectin it off his estate!"

The gentleman didn't take it. It suddenly struck him he must catch the train then rumbling overhead, and he disappeared up stairs so swiftly that the boy with the cent looked all around to see what had become of him.—New York Evening World.

BREVITIES.

—A cold wave with snow is predicted for to-morrow.

—Exeter Lodge, Knights of Honor held a meeting last evening.

—The North Plainfield Township Committee will hold a meeting this evening.

—One week from to-day will be registration day. See that your name is recorded.

—Faint-hearted young men should take courage. Only two months more before leap year arrives.

—The Sons of Temperance will attend a special meeting of the Salvation Army on Tuesday evening.

—John Hogan of West Third street is suffering from a sore, which he received Saturday night while working at the fire.

—The directors of the Plainfield Building-Loan Association held a meeting in the office of Jackson & Codington last evening.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will hold its regular mid-week meeting Thursday evening at eight o'clock. All are invited to attend.

—John Miller of Railway is the name of the bicyclist who was injured in the city Sunday afternoon by colliding with a wagon as reported in THE NEWS of yesterday.

—Complaints are many and loud over the wretched condition of the board walks on the lower part of Duer street. After nightfall walking is attended with danger in that neighborhood.

—Important business will be transacted at the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. this evening. An enjoyable programme consisting of songs and recitations has also been arranged.

—A conference of Christian boys connected with the boy's department of the Young Men's Christian Association of New Jersey will be held in this city on Saturday and Sunday Nov. 28 and 29.

—A man named Cotrell was arrested yesterday by Policeman Giese. He was charged with drunkenness. This morning when arraigned in court he pleaded so hard that Judge Codington suspended sentence in his case.

—Muskrats are reported to be building bomb-proof houses and putting in base-burner stoves which indicates that either a very cold Winter or some very able liars are on hand—most likely the latter.—Hunterdon County Democrat.

—Shevichihi is the name by which New Jersey was known to the Indians who inhabited the State before it was settled by the white man. Shevichihi is a nicesounding and handy little name. Pity it dropped out of use with the advent of civilization.

—An ounce of prevention is worth a good many cases of small pox. If you have never been vaccinated delay no longer than is necessary to reach the doctor. Small pox is abroad in the land, and it is a visitor that is just as likely to call upon one person as another.

—Burglars are beginning to bother the country stores, particularly those where clothing and wearing apparel can be found. The Winter is coming on, and the tramp is preparing for it. Country merchants should be especially watchful these nights, particularly if they reside in the vicinity of railroads.

—Last night another secret meeting was held by the half dozen interested in the so-called Citizens' Ticket. The place of meeting was changed from Roberts' stable, the former resort, to 35 North avenue, where the defunct Water Works Company in which the combine was so much interested, was located.

—Sixty years ago last Thursday, Nov. 5, a railway train was propelled in this land for the first time by the power of steam. The anniversary of this achievement was celebrated with appropriate ceremonies at Bordentown by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, which at the same time dedicated a monument erected to mark the first piece of track laid between New York city and Philadelphia.

—Yesterday morning Mr. Frank Wolff, the clerk at the City Hotel, and Mr. James Coddington, a friend, went hunting for rabbits in the vicinity of Mt. Horeb. Mr. Wolff said he would return early in the afternoon but failed to do so and when at eight o'clock last evening a report was current that he had been accidentally shot his friends were greatly alarmed. The report turns out to be untrue. In the country, the hunters claim to have had a very enjoyable day and any one succeeded in killing sixteen rabbits, and fail to produce even one.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE THIRTY-THIRD SESSION HELD LAST EVENING.

The Matter in Relation to the Opening of Peace Street Taken up.—Action Deferred for One Week.—The Combine Uneasy.—Other Business.

The City Common Council met in adjourned session last evening. It was 8.40 o'clock when the meeting was called to order. Besides the president, Councilman Ackermann, Gallup, Gunn, Hetfield, Johnston, Moffett, Roberts, Rushmore, See and Spangenberg responded to roll call.

The minutes of the last meeting were read.

The President requested the Clerk to read Corporation Counsel Marsh's quarterly report in reference to the street railway matter now pending in Supreme Court. He said that the report stated that the matter was under the consideration of the Committee on Streets and the Plaintiff looking forward to an amicable adjustment of the difficulty. Mr. Smith inquired of the Committee if such were the facts. The chairman replied that he had heard nothing about it. The report was then referred back to the Corporation Counsel for an explanation.

This indicates that the combine are apprehensive of their overwhelming defeat three weeks from to-day, and that their opportunities for mischief will soon thereafter cease.

J. D. Smith applied for a cartman's license. The petition was referred to the License Committee and subsequently granted.

Claims amounting to $141 were then read, referred to the proper committees and subsequently ordered paid.

Mr. Johnston from the Alms Committee reported that the house used by the city poor had been put in proper repair.

Mr. Ackerman offered a resolution approving of the action of the Mayor in extending the note of $8,500. The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Hetfield moved that when the Council should adjourned it would be to meet again next Monday evening.

The petition in reference to the opening and widening of Peace street was then read.

Mr. Rushmore offered a resolution to the effect that an opportunity be now given to any person or persons interested in the opening of that thoroughfare to be heard. The resolution was adopted.

An invitation was given by the chair but no one accepted.

Mr. Rushmore offered another resolution to the effect that action be deferred in the matter of opening Peace street for one week. The resolution was adopted.

The meeting then adjourned.

A Service of Song.

Next Sunday evening the Park Avenue Baptist Church will hold another service of song. A large proportion of the choir from this church with members of other and some of both of Plainfield's singing societies and under the leadership of Mr. A. S. Roe, listening to their anthems is a pleasure. The sweet Brooklyn soloist, Mrs. Evelyn Everett Spicer, will again sing for them, her selection being "Calvary," by Rodney, and an arrangement by Bischoff of "Rock of Ages," that has not, we believe, ever been sung in public. Those who have heard the private rehearsal of this new piece say it is charming.

Anderson Won the Foot Race.

An interesting foot race took place at the Crescent Rink last night. The race was for three miles for two hundred dollars a side. The contestants were J. W. Anderson of this city and George Duffrane of Elizabeth. Mr. John Harkins of New Brunswick was the referee and Mr. George Leidy of this city the timekeeper. A large crowd was present and witnessed the contest. The start was made at nine o'clock and Anderson succeeded in winning in 15 minutes and five seconds. Another race has been arranged for Friday evening. Five miles will be run for $250 a side.

The Ticket Goes a Begging for Candidates.

About all the persons whose names were put on the so-called Citizens' Ticket by the combine have declined the nominations. The combine neglected to appoint a committee to fill vacancies, making masters according to their usual custom, and now no one has any authority to supply the places made vacant. The secret meetings, it is supposed, are to try to make deals, but treachery won't work this time. The people are awake.

Stopped a Firebug's Plans.

The discovery was made at dusk Sun, day evening that the woodwork of a shed in the rear of Andrew Latkins' store on Park avenue was found to be completely saturated with kerosene. The police were notified and a watch was kept all night, but the would-be firebug did not appear.

The Bullet Whistled By His Ear.

While Eugene M. Laing of Park avenue was standing in his doorway Saturday, a bullet whistled by his ear and buried itself in the woodwork back of him. He did not hear a report, and is at a loss to determine who fired the shot.

ACCUSED OF ROBBING FARMERS.

Warrants Issued for the Arrest of Adolph Renaux.

On complaint of Messrs. Charles Codrington, William Miller and Isaiah Coriell, Justice Sperry yesterday issued three warrants to search the premises of Adolph Renaux. For some time past the complainants have been missing farm produce from their storage house on their farms at Mt. Horeb, and they claim to have cause to suspect one Adolph Renaux of stealing the same. Mr. Coddington in his complaint says that he tracked Renaux from his farm to a barn where he, (Renaux,) stored the stolen goods. The warrants were placed in the hands of Constable Job Codington and he went to Mt. Horeb today for the purpose of searching Renaux's premises and placing the accused under arrest.

State Board of Education.

A large number of changes in the rules of the State Board of Education were made at the meeting of the body last week. The amendments and additions adopted relate mainly to the examination of teachers and the issuance of County and State certificates. One of the important changes is the striking out of the old rule under which first grade State licenses were granted without examination to persons who had efficiently served ten years as school principals. Candidates for the new first grade State certificates will have to be not less than twenty-five years old and to have not less than five years' experience in teaching. They will have to show that their teaching has been in every way successful and will have to pass examination in all the subjects required for a first grade county certificate, and in addition will be examined in psychology, plain and solid geometry, chemistry, geology, botany and the philosophy of education and the principles of manual training and physical culture. Under this rule the obtaining of a first grade certificate in irregular fashion will not be possible.

Under the new rules the State certificate will be granted only by the State Board of Examiners. The examinations for State certificates, and only two, will be held each year, in the city of Trenton, beginning on the first Thursdays of June and December respectfully. These examinations will be public, and the questions used will have to be approved previously by each member of the Board of Examiners.

Second grade State certificates will be issued after examination to persons not less than twenty-one years old and with two years' experience as teachers. Candidates for third grade State certificates will have to be not less than twenty years old and need have no experience. These certificates will remain in force for seven years, ten years and for life respectively, in the third, second and first grades. The second and first grade examinations will be the same, and the third will be like them except that it will not include the philosophy of education and the principles of manual training and physical culture.

County superintendents and examiners are to hold four stated meetings each year for examinations and will issue three grades of certificates, the highest of which will remain in force five years, and be renewed without examination. The second grade will remain for three years and the third for one year.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. Lewis R. Blackford of Somerset street, North Plainfield, is attending the Grand Encampment of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows which is in session at Trenton to-day.

James McGee, Esq., of this city will deliver an address on Saturday evening at the Y. M. C. A. district convention to be held at Rahway. Subject: "The Young Men's Christian Association: Is it an Association Worthy of Encouragement and Support."

Mr. W. L. Titsworth of East Fifth street who had three toes crushed on a ferry boat, is now able to get about once more. The accident was most peculiar, probably without precedent. Mr. Titsworth and a friend, Mr. Hunn, were returning from business in New York, last Friday evening. The ferry-boat had been docked and the passengers were getting off. The heavy beams which prevent the boat from rising above the level of the dock were in place. Just as they reached these beams, Mr. Titsworth and Mr. Hunn separated and started to go each side. Mr. Hunn went, but the ferry-boat sank after a swell and rising caught Mr. Titsworth's foot under the beam, crushing the toes. As it is, it was bad enough, but it is fortunate his entire foot was not caught. In speaking of it Mr. Titsworth said, "I did not feel it for a long time, my foot seemed paralyzed." It is not known whether or not he will bring suit against the company.

Remember the "Y's."

Don't forget the cake and candy sale to be given by the "Y's" in their rooms Wednesday, Nov. 25th. The sale will be in progress all day and will continue in the evening. A cozy afternoon of obtaining good Thanksgiving pies and cakes may get them by notifying the members of the Union previous to the opening of the sale.

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Warren Mission chapel will hold a meeting in the lecture room of the chapel this evening at eight o'clock.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The New Jersey Commissioners Furnish Some Interesting Statistics.

The New Jersey World's Fair Commission held their regular weekly meeting at Trenton yesterday and transacted routine business. The committee appointed to make a canvass of the manufacturers of the State made a statistical report, which shows that there are 3,540 manufacturers in the State. There are 107 silk concerns, which is greater than the combined silk industries elsewhere in this country. There are 113 jewelry manufactories, which makes the State run second in the Union. In the production of leather, this State excels all others. The total number of concerns engaged in its production is 68, which is larger than other States. In the matter of pottery, tile and sanitary ware, New Jersey ranks first, having 52 pottery manufactories. This report was received, and the commission propose to canvass the State at once. Each manufacturer is be visited, and individual interest solicited. They intended to have a fine exhibit of each of these leading industries, and a plan of operation will be discussed next Wednesday.

Its no Wonder that Fulford can Shoot

Edward D. Fulford, the man who defeated that great pigeon shot, Capt. John Brewer, in his matches out of three last week, is one of the nerviest men in existence. An incident that occurred during the great blizzard of 1888 tells the character of the man. The wires of the Bell Long Distance Telephone Company were down in every direction. Fulford, who was in the construction department of that company, had charge of repairing the lines between Providence and Boston. The President of the company wired him to where he was working.

"When will you be in Boston?"

And employe said Fulford was too busy to send answers to persons so foolish as came the question. "I wish to see Fulford in person." The great pigeon shot jumped on a horse, and, riding to the station, asked what was wanted.

"When will you be in Boston?"

"In two days, sure, was the reply."

"All right. I can go to sleep happy. Good-by."

In two days the lines were in working order to Boston, but it took 400 men to do the business.

Fulford has always been fond of a gun and dog. His oldest friends remember him as a tall, slim boy with a longer than himself thrown over his shoulder and a white bull dog at his heels in place of a bird dog. Being passionately fond of field shooting, he soon became an expert in winning down ruffled grouse and quail. His early training developed his first trap match was when he was scarce 16 years old. This was with a noted shot of his locality by the name of Scott, whom the boy Fulford easily defeated. After that he shot only in the field until last Spring.—Fanwood Correspondence to the New York Sun.

Contesting Hermit Lee's Will.

Master in Chancery Herbert W. Knight of Newark, yesterday continued the examination in the contested will case of the late Frazee Lee, the hermit of Union county. At his death Lee willed his fortune amounting to about $1,000,000 to the Scotch Plains Baptist church. This was contested by the heirs, and a compromise was effected whereby the property was divided between the heirs, and the church. Then the trustees of the church took exceptions to the accounting by the trustees appointed by the will, and the Chancellor referred the matter to Master in Chancery Knight. The only witness examined yesterday was John H. Jackson, one of the executors.

Arrangements Completed.

The members of the Catholic Young Men's Lyceum have completed the arrangements for a lecture which is to take place at Music Hall next month. They have succeeded in securing the Rev. Father Kelley of Jersey City to deliver his celebrated lecture on the Passion Play. The lecture will be illustrated by stereopticon views. Father Kelley is well-known here, having resided here before entering college to study for the priesthood.

A VICTIM OF GRADE CROSSINGS.

Frank Toler Mangled by the Cars at Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 17.—(Special)—Frank Toler, a son of John Toler, was terribly mangled to-day on the Market street grade crossing of the Pennsylvania Railroad. He was taken to St. Michael's Hospital id a dying condition.

Pen Sketches From Life.

They were standing on Somerset street this morning, just when the wind was at its wildest. They, were two men. Being well prepared for wet weather the fact that it was pouring made no difference. From the earnest expression on their faces they were evidently discussing weighty matters.

A half-sheet of wrapping paper, sucked out of a butcher shop farther up the street by a gust of wind, came sailing along. It struck the ground for a moment, and then like a foot-ball bounced ten feet upward, was caught by an eddy, opened like a sail, and "swish" brushed its length across the cheek of one man, and "biff" engulfed the whole head of the other in its wet, clammy folds.

A rather small man and a decidely big horse, caused laughter on Somerset street this morning. The horse had just been shod and was being led away by the man. A wagon passed and the man jumped in the back. The horse attached to the wagon started at a fast walk. The horse in the rear took a slow pace. The consequence may be easily imagined. Although the little man pulled hard, he was slowly but surely pulled out of the wagon, and his hat fell in the mud. He was somewhat angry but did not club his horse for it. He simply got in the wagon again and fastened the strap. Then the horse went.

Same Here, Same Everywhere

We see by our Warren county exchanges that the Township Committees of that county are threatened with persecution if they do not place their guide boards in proper condition. The guide boards in some parts of Hunterdon county need looking after badly. A number of them have been completely destroyed, and many of them do not bear a trace of any lettering.—Hunterdon Republican.

Chili and the Chilians.

In the chapel of the Crescent Avenue Church, Wednesday evening, at eight o'clock, there will be an address on "Chili and the Chilians" by Rev. J. M. Allis, D. D., of Santiago, Chili. It will be illustrated by stereopticon views of Valparaiso, Santiago and other points of special interest. All interested in mission work are invited to be present.

The Annual Convention.

A number of delegates from the Ladies' Aid Society and the Young Ladies' Missionary Circle of the Methodist Episcopal church of this city, are in attendance at the annual convention of missionary societies, which convened at Paterson to-day.

—Abraham Lincoln was the first President to issue a Thanksgiving proclamation.

—The fair for the benefit of Franklin Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., was brought to a close last evening.

—Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., held a meeting last evening. Several candidates for membership were initiated.

—The various fire insurance companies have been notified not to use the fire hydrants until they receive further orders.

—The Commissioners of Appeal in cases of taxation will sit in the Common Council Chamber, Tuesday, Nov. 24, from two until five p. m.

—There is a marked difference in the pieces selected by the Choral Society and the Melopoia. The first will have such thrilling compositions as "The Messiah," while the latter will render light captivating airs.

—The presence of a second crop strawberries in October and the blooming of dandelions and geraniums out of doors in November are strong arguments in favor of the theory that our climate is undergoing a process of revolution.—New Brunswick Home News.

—The time for buckwheat cakes and honey has come. The "busy bees" suck the honey from the buckwheat blossom and we put the sweet essence of the blooming flower upon the cooked flower and thus restore to the buckwheat what originally and naturally belonged to it. See? No wonder that buckwheat cakes and honey are so good.—Ex.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Never say, "He was given a reception." Say, "A reception was given to him."

Maybe the Argentine Republic can pull itself together again and pay its debts with vanadium, the scarce and precious metal used in setting dye stuffs in fine goods. Vanadium is valued at $1,500 an ounce, and a supply of it has been discovered lately in the Argentine country. Almost the only place where this metal has been found heretofore is in the Ural mountains, and thence it went to supply all Christendom. The mines in the Argentine Republic are in the province of Jujuboca.

Though Dr. Briggs was acquitted of heresy by his presbytery, the end is not yet. His opponents considered that his mere apology and expression of sorrow for disturbing the peace of the Presbyterian church did not settle the question of whether he was a heretic to the doctrines of the Presbyterian church. Therefore they appealed to the synod to continue the case. In their endeavor to decide finally what is truth according to the Presbyterian standard, Dr. Briggs' opponents are as determined as the litigants in a desperately fought lawsuit. The gravity of the question justifies their persistence. It is briefly and chiefly whether the Presbyterian church will allow the Holy Scriptures to be sifted, compared, weighed and judged according to the canons established for modern historic criticism. Dr. Briggs says they can and should be so criticised, and the errors that have crept in through translation and otherwise rejected. Then the real inspiration of the sacred book will shine forth all the more gloriously, because a book divinely inspired can sustain any criticism. The opposing school, on the other hand, declares the Bible as it is to be accepted as the foundation of all doctrine, and just as it is to be accepted; that it is too divine a volume for human minds to criticise.

Uses for Rich Men.

The time seems rapidly approaching when the only admissible reason a man can give for desiring to be rich will be to gain the privilege of doing something for his fellowmen. This appears to be the best use to which a man of great wealth can put it, in the judgment of the community, and the only excuse for allowing him to exist.

Millionaires themselves are beginning to realize this and are preparing to face public opinion accordingly. The late Samuel J. Tilden saw the modern drift and left a magnificent fund, part of which will yet be used as he wished, to constitute the Tilden free library. Wiser than Tilden, Andrew Carnegie has in his lifetime located some of his millions where they will benefit all. He has among other things given Pittsburg its library, with the magnificent endowment which provides an income of $50,000 a year. He has also built the Carnegie laboratory in New York city, which in time will probably lead the world in the field of microscopic investigation.

James Lick gave to California the finest telescope in the world. Leland Stanford gave to the same fortunate state Stanford university. James B. Colgate gave a million dollars to Colgate university, and Reuben Springer and other citizens bestowed on Cincinnati its beautiful and perfectly equipped art museum.

Oh, no! Rich men are not so bad after all, when they are public spirited, and do not gain their wealth by grinding oil the noses of the poor.

Form and Color of the Voice.

Mrs. Watts Hughes, of England, has invented an instrument called the "vidophon," which shows, so to speak, the shape of the human voice. You sing into the oid phon and your voice vibrations are copied upon an exceedingly delicate surface. The pictures of these vibrations are copied upon an exceedingly delicate surface. The pictures of these vibrations that have come to us on this side of the Atlantic resemble, as truth compels one to say, the figure of half a tolerably fair shaped oyster shell. Maybe it is owing to the fact that mankind has been swallowing this delicious bivalve so many centuries. Even before recorded history there were pan roasts.

More interesting still, perhaps, is the study of the color of various sounds. That is to say, certain persons are so sensitively organized that when a sound suddenly bursts near them a glimpse of this color or that suddenly flashes before their eyes. Thus, if a young man was behind with his board bill and sat in his room peacefully smoking and dreaming of future delights, and his landlady should all at once break into his privacy and his dreams with a demand that he pay up or get out, the emotion of righteous wrath and indignation with which most kindly give to her voice at a time would that would paint things red before the youth's eyes.

Sir I. Newton thought that light produced on the eye an effect similar to that made by sound on the ear, and therefore sensitive nervous organizations perceived colors from sounds. Of the colors of different sounds the following table has been made:

Wind instruments—Trombone, deep red; trumpet, scarlet; clarinet, orange; oboe, yellow; flute, sky blue; bassoon, pale blue; violoncello, deep blue; violin, purple; double diapason, purple; horn, violet.

String instruments—Violin, pink; viola, orange; violoncello, red; double bass, deep red.

ALMY PLEADED GUILTY

Christie Warden's Murderer Now at a Judge's Mercy.

HANGED IN EFFIGY AT PLYMOUTH.

The Citizens Assert That They Will Take the Original Next—New Hampshire People Fear the Cold Blooded Assassin May Yet Escape the Rope.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 17.—"Frank C. Almy, you pleaded not guilty to the indictment for the murder of Christie Warden. Do you wish now to retract that plea?"

"I do, sir."

"What do you now say? Are you guilty of the crime with which you stand charged, or not guilty?"

"Guilty!"

The man who murdered Christie Warden at Hanover, N. H., was seated in the dock of the Plymouth court room, his disabled leg resting in an arm chair, as he answered the questions of Court Clerk Griswold. The murderer was as cool as ice until tried to say the fatal monosyllable "guilty."

His Nerve Failed Him.

Even his nerve was then shaken. His clasped fingers twitched. He swallowed a big lump in his throat. Then out it came—"guilty"—clear and distinct.

Notwithstanding the plea of guilty, evidence in proof of Almy's guilt will be taken, and within two or three days Almy will know his fate. The impression here is that the case will go to the jury, and that he will be sentenced to not over thirty years' imprisonment. This impression is causing much excitement among the naturally quiet citizens of the New Hampshire hills. They want to see Almy hanged.

No Evidence of Another Crime.

After Almy pleaded guilty Judge Doe directed that the eighth special juryman be dismissed. Attorney General Barnard says that all the evidence so far accumulated by the state will, unless the court decides to the contrary, be introduced. It will be put in. "We have a case," he said, "most complete in every detail, and we shall show that the man whom we now have in custody is the same man who came to be Abbott, committed a deliberate and premeditated murder, which calls for a death sentence. The state has no evidence that an additional crime was committed."

"Almy is one of the most desperate criminals alive and would stop at nothing to accomplish his ends, either in perpetrating crimes or attempting to escape their consequences to himself, but the recent extra orders to the jail authorities were not, I presume, necessary because we have been afraid that he would escape from custody, but that extra precautions would be taken to prevent him from doing himself personal injury in order to delay his trial. He has at times since his confinement in jail torn the bandages from his leg and endeavored to break the plaster cast, so that he might refracture the bone and then get back into a condition of being unable to stand upon his feet."

He May Escape the Rope.

The law of New Hampshire says that in case a man who pleads guilty shall be found to have committed murder in the first degree, he shall be hanged. If however, he be convicted of murder in the second degree, he may be sentenced to imprisonment for not over thirty years. In the judge's mercy lies Almy's case entirely. If the prosecution can show murder in the first degree, Almy will be hanged. If the defense can convince Judge Doe that the murder was of the second degree he will escape the rope.

Hanged in Effigy.

At midnight Almy was hanged in effigy by the citizens from the tree directly across the principal street. The murderer may today, if it is not removed, gaze from the windows of the temporary cell at the effigy that swings from the limb of the tree under the red paint:

ALMY

This was done by friends of Christie Warden. Will hang for real soon.

The effigy has a framework of wood, neck, arms, body and legs. A white face is partially concealed by a black cap. A full suit of clothes adorns the figure. The boots are nailed on to the feet.

Harvard Liquor Sellers Go Free.

Boston, Nov. 17.—The case against the members of the Zeta Psi club, of Harvard, for alleged liquor selling, which was tried in the Cambridge district court last spring and re-tried in a convention and fining of the defendants, has been nolle prossed in the upper court because the complaint was wrongly drawn, as it covered the sale of liquor, when it should have charged distribution.

An Ex-Bank President Arrested.

MADERA, Cal., Nov. 17.—D. M. Tomblin, cashier of the Bank of Madera, has been arrested charged with the ex-president of the bank, charging him with forgery. Among Tomblin's other forgeries were the names of Tom Fleming, a Chinese merchant, and A. Anderson, for a note for over $600. A curious fact is that Anderson died before the date of the note.

Editor Bowen to Marry.

CHICAGO, Nov. 17.—Editor Bowen, of The Independent, left here for New York, yesterday afternoon. It is rumored that his and ten trip was for the purpose of being married to Miss Emma Westerman, daughter of the late Rev. John Westerman, of this city. Miss Westerman is a lady of worth, but it turns out that the marriage will not take place until January.

From His Wife's Grave to Death.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 17.—Jefferson Fowler, aged sixty-four, was found drowned in a creek on the Pittsburgh Forest Hill cemetery. He had been to the grave which was at the grave of his wife. He had deliberately drowned himself.

Lilly Markay Took Poison.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 17.—Lillie Markay, the seventeen years old, employed as a domestic in the family of Rev. Dr. Thomas G. Apple, took a dose of poison, which caused her death in a short time. No reason is known for the suicide.

The Newark to Sail Today.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—The United States steamer Newark did not sail from the Charlestown navy yard on Monday, as she was under orders to do, the necessary repairs not being quite complete. She will probably leave today.

A Verdict for His Hired Man.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—Thomas Deming, a hired man, has recovered damages of $5,000 from George W. Gould, of Newton-ville, in his suit for injuries received by the latter running two ladders by Gould's team.

A PRIEST STOPPED THE DUEL.

Southern Editors Wanted to Kill One Another, but Didn't.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 17.—A duel has been averted or temporarily postponed by priestly intervention between Benjamin Harrison, editor of The Standard, and H. V. Sevier, editor of The Evening Telegram, and owner of The Times Union. During the late senatorial campaign Harrison and Tom Stockton, business manager of The Times Union, had a personal encounter, which Sevier was prompt to accept, naming the new Smith & Wesson three barrel revolver as the weapon and thirty paces as the distance.

The time was fixed for yesterday at 1 o'clock, and Moncrief Springs, three miles from Jacksonville, was to be the place. Father Kenny got wind of the affair in some way and swore out warrants for the principals.

Harrison was arrested on the ground. His second, C. A. Da Costa, and the surgeon, Dr. Burroughs, escaped. Sevier and his second, W. J. Bassett, were found in a suburban stable preparing to depart for the field of honor.

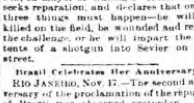
The principals were placed under bonds of $1,000 each. Harrison comes from Mississippi and is a nephew of Carter Harrison, ex-mayor of Chicago. Harrison still seeks reparation, and declares that one of three things must happen—he will be killed on the field, he wounded and renew the challenge, or he will impart the contents of a shotgun into Sevier on Bay street.

Brazil Celebrates Her Anniversary.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 17.—The second anniversary of the proclamation of the republic of Brazil was observed yesterday. The day passed quietly, the public taking scant interest in the celebration. The situation in Sao Paulo is daily becoming more grave.

Fatally Gored by a Cow.

HILTON, N. J., Nov. 17.—John Loehr, thirteen years old, the son of a milkman of this place, was so badly gored by a mad cow that it is thought he will die.



WHY YOUR BODICE SITS AWRY.

A Thing That is a Mystery to Most Women Is Here Explained.

Said one woman to another, apparent her new gown: "It must be bewitched. I cut and fitted it myself by a pattern that is just perfect, and see, the back seam crawls toward the left hip, and the side forms are apparently trying to climb to my armpits. I assure you I am quite desperate over it, and ready to break the place to pieces in desperation. Really, I look quite deperaite. From the looks, anybody would say I cut the thing out on Friday."

"You did worse," said the other, eyeing the garment critically. "You cut each piece so the threads run the wrong way."

"What difference does it make how they run?"

THE WAY NOT TO CUT IT.

"All the difference between a perfect fit and the thing of winkles and it passers you have ever worn. Let me tell you a secret I learned from a London dressmaker. In cutting out a bodice always shape each part so that the thread runs will go each straight around your waist as the belt tape does. That puts the warp perpendicular and gives almost a perfect thus on the seams in the back. Look at your back forms. You cut them, did you not, out of any piece that was big enough? In each the threads run differently, and all ways but the right one.

"Then in fitting you gave no thought to symmetry or proportion. Like those dressmakers, in fact, you took in your seams in any way that promised to make a smooth, tight fit. In consequence your back forms are hardly an inch wide in the armhole. In a well-cut bodice they are as wide there as at the waist-line. The swell of bust and shoulders is accommodated by the back and front figures.

"When stuff is cut on the cross you should be careful to have a true bias around the waist and up the front and back seams. Another thing, if you want your gown to sit smooth over the shoulders before basting it up, let each front piece as much as you can half way from the neck to the armhole, and hold it back full to fit for the same distance. Now put in the apparent gather. Pressing will vanish it and give you an easy seam that will hug the curve of the shoulder almost as a man's coat does."

THE WAY TO CUT IT.

"I see," said the other. "Tell me, did you learn that, too, from the London cutter?" The other looked provoked for a minute: "And she spoke as one having authority, for she was forewoman at Redfern's and enjoyed the privilege of putting pins in the Princess of Wales and half the duchesses in t e kingdom. In fitting this and enjoyed the privilege of putting pins in the Princess of Wales and half the duchesses in t e kingdom. In fitting this armhole I re-ded taking in, one either set the forms higher on the back or changed all of them, bottom as well as top. And you could not have bribed or forced me to put a gathering into the fronts to hem, as you have done. Instead, she curved the edge to your figure and finished it with the neatest of facings, hem and enjoyed the privilege of putting pins in the Princess of Wales and half the duchesses in t e kingdom. In fitting this armhole I re-ded taking in, one either set the forms higher on the back or changed all of them, bottom as well as top. And you could not have bribed or forced me to put a gathering into the fronts to hem, as you have done. Instead, she curved the edge to your figure and finished it with the neatest of facings, hem and all, and enjoyed the privilege of putting in a fly for hooks or buttons. She kept me standing, slowly turning like a hairdresser's dummy, three dreadful hours, but in return I got a gown as easy as if it had grown on me, to say nothing of the wisdom that has been coming out for months past that last has mounted."—N. POWDERLY AND TURNER

They Indulge in Charges and Counterchages.

DID THE EX-TREASURER DEFAULT?

When Accused of Being $14,000 Short in His Accounts He Retorts by Accusing Prominent Knights of Improper Use of the Order's Funds.

TOLEDO, Nov. 17.—The interview with ex-Treasurer Turner in Philadelphia, as published in many papers, has created a great deal of indignation among the general officers of the Knights of Labor. The matter came up in the session and Mr. Turner's charges were vigorously denied. It will be remembered that Turner was accused of being short $14,000 in his accounts by the convention Friday. He retorted by denying that his accounts were wrong in any particular and that Expert Sinnexon, employed by the order, had sworn that his accounts were all right at the end of the convention of 1888.

He had left all his accounts in the treasurer's office, but had retained all the canceled checks for his own protection. He claimed that General Master Workman Powderly had wanted to build a house in 1886, but did not have the money, and got a majority of the executive—Messrs. Hayes, Bailey and himself (Powderly)—to secretly vote the general master workman $2,500 of the order's money. It was agreed that the money should be returned, and also that Powderly should not be compelled to go down into his own pocket to do it.

They Raised His Salary.

Turner claims that this scheme was carried out. Powderly's salary at that time was $1,200 a year. It was arranged that as soon as the convention met in the fall his salary should be increased to $5,000, which would enable him to pay with the order's money that he had taken out of the order's treasury. At the Richmond convention, in October, 1886, this plan was carried out. In proof of his statement Turner exhibited checks showing that on June 25, 1886, $1,000 were drawn from the order's funds at the Corn Exchange National bank by T. V. Powderly, signed by the drawing of an additional $1,500 on Aug. 25. Turner also showed letters from Powderly that he alleged were of a compromising character, and that were said to show that Powderly was getting money from the treasury by means that he did not wish known.

Charges Against Hayes Too.

Turner also claimed to have a voucher for a fifty-five dollar piece of furniture bought by Treasurer Hayes charged to the order and then sent to Hayes' house. Turner also said that cigars and drinks for their friends, laundry for themselves and families, clothes and furniture formed striking parts of the curiously itemized accounts of the general officers.

Hayes Denies One Story.

Secretary-Treasurer Hayes was interviewed here today about the Turner charges. He said: "I have never had a house to furnish, not even a rented one. Since I have been in office I have never had any time to live anywhere. I have a wife, and live in Philadelphia. I haven't a stick of furniture of any kind."

George Murray Talks.

George Murray, of New York, who has attended almost every general convention for ten years, said: "There is no truth whatever in the statements Turner is now making, in my opinion, and for this reason: the charges are such as he is now talking occurred in 1886, and were all known to him then, as he was both treasurer of the general order and a member of the executive board. What was done then met with his hearty approval and was concurred in by him. Believing him to have been honest then, believe that there was nothing dishonest done then. I believe him to be dishonest now, because he is trying to tear down men who are high in the order whom we trust and know why we trust; and because I see him pursuing this dishonest course now I look upon any statement he may make as a dishonest one."

What Powderly Says.

Mr. Powderly said: "Mr. Turner goes into the newspapers to say he is about to tell the public things heretofore known only to him and kept secret, and then he goes on to rehash a lot of old stories that he told to the representatives at Indianapolis, in which he said the accounts of 1886 were then and there refuted; that he has told every one who would listen to him ever since that he never had any foundation in fact, and have been refuted over and over again. All my acts as an officer of the Knights of Labor are open to inspection and I defy him to point to a cent not paid for by my own money. If what Turner states were true, it would brand him as positively dishonest not to have revealed such facts at the general convention of 1886 and 1887. I opposed him at Indianapolis in 1888 because he was incompetent, and he then circulated the same stories he now reiterates. Turner is himself a member of the general executive board at the time he speaks of. He was treasurer of the order also, and when he states that the delegates at the Richmond convention in 1886 increased my salary to $5,000 to enable me to pay back a loan he lies. The convention increased my salary to $3,000 against my protest."

General Foreman Cavanaugh, of Cincinnati, chairman of the finance committee that examined Turner's accounts at Indianapolis, said that not even a well conducted local assembly of the organization would be run with such a loose way of conducting business as Mr. Turner's system permitted.

The National Alliance.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 17.—There are influences at work among the delegates to the supreme council of the Farmers' Alliance which, if not checked, bid fair to disrupt the organization.

The first of these influences was set to work when a delegation of several men, headed by W. S. Hall, of Missouri, arrived and announced that they would present an address to the council asking that the subtreasury plank be omitted from the platform and that it be unequivocally disapproved.

The committee say a refusal on the part of the council to comply with the demands will divide the organization and result in two factions, one representing the south and the other the northwest. They say that the sentiment against the sub-treasury scheme is as pronounced in the northwest as it is in favor of it in the south.

Yesterday an important conference of the third party advocates was held at the English hotel, their headquarters. A. F. Wakefield, of Illinois, presided.

The meeting decided to present a proposition to the Alliance for a union between the People's party and the council.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

A gale at Syracuse Monday night blew down a large two story frame building, wrecking it completely.

Anthony Arent, of New York, has been found guilty at Montreal of failing to provide for his wife. Sentence has been suspended.

One hundred and two morphine pills were swallowed at Washington by Belle Adams, who said she did not wish to live longer. Physicians placed her out of danger.

It is reported that John E. Ashby who was deputy superintendent of public works under James Shanahan, will be appointed to succeed Edward Hannan by Governor-elect Flower.

The demurrer of Charles A. Newton, charged with violating the civil service act, has been overruled by the United States supreme court, and then sent to the criminal court for trial.

The low water in the Kennebec is causing great distress in the cities and towns along its banks. Mills are shutting down daily. The city of Augusta is in darkness, as the low water has caused the electric company to shut down.

Mayor Nathaniel Mathews, Jr., has been unanimously renominated by the Democrats of Boston.

John O'Neil, of Waterbury, Conn., drank carbolic acid, mistaking it for whisky. He died in great agony.

Engineer Gross Gets Another Verdict.

NEWTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Engineer Charles H. Gross has been awarded a verdict for $15,000 damages against the Central New England Railway company for injuries received from his engine to avoid a collision after he had made proper effort to stop his train. Mr. Gross received $10,000 damages from the Pennsylvania, Poughkeepsie and Boston Railroad company for the same accident. Mr. Gross has been paralyzed for life.

The Delegates Were Enjoined.

TRENTON, Nov. 17.—It was proposed to hold a meeting here of delegates from the various lodges of the Ancient Order of United Workmen throughout the state for the purpose of organizing a grand lodge. Past Master Workman Van Sant, of Camden, who is opposed to the project, secured an injunction restraining the delegates from holding the proposed meeting. A hearing will take place on the question as to whether the injunction shall be made permanent, on Nov. 24. There are 3,500 members of the order in the state.

Louisiana and the Lottery.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—In reply to the message sent from the anti-lottery meeting in Chickering hall, Governor Francis T. Nicholls, of Louisiana, has sent the following to Right Rev. Henry C. Potter: "The fraternal greetings sent by the citizens of New York to Louisiana bidding her godspeed in her fight against the lottery are profoundly appreciated. Many thanks for them. That the people of Louisiana will be true themselves, to their fellow citizens of other states, and to the obligations of comity, justice and right, I fervently hope and confidently believe."

NOW PAUPERS GET HERE

Startling Story of Immigration Commissioner Schulteis.

IN THE STEERAGE IN DISGUISE.

The Commissioner Sees Helpless Immigrant Girls Ruined and Learns That Many Paupers Are Assisted to This Country by Foreign Societies.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—One of the most extraordinary attempts ever made by the United States government to fathom the mysterious, world wide system under which the governments of Europe are pouring in hordes of paupers, imbeciles, criminals and other elements that are already weakening and blighting the social structure of the North American continent, came to an unsuccessful end yesterday when Mr. Herman J. Schulteis, one of the special commissioners sent abroad by the treasury department to scour Europe in search of facts, arrived among the steerage passengers of the Cunard steamship Servia disguised as a pauper, only to find, it is said, that the immigration officials of New York, headed by Colonel Weber, the superintendent, had set their faces against such a serious attempt to expose the utter mockery of the present system of inspection.

Congress May Take It Up.

When the facts ascertained by Commissioner Schulteis in his wanderings through Europe disguised in the different national costumes become known there will be a wave of indignation throughout the country. The most vital facts will, of course, be incorporated in the report which he and his associates must make privately to the secretary of the treasury, after which there is no doubt the matter will be taken up by congress for some definite and stringent legislation. The labor organizations of the country, together with all other bodies who have been studying the situation with increasing alarm, will also make their sentiments known.

Encouraged by England.

The commissioners went to Europe in July. Mr. Schulteis reaching England in company with Commissioners Cross, Powderly and Kempster. Later on Colonel Weber joined them. Before his arrival the four gentlemen made a particularly thorough search into the system of gathering paupers, criminals and helpless children in Great Britain for shipment to America. They found that while the British government did not take any part in the work of loading down America with the dregs of European slums, the scores of organizations engaged in the work have such a common connection with the authorities as to put it beyond doubt that the system was encouraged officially.

Commissioner Powderly's Discovery.

Commissioners Kempster and Weber went to Russia principally to study the Jewish question. The other commissioners divided up France, Italy, Holland, Germany and Belgium between them. Commissioner Powderly discovered in the south of France a systematic collection of abandoned women for shipment to the United States.

Disguised as a Dutch Laborer.

Commissioner Schulteis disguised himself in Holland as a Dutch laborer, combed his hair down over his forehead, let his beard grow and wore wooden shoes, sleeping in emigrant houses where committees gathered destitute candidates for American workmanses and worming himself into the secret of the system.

He found the facts to be exactly opposite to those given to the public. He was driven to the most desperate expedients to avoid detection, and had actually in one country to change his disguise behind a cart in the street. In Italy he donned a different costume, and found every where traces of the vast army of agents who are benefiting, deluding and seducing the credulous populations of the most ignorant sections of Italy, to the misery of the overcrowded Italian colonies of America, and for what? simply to collect a commission on the steamship tickets sold.

Deceiving the Commissioner.

Everywhere he found evidences that governments, committees, powerful steamship lines, railways in Europe and in America were all joined together in one vast secret combination, driving over the ocean whole populations, regardless of law and the result to the American republic. At Naples the one commissioner stood watching the embarkation of emigrants for America, two other commissioners unknown to the steamship company secretly inspected the process.

They saw that utterly disqualified persons were set aside and rejected in the presence of the single commissioner and as soon as his back was turned were hurried on board and sent across to swell the great army in America.

Discoveries in London.

At last they returned to England, and Commissioner Schulteis resumed his series of secret trips through the slums of London, disguised in hobnails and ragged clothes. Every emigration society he visited was willing to aid paupers to America; there was no future for them in England.

For instance, Mr. Schulteis went to Mr. Wilkins, the secretary of the London Society for the Prevention of Pauper Alien Emigration, and after relating a pathetic story about his poverty and his utter failure to support himself in England, that gentleman gave him a letter to another secretary telling him to a free passage to New York. It is further explore such underhanded channels that the treasury department sent the present commission to Europe.

New Papers Get Here.

Schulteis told the representative of this British organization that he was unable to obtain work as he was not in good health, and that he would have to go to the poorhouse. He was referred to Colonel John C. New, United States consul general, for some recommendation.

Secretary Wilkins refused to give any indorsement to the supposed pauper. In the face of this the society contributed $5 62 to the twenty dollars necessary for the steerage passage of the Cunard steamship Servia. The clerks declared that hundreds upon hundreds of pauperized Russian Jews were passed on from England to America in the forecastle of the Cunard steamships. The whole effort of the society was to prevent such people from getting a lodgment in Great Britain.

Helpless Immigrant Girls.

Schulteis discovered a shocking state of affairs on the steamer. The intimacy of the employees of the ship with the helpless immigrant girls grew hour by hour. One woman or stoker actually boasted to Commissioner Schulteis of his conquest over a sick girl. Often the poor creatures paid for a few mouthfuls of palatable food obtained from the employees' table by submitting to the most shameful caresses. There seemed to be no safeguard for virtue, no pity for innocence. At night carnality reigned in the steerage deck.

Charges Against Weber.

The New York Herald charges that the Chairman Weber, of the commission and head of the emigration bureau in New York, did not make his investigation thorough and exhaustive because it would show the alleged sham of inspection kept up in the port of New York, and reveal to the public the hypnotic influence of steamship and railway companies, and so called philanthropic committees. When Schulteis returned New York he made himself known to Weber, but claims that his efforts to prove the violations of law were set at naught by the lack of Weber's cooperation.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS.

New York Hard at Work to Get the Republican Convention.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—A largely attended meeting of the citizens was held here, at which the principal business transacted was the appointment of a committee to go to Washington for the purpose of securing the Republican National convention for this city. Ex-Governor Lounsbury, of Connecticut, was made chairman, and General C. H. T. Collis secretary. A resolution was adopted that a committee be named with power to take such action as would best advance the object of the meeting. Chairman Lounsbury subsequently appointed the committee as follows:

Chauncey M. Depew, chairman; Thomas C. Platt, Elliott F. Shepard, John B. Bradley, William Brookfield, Cornelius Bliss, Carson Lake, John W. Vrooman, S. V. R. Cruger, James Belden, George W. Turner, J. E. McElrath, Charles E. Coon, John W. Jacobus, Phillips Jr., Orlando Bolte, James D. Smith, of Stamford, Conn.; E. M. Schofield, of Stamford, Conn.; Charles P. Clark, of the New York and New Haven railroad; Joseph B. Hawley and O. H. Platt, of Connecticut; Jacob M. Patterson, William J. Sewell, Garrett A. Hobart and Judge Blair, of New Jersey.

FLOWER'S ROOM FOR PRESIDENT.

Flower's Boom for President.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Governor-elect Roswell P. Flower's boom for the presidency has been started. A big carriage house on Third avenue, in whose window pictures of Flower and Sheehan have been displayed during the election, has now surrounded the lithographs of the successful gubernatorial candidate with a big wreath, on which is printed in large red letters the words, "Our Next President." P. J. Cassidy, who is at the head of the carriage firm, has always been a staunch friend of Mr. Flower and is an enthusiastic Democrat. He is also a member of the Turtle Bay Democratic club.

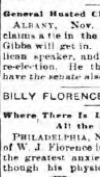
General Husted Claims the Legislature.

ALBANY, Nov. 17.—General Husted claims a tie in the assembly and says that Gibbs will be elected as a Republican speaker, and that means Husted's re-election. He thinks the Republicans have the senate also.

BILLY FLORENCE STILL IN DANGER

Where There Is Life There Is Hope Is All the Doctors Say.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 17.—The condition of W. J. Florence is still such as to cause the greatest anxiety to his friends, although his physicians reported an improvement last night. He is suffering from pneumonia, the result of a chill which attacked him a few days ago and was neglected. Joseph Jefferson, with the balance of the company, has gone on to Buffalo to fill an engagement, and Florence's part will be taken by Mr. Jefferson's son Thomas or by Louis Aldrich.



W. J. FLORENCE.

Police Inspector Conlin, of New York, who is a brother of the famous actor and who was called up to his bedside, says:

"Mr. Florence is in a very critical condition, but better than Sunday night. The doctors will not give any hopes, except where there is life there is hope."

While the home of Mr. Florence's recovery is brighter, the physicians are compelled to announce that at any moment the change may come. All that medical skill can do is being done. Not one minute has the distinguished actor's bedside been left without a physician's watching eyes since the summons was sent Sunday night to the home of Mr. Florence had been stricken with sudden illness.

RUDDY'S AWFUL SUICIDE.

He Poured Oil on His Clothing and Set Himself on Fire to Death.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 17.—William Ruddy, aged twenty-six, spoke angrily to his mother and she replied mockingly. In a fit of rage he poured coal oil over himself, and thrusting a hand into the fire was instantly enveloped in flames.

He then soined a sharp knife and thrust it into his breast near the heart, inflicting a wound which of itself would have been fatal. Burning flesh dropped off in shreds and he suffered excruciating agony during the brief period before death ensued. His blazing clothing set fire to the dwelling, but the house was saved after some rapid work by the firemen.

HAWAII WANTS PROTECTION.

But Secretary Blaine Won't Take Her Under His Wing.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Minister Mott Smith, of the Hawaiian islands, visited the state department last evening and had a conference on the new reciprocity treaty with those islands.

He admitted that he was endeavoring to get the United States to assume a protectorate over the islands, but that Secretary Blaine will not consent. Mr. Smith was also in search of the treaty giving the United States the right to aid the royal government in quelling any internal disorder.

A Fortune Teller's.

"Sir, the charge will be half a crown if I am to tell you everything."

"Here is the money. Now, as a guarantee for the future, tell me a little of my past history."

"Nothing easier. You have been unhappy in wedlock?"

"I never was married."

"You have had false friends?"

"All my friends have remained true to this day."

"I may be mistaken. You have traveled far and wide?"

"I have never been any farther than the next village."

"Come, let me see your hand, I shall be able to read more clearly. Now I have it. You have lost money very recently?"

"Quite correct. I lost that half crown I gave you just now."—Joyeux Passe-temps.

FRANCE MAY SELL OUT.

The Panama Liquidator Recommends the Sale of the Enterprise.

PARIS, Nov. 17.—M. Monchelcourt, liquidator of the Panama canal, reports to the tribunal of the Seine that the experiment of provisional administration have been reduced to 210,000 francs monthly. Referring to the agreement between the United States of Colombia and Bonaparte Wyse, the liquidator states that it did not meet his hopes, but he hoped that Colombia would accept a modification after a new company had been formed.

If France would not intervene the enterprise would shortly be condemned and a large share of the acquisitions would pass over to Colombia under the agreement. It was known that the United States of America was watching for an opportunity to obtain control of the property at small cost. The report concludes by urging that the liquidator be empowered to sell at the best advantage.

SANGER NOT ADMITTED.

Connecticut's Alleged State Treasurer Met by a Constable.

HARTFORD, Nov. 17.—Comptroller Staub and Marvin H. Sanger, Democratic candidate for treasurer, met as a board of equalization to canvass the tax returns of the railroads. They went to the door of the treasurer's office, where they were met by Constable Arthur P. Moore, who invited Mr. Staub to enter. Mr. Staub said he was with Mr. Sanger, and the constable replied that Mr. Sanger's presence was not desired. Mr. Sanger as a private citizen, but that he could not enter the place as treasurer. Messrs. Sanger and Staub then returned to the comptroller's office.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

The Amateur Athletic Union Refuses Sprinter Cary's Record Claim.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The board of governors of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States met here. Delegates from the Metropolitan association, the Atlantic association, the New England association and the Central association were present.

The board refused to reopen the claim of Lorrin H. Carey for the record of 9¾ seconds for 100 yards, alleged to have been made at Princeton in October, 1890.

The lacrosse championship was awarded to the New York Athletic club and the baseball pennant for the year was awarded to the New Jersey Athletic club.

Officers for the ensuing year were chosen as follows: Daniel Carey Sargent, president; K. Stearns and J. K. Tyler, vice presidents; James E. Sullivan, secretary, and William R. Curtis, treasurer.

Another Offer for Slavin and Jackson.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 17.—The California Athletic club will give Jackson and Slavin a $12,000 purse, of which $10,000 will go to the winner and $2,000 to the loser. As this is a better offer than the National club's the men will probably fight here.

New York's Big Horse Show.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The opening of the horse show for a grand success. J. Cassatt's The Bard was awarded the blue ribbon in the thoroughbred stallion class.

Slavin Will Fight Jackson.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—Slavin has accepted the Sheldon-Carey last offer of a purse to meet Jackson in June. The club will allow Jackson $1,500 for expenses.

Brakeman Hardy Roasted Alive.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 17.—A fatal rear end collision between two Panhandle railroad freight trains occurred just west of Bergettsville early last evening. Brakeman Hardy, of this city, was caught in the wreck and cremated alive. Thomas Whitesides, of Allegheny, engineer, and John Ryeland, fireman, of Cadis, O., on the second freight engine, received probably fatal internal injuries before being rescued from the burning debris. The loss will reach $100,000.

French Children to Go to English Schools.

FITCHBURG, Mass., Nov. 17.—In the case of the School Board against certain French residents for refusing to send their children to the public schools, the defendants were fined ten dollars and costs. They appealed and were held in $100 each for the superior court. These children were attending the French school, where most of the instruction is in the French language, in violation, the board claims, of the state school law.

The Newark Mayoralty Contest.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 17.—Decision was reserved by the court in the contest of Herman Lehlbach, who is seeking to oust Joseph F. Haynes from the mayor's office, in this city. Lehlbach was Haynes' opponent at the late municipal election here, and claims that Haynes was counted in by fraud.

AROUND THE HOUSE.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION FOR THE INTELLIGENT HOUSEKEEPER.

Many Things Every Housewife Should Know—Valuable Recipes and Hints That Cost Money the Reading of Them.

Cranberries may be preserved in the same manner as any other fruit. Prepare them as you do for sauce, and can while hot, in sir-tight jars. A pint of granulated sugar to a quart of the berries is the usual rule, and does not do away with the pleasant tartness of the fruit. Most persons prefer the skins strained out, but the pulp and seeds should remain. To make a jelly of this that will be just firm enough to turn out, let the berries cook long enough to burst, and while hot press through the colander until nothing remains but the skins, which should be so dry that no goodness is left in them. Return the jelly to the fire; when it comes to a boil, stir in the pint of sugar; let it boil two minutes, pour into a crockery mould, or it for preserves into the jars. Cranberry jelly, made as here suggested, will keep during the cold weather, covered with egg and brandy paper, like currant jelly, but if kept over till the hot weather it must be kept in sir-tight jars. If made sweet enough to keep through the year the flavor would be lost.

THE CHILDREN'S STOCKINGS.

How to Mend Them Economically and Quickly.

Cheap stocking are not economical for children. They stretch out of shape, fade and wear out quickly; it is a better way to buy a good quality and then take care of the articles. Stockings must be mended as soon as the smallest hole becomes visible, and in this way they may be kept in wearing condition for a long time. First cut the foot of the stocking like Fig. 1 in the illustration; then cut a piece from flannel or other soft woolen goods like Fig. 2. Double this foot piece and sew up the heel as shown in Fig. 3; sew the foot and leg together, being careful not to draw the thread tight. It is better to baste the parts together before attempting to sew them; cut stitch the edges of the seam flat. The same pair of stockings may be refooted several times, cutting the feet a little deeper each time to insure strong material for a seam, and as long as the knees are whole no feet are a saving addition. To mend the leg of a child's stocking turn it and draw it on to a quart glass can; lay on a patch, baste and sew it. Now turn the stocking and draw it on to the can right side out; cut out the worn place and hem down neatly; darn all the thin places. Always press patches and darns with a hot iron, both for the appearance of the work and for comfort in wearing.

To Look Down a Child's Throat.

The family doctor gives to Mother a useful hint in advising not to torture a child when it complains of sore throat by nearly choking it by trying to press down the tongue with a spoon, but to this very simple plan: Place the child in front of you (you yourself being so placed that you can see right into the mouth) in a strong light (a window will do), make the child open its mouth wide and, with its mouth wide open, say "Ah!" as loud as it can two or three times, when you will be able to see right down the throat without inconveniencing the child.

THE ACCIDENT DRAWER.

A Valuable Affair Which Should be Found in Every Home.

The accident drawer or shelf, ought to be an institution in every family, for the articles belonging to it are frequently needed, often instantly, and are rarely to be found quickly when an accident comes, unless there is a place for them; and accidents in a family of children are the unexpected things that always happen. Keep all the old handkerchiefs, both linen and silk; rolls of soft old linen; several old gloves of various sizes; a box of glove fingers; a spool of strong cotton, or one of silk which is even better, and a small needle-book with several needles of large size. Have also two rolls of bandages, one wide and the other narrow; a sheet of adhesive plaster, and a paper of arnica plaster; bottles of Pond's extract and lime water, and arnica; a pair of sharp scissors, and your accident shelf is complete for all home needs, or will furnish what is needed until the arrival of the doctor. In case of a burn where the skin is broken, cover the spot as soon as possible with a thick coating of flour, preferably wheat flour; if the skin is not broken, put on lime water and wrap in soft linen dipped in it.—American Agriculturist.

Painters for the Housekeeper.

Cayenne pepper sprinkled where rats resort will cause the pests to leave the place.

A little lemon juice and salt rubbed over copper kettles will cleanse and polish them.

Use borax to remove finger marks from a hardwood door. Ammonia will take off the varnish or stain.

Mildew can be removed by soaking in buttermilk or putting lemon juice and salt upon it and exposing it to the hot sun.

For Breakfast.

An appetizing breakfast or luncheon dish is made of one pint of bread crumbs, a tablespoonful of parsley, rubbed very fine; beat two eggs very light, add a small cup of milk, just a dash of nutmeg, pepper and salt; also a dessertspoonful of butter. Mix all well together, pour into a well-buttered pie dish and bake in a slow oven. When baked to a nice light brown serve at once.

A Covering for Jelly.

Cotton-batting is frequently used as a cover for jelly. It is laid over the jelly in place of the brandied paper formerly used. Those who have used it say their jelly never moulds when treated in this way, as it frequently does when covered with brandied paper.

THE BOTTLE KNOT.

Useful in Ornamental Braiding or in Fastening Corks in Bottles.

Here is a knot that is both ornamental and useful. It is one that is made with great facility, and is not only of an exceedingly ornamental character, as a succession of knots can be made on the same piece of string as well as braid, but it is of considerable utility in carrying a bottle or vase, as shown in the second figure

THE BOTTLE KNOT. THE BOTTLE KNOT, AS TIED AND USED IN AS USED FOR ORNAMENTAL BRAID- ING CORKS. ING.

If before the knot is pulled tight it is put round the neck of a vase or bottle and then tightened, it takes a secure grip so that either of these articles can be carried. Then by tying a simple flat knot across the top of a bottle that is corked it prevents the cork from flying out. This is particularly valuable for catsup bottles.

QUINCE JELLY.

A Carefully Tried Recipe for This Delicious Preserve.

Pare and core the quinces; add one coffeecupful of water for every two pounds of fruit; steam until very soft. Turn a small quantity at a time into a strainer, and allow the syrup to drain off. (Reserve the residuum for marmalade.) Strain the syrup through a muslin bag, allowing it to drip. Do not squeeze it, or the jelly will not be clear. Measure the syrup, return to the fire, and let it boil hard for forty-five minutes. Add granulated sugar in the proportion of one cupful of sugar to every cupful of juice. Stir thoroughly to insure the melting of the sugar; when it reaches the boiling point, skim well and turn into glasses. As you value the color of your jelly, do not allow it to boil more than two minutes after the sugar is in. For the entire process use nothing but granite, porcelain or earthenware dishes. Do not allow your economical instincts to beguile you into putting the quince skins and cores into the fruit that you use for jelly. It will dull its bright color and make it cloudy. The skins and cores may be boiled separately, and the syrup thus obtained added to the pulp of the fruit which remained in the strainer; add to it three-quarters of a pound of sugar to every pound of fruit, boil as dry as possible and put into jelly glasses. It makes a very good marmalade for common use. If the jelly is not firm when it has been made twenty-four hours do not cook any more, but add to the glasses in a sunny window. It will harden in a few days.

Thanksgiving Plum Pudding.

Take three pints of milk, eight eggs, a ten-cent loaf of baker's bread, one cupful of sugar, one pound of raisins, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of vanilla extract, and one-half cupful of butter. Remove the seeds from the raisins. Place the milk and raisins in a double boiler, and make them boiling hot. Beat the eggs slightly, add the sugar, then the boiling milk, the salt and vanilla. Slice the bread, and spread it with the softened butter; then put the slices in the hot custard. Butter well deep brown pudding dish. Put a layer of the soaked bread in the pan and scatter raisins over it; then more bread and more raisins until all are used, having the last layer of bread. Bake in a slow oven for two hours. When ready for serving, turn it from the pan into a pudding dish, and use it with a hard sauce made from one-half a cupful of butter, beaten to a cream, and one cupful of powdered sugar beaten into it, until it is very light and creamy. Add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla extract or one tablespoonful of wine. Pile it roughly on a pretty dish and grate nutmeg over it.—Good Housekeeping.

Potato Scones.

An economical and appetizing way of using cold potatoes is to convert them into scones. Mash the potatoes with a little salt, knead in as much flour as the potatoes will take up, avoiding the least lumpiness, add enough milk to make a stiff dough, roll out very thin, cut with a biscuit cutter and prick here and there with a fork, bake on a hot griddle, turning so as to brown on both sides. Serve hot, with butter.

A Lacquer for Brass.

After brass has been well polished it will keep bright for a long time by applying a solution of a quarter of an ounce of shellac to a quarter of a pint of methylated spirits. Set in a glass bottle and cork. Shake it well, and keep in a warm place for a few days. Pour off the clear fluid, apply to the brass with a camel's-hair brush. Before doing this heat the brass, if possible, and again after painting over with the varnish.

To Cut Up a Chicken.

To cut a chicken up properly, after picking and singeing it, on a board, cut off the feet, then the wings and legs, after which cut the breast in two, also the back. Good garnishes for chickens are parsely, sliced lemon and cayenne. When choosing fowls remember that the young rooster has a smooth leg and a short spur. Hens, when young, have smooth legs and combs; when old these are rough.

To Detect Sewer or Other Gases.

It is said that silverware furnishes one of the most reliable means of detecting defective drainage. If it is covered with a black coating, or tarnish, soon after being cleaned, and after a second or third cleaning again becomes darkened, one may be certain that there is something wrong with the drainage system of the house.

Hickory Nut Cake.

One half cup each of sugar, butter and cold water, two eggs, one and a half cups of flour, into which has been stirred one and a half teaspoonfuls of baking powder; one cup of hickory nut kernels, dredged with a little flour, cream, butter and sugar; add yolks and whites of eggs, water and flour; lastly nuts. Bake in a quick oven.

Meat should be hung in a cool, airy place, but not in a strong draught, as that makes it too dry.

DO YOU KNOW THESE THINGS?

What It Is Not to Late for You to Learn Them.

Do you know that a handful of screenings, imperfect grain, are worth their weight in silver for kitchen use? Try screening one into the end of your breadboard and your ironingboard, your brushes, brooms and clothes-sticks. Put one at each end of your kitchen wall; on ironing day stretch a stout cord between and see what a convenient place you have to air your clothes. When the wooden handle comes out of your favorite saucepan lid, do you know that a screw-eye screwed into a cork on the inside makes an admirable substitute?

Do you know that common salt will clean your marble-topped bureau and kerosene will polish your zinc?

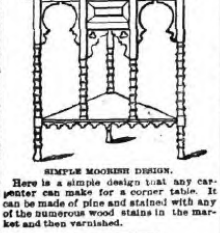
Do you know that manilla paper, such as grocers and butchers use, is far too useful to be thrown away? It will instantly absorb all grease from fishcakes, fried potatoes, ham, or anything of the sort, and it is but a minute's work to slip out the paper and put it in the fire when the dish is ready to serve. A piece laid over your breaddough, under the cloth, will prevent the formation of that hard crust which is so annoying to breadmakers.

Do you know that a couple of paper bags slipped over your hands will prevent your blacking these useful members while you are polishing the range? Try it and see.

Do you know that a bit of butter well rubbed over the top of your bread as soon as it is taken from the oven will give the crust that dark, glossy brown surface that is so appetizing?

Do you know that a little consideration at the breakfast table will make the whole day brighter for you?

A Corner Table.



SIMPLE MOORISH DESIGN.

Here is a simple design that any carpenter can make for a corner table. It can be made of pine and stained with any of the numerous wood stains in the market and then varnished.

Useful Recipes.

DRIED-APPLE PUDDING—Three pints of apples, after they are stewed and pulped, six eggs, a half pound of butter, sugar to your taste, as the quantity required varies in proportion to the acidity of the fruit. If they should not be tart enough, add a little lemon juice or vinegar. Season with cloves, mace or nutmeg. Bake either in a deep dish, without paste, or in patty pans with paste.

RICE CAKES—Two teacupfuls of cold boiled rice, rubbed smooth; three eggs well beaten; one tablespoonful of butter; one teaspoonful of soda in a little sour milk; one pint of flour, and sweet milk enough to make a stiff batter. Drop a tea spoonful of batter

BREVITIES.

—The United States Express messengers are now wearing their new uniforms.

—There will be a meeting in the W. C. T. U. rooms to-morrow afternoon at half-past three o'clock.

—Doane & VanArsdale "don't say much" but what they do say in their advertisement to-day is worth reading.

—The Crescent league bowling team defeated the Elizabeth team on the alleys in this city last evening.

—The Union county court of Special Sessions will meet at Elizabeth next Saturday. There was no session to-day.

—Edsall say he is showing as fine an assortment of seasonable goods in his line as can be found anywhere, and will guarantee the lowest prices.

—Messrs. Neuman Bros., the Broadway grocers, are now selling as a specialty Hamburg's stringless peas, two cans for 25 cents, and also Burnham's and Morrill's Paris sugar corn. See the advertisement.

—There has been more or less talk this season about the prodigious size attained by potatoes, but none of them have reached the dimensions of fifteen grown by John Eisler, of Logktown. They filled a peach basket.

—This is the time of year when by a little imprudence you can get your rheumatism into condition to last you all Winter. If you like such a companion, he may put in an appearance on the slightest invitation.

—Some ingenious person has patented a wide rubber band to slip over one's head while the barber is cutting your hair, fitting tightly around the neck, it prevents the minute particles of hair from turning the victim into a semi-lunatic.

—When storing the farm implements away brush them over with kerosene. It is excellent for preventing rust and for protecting against dampness. Many implements are placed where they become covered with rust, which interferes with their movements in the Spring. All implements should be kept clean.

—The P. R. R. has one of its double-decked ferry boats ready for use, and as soon as the great ferry-house at Jersey City is completed, the passengers will walk from the trains direct to the upper cabins of the new boat, and thence on the New York side, directly to the floor leading to the bridge across West street.

—The cold wave is here. The News told of the coming and preparations were made for its reception. The Artic visitor brought its paint brush and was busy all last night frescoeing windows, houses and landscape. It is also a portrait painter on a large scale, and has a partiality for red. How it did color noses and cheeks to-day!

—The Florida orange crop is now being shipped to New York and other localities. The yield of the State this year was over 2,000,000 boxes. An average box holds 130 oranges. About half of the crop will be sent by rail to the Western States. Chicago is a great consumer of the Florida orange, and also of the California orange.

—Next Wednesday is Evacuation day. Gray headed New Yorkers tell of the grand way in which the day was celebrated when they were young, celebrated with military parades, popular processions, and all kinds of festivities, and they are grieved over the fact that the British evacuation is not thus commemorated in these years.

—The cabin passenger lists of the steamers plying between the ports of the United States and the ports of Europe will contain, at the end of next month, the names of about 100,000 Americans who have visited European countries this year. The number of Americans who have taken a permanent residence in Europe is probably smaller than the number of them who cross the Atlantic Ocean every year.

—Once more our Prohibition friends have shown what they could do by casting their ballots for their own candidates. In Passaic county they nominated a separate ticket instead of voting for the Republican candidate, a man who stood firmly for temperance legislation during his former term in the Legislature. They cast 300 votes, and the Democratic candidate, a wealthy brewer, was elected by about one hundred plurality. That's the result, in Passaic, of voting as they allege they pray. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

YESTERDAY'S STORM.

Considerable Damage Done in this Vicinity.

The storm yesterday brought with it a miniature tornado and considerable damage was the result.

The tin roof on the sheds of Boice's coal yard was blown off. A chimney was blown off of a house owned by Mr. Wm. H. Brower on Park avenue. A bay barrack belonging to Charles Wyckoff of Somerset street was blown down. A dwelling house belonging to Adam Fritz was demolished. Several trees were uprooted. A butcher wagon, belonging to Mr. Israel Lewis was picked up by the wind and carried over a nearby fence. A roof was torn off of a shed on Mr. Lewis' premises. Mr. Lewis was struck by the flying debris and painfully injured about the left leg. Frederick Hoagland, an employe of Mr. Lewis, was picked up bodily by the wind and thrown against a heap of stones and badly cut about the head. A colored boy was also injured. A chimney on the house was blown off and a portion of the fence surrounding the premises was blown down. A fence belonging to Mr. John F. Wilson of North Plainfield was also carried away by the wind.

The chimney on the house owned by Mr. Wm. H. Brower on Park avenue, in falling narrowly escaped hitting several pedestrians who were passing at the time.

The colored boy employed by Mr. Lewis was so frightened by the wind that he ran into the house and could not be induced to venture out for some time after the storm had subsided.

UNION COUNTY CORPORATIONS.

Articles Filed Yesterday of Three New Organizations.

Articles of incorporation of the International Engineers Company were yesterday filed in the County Clerk's office at Elizabeth. The Company began business with $50,000 capital. The incorporators are Emory J. Whitehead, of Westfield; William W. Gaines, and Wesley W. Packer, of Brooklyn.

Court Onward, No. 8,026, Ancient Order of Foresters, also filed its articles of incorporation. The officers are: Frank A. Foda, Chief Ranger; Fred Rhein, Sub-Chief Ranger; William McGrath, Financial Secretary; W. H. Denman, Recording Secretary; W. J. Wolney, Treasurer.

The Sick Benefit Society of Elizabeth is another new corporation, the officers being: David Fisher, President; Joseph Sloomuer, Secretary; Joseph Max, Treasurer.

Might Have Been Worse.

A collision occurred about 11 o'clock this morning between two east-bound freight engines on the Central railroad, just West of the Union street crossing, Elizabeth.

The engineer of engine 345, which was standing on the side track, evidently not noticing the approaching train on the main track, seeing a signal to proceed misread it, and pulled out his train and started forward, and accordingly did so.

As the engineer reached the switch it ran into the forward car of a train drawn by engine No. 143, which reached the switch at the same instant, and as a result engine 345 and the caboose and truck of its tender left the rails. The damage however proved slight.

Wreckers were immediately summoned and after several hours of hard work the two trains proceeded on their way.

A Physician Nearly Suffocated.

Dr. J. A. Allis, a prominent physician of this city, was found by his landlady, Mrs. Kellogg, lying on the floor of his office yesterday morning, overcome by the inhalation of coal gas. Mrs. Kellogg called in Dr. Fritts, who had much difficulty in reviving his fellow physician. It was several hours before Dr. Allis was out of danger. He had gone to sleep at his desk and by reason of the turning on the deadly fumes generated by a faulty stove. Dr. Allis' many friends will be pleased to learn, however, that he is around all right again to-day.

Township Committee Meeting.

The North Plainfield Township Committee held a meeting last evening and transacted routine business. During the evening a petition in reference to the opening and widening of Peace street was read but action on it was deferred until next Monday evening to give persons who so desired a chance to express their views on the subject.

Injured in New York.

Mr. Frederick Bollis of this city met with a painful accident at about seven o'clock last evening. He was crossing West street, when he was struck by a truck and knocked down. The wheels of the vehicle passed over him. He was badly cut about the face and head and injured internally. He was assisted to the train and came to his home.

A North Plainfield Robbery.

On Sunday evening last, while Mr. William Pash of Harrison street, North Plainfield, was absent from his home, a sneak thief entered his house and carried off twenty cans of fruit besides other edibles.

Real Estate Transfers.

Alice R. Sturtevant, single, to Mary H. D. Sturtevant, conveys by deed of warranty land situate in Plainfield on center line of Broadway; date of deed, August 25, 1891; consideration, $3,000.

—The particulars of the cyclone yesterday will be found on our second page.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Bird's Position.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Not wanting the people of the First ward of the city of Plainfield to be in any doubt regarding my views in the matter of bonding the city for any purpose whatever I ask space in your columns to define my position. I would say in the first place I am a property owner, and have a personal interest at stake as well as the city's. My views are decidedly against bonding the city until such time as the citizens at a special election shall declare by their ballot their wish for it. And furthermore (if I am elected by the people to the office of councilman) I shall be their servant to do their bidding, and only by their wish expressed in this manner will I ever vote for the bonding of the city. If I go, it is because the people want me as their representative.

Use and Abuse of Cycling.

[From London Lancet:]

Those who believe in the necessity of physical exercise, and we belong to their number, have need also to remember that even so good a thing as this is in excess an evil. The use of the cycle is a form of bodily recreation in itself doubtless wholesome; none the less is it open to the mischievous effects of undue indulgence. Tempted by the ease of movement, combined, as a rule, with attractive scenery, every one tries it. Every one, too, finds he can do something with it, and considerations of weather, constitution, age and health are apt to be dismissed with summary imprudence. One fruitful source of injury is competition. In amateur races even the strongest rider can afford to ignore his limit of endurance. The record breaker, who sinks exhausted at his journey's end, has gone a pol t beyond this. The septuagenarian who tries to rival his juniors by doing and repeating his twenty or thirty miles, perhaps against time, is even less wise. Lady cyclists, too, may bear in mind that their sex is somewhat the weaker. So likewise among men the power of endurance varies greatly, and it is better for some to admit this and be moderate than to labor after the achievements of far more muscular neighbors. In short, whenever prostration beyond mere transient fatigue follows the exercise, or when digestion suffers and weight is markedly lessened, and a pastime which ought to exhilarate becomes an anxious labor, we may be sure that it is being overdone. He that would reap its best results must content himself with much less than this, but unless he can observe such moderation he had better abstain from it altogether.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. Theodore Vroom of Manning avenue, North Plainfield, is the happy father of a boy which was born Friday last.

The lecture on "America as seen through French Spectacles," delivered by Max O'Rell, netted the Hillside Tennis Club $190.

Mr. William J. Jukes has returned to his home in this city from Chicago where he went in the interest of the Scott Printing Press Company.

Among the many who attended the initial concert in America of the celebrated Pole, Ignace J. Paderewski, at Music Hall, New York, were Mrs. W. L. Patton of East Ninth street, this city. They express themselves as delighted with the famous pianist, as were all present.

The Y. M. C. A. District Convention will be held at Rahway, Nov. 20-23d. The following Plainfielders who have already signified their intention to be present will give information to all interested: W. D. Murray, E. L. Suffern, S. Cohoone, A. C. LaBoyteaux, Frederick Moon, J. A. Robinson, George S. Beebe, C. H. Lee and Frank Howland.

Lieut. Col. John E. Bryant will be one of the speakers at the men's meeting to be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. at the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday at 4.15 p. m. He served three years in the Union army during the late war, entered in the 8th Main Infantry and came out as Major and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel.

Pen Sketches From Life.

She was a benevolent, middle-aged lady, with the kindest face imaginable, and, as she smiled benignly down upon the ragged little newsboy his face grew bright.

In response to her query for papers his hand went with lightning rapidity to an inner pocket and drew out the two copies desired.

"Y' don't mind mam', does yer', ther' bein' folded inside out?" he asked anxiously, fumblingly handing them to her. "Yace" he continued "I doesn't fold them good yet."

How childlike! The poor boy.

"Why not at all, you poor child. Not in the least" and she, to satisfy him, thrust the papers in her hand-bag, and, with a parting smile, passed on.

The ragged little newsboy ran off loudly calling his papers.

The lady went home, fixed herself comfortably for an enjoyable, uninterrupted read—and then discovered that the papers were two months old.

A COUNTY CONFERENCE.

The Annual Meeting of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union.

The annual conference of the Union County Christian Endeavor Union will be held in the First Presbyterian church at Westfield, on Thursday evening, and promises to be a notable gathering for the young Christian workers. Five new societies have been admitted to the Union since its last meeting, the First Congregational and Second Presbyterian, of Elizabeth, Westfield Presbyterian, Warren Mission of North Plainfield, and Roselle Baptist.

Rev. A. V. Cadwell will welcome the delegates, and two addresses will be read. "What can this Society do for Sunday Schools?" is the title of a paper by Miss Grace M. Gilby, and Mr. S. A. VanDerveer of Elizabeth, will speak on "Men, Money and Missions." A feature of the service will be a question box, to be conducted by Rev. John T. Kerr.

The New Postal Cards.

The printing of the new postal cards, to be known as the "Indies' correspondence card," has begun on the postal card works at Shelton, Conn. A correspondent, who has examined the cards fresh from the press, says they are made of fine board, of color known as pearl gray, but which is in reality a very fine shade of drab. The printing on the reverse side is in rich blue ink. The cards will not be in circulation for some time yet, as about 25,000,000 will have to be printed and distributed to the sub-agencies before distribution is began.

REMEDIES FOR EMERGENCIES.

Pain Relieved and Dangers Easily Avoided in Accidental Cases

Every trade has its special physic. This is true. In conversation a few days ago a well-known surgeon remarked that few thing gave more pain, attended with so much danger, as some particles of dust in the eye.

"Such an accident, which is of daily occurrence, ought to be," he said, "attended with hardly any danger, as it is most easily treated. I will tell you how. You may not know that the final layer of the eyeball is almost pure lime. The plasterer stands upon a platform and lays on the paste. It falls upon him in every direction, and, especially if he is a new hand, often a splatter falls right into his eye. Now, he gets accustomed to the work the eyelid seems to get used to it, too, and seems to close automatically in self-defence.

As soon as such an accident occurs a fellow-workman takes a mouthful of water from the mixing pail—and it needs be always a pail of water handy—opens the eye as wide as possible and squirts with all his force the contents of his mouth against the eyeball. This immediately cools the lime and drives it out of the eye. Simple remedy, isn't it, and eminently practical? But, you see, a man's eye would be burnt out long before he could reach the nearest doctor."

A wine merchant said:

"My cellarman have a queer way of stopping bleeding. They think nothing of it if a cut finger or hand, or even of a large wound. They run to the nearest spirit, or clearet if spirits are not handy, and let a few drops fall on the wound. It acts as an immediate styptic. Then a big, dusty old cobweb is taken from the nearest bottle or corner of a bin and clapped on tight over the cut or abrasion. Cobwebs are splendid healing agents."

VARIETY OF TRADES.

"Sailors," said another, "are never at a loss under such circumstances. Their favorite styptic at sea is a bit of unraveled tarred rope. On land they will take the quid of tobacco from their mouth, or the lining of their cap, and its effect is astonishing. But I have seen a man get perfectly intoxicated after such a quid has been tied over a wound. I suppose the nicotine gets into the blood and acts as an intoxicant."

"Carpenters," said a large employer, "if they cut themselves, pick up a handful of fine shavings and clap them on the wound, and cabinet-makers brush over a dab of glue."

But one of the quaintest things I ever saw used was by an old farmer up in Chester. He got his hand badly torn by a bit of old wire fence, and it bled considerably. Without a thought he stooped down and dug up a handful of soil, spat on it and worked it quickly into a paste and laid it on the the wound and bound it up with handkerchief. In an astonishing short time he was at work again as if nothing had happened."

It is said, too, that the nap of an old silk or beaver hat is a capital styptic for burns and scalds. It placed over the wound in sufficient quantity to keep out the air it will draw out the heat rapidly, as any hat manufacturer will vouch.—EX.

The Figure Nine.

1x9- 9
2x9-18
3x9-27
4x9-36
5x9-45
6x9-54
7x9-63
8x9-72
9x9-81
10x9-90

Now, do you see in the 10 column that it runs, reading down, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and reading up in the unit column it is 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and another curious fact is that the two columns when added make 9; 1 and 8, 2 and 7, etc.

—Take out your watch and see how many seconds it will take you to rattle off the following: "A big black bug, spit black blood, on a big barn floor," and "Eight apes gray, geese, gazing gladly into Greece."

—The ordinary pine toothpicks, such as are frequently found at hotels and restaurants, are said to be injurious. They contain, says a physician, a quantity of crude turpentine, and its base tendency to irritate the gums, causing soreness.

—The Flemington express, drawn by engine No. 371, is about the longest regular train on the Central road for Jersey City. As a rule it is composed of six passenger cars, one smoker, and in the rear the club car "Howard" from Plainfield.

—Counterfeiters have by chemical aid split $1 and $5 bills, pasted the backs of the ones to the faces of the fives, and vice versa, so that by laying the big side up they have usually passed bills without question. Look out for bills with a fine hair line through them.

—It costs something to live and a good deal to die. Some one estimates that getting born costs the people of the United States $250,000,000 annually; getting married $300,000,000, and getting buried, $750,000,000. It might be added that the latter item costs the people of the United States more than $900,000,000 annually.

EDITORIAL NOTES

About Our Debts.

Superintendent Porter of the eleventh census contributes a paper to The North American Review on the subject of the American people's debts, though unfortunately he does not tell us how to pay them. He insists, however, that the addition of mortgage indebtedness statistics to the census will have a wholesome effect on the national mind, in that it will call attention to the subject and enable both corporations and individuals to see how much more or less they are in debt than they were ten and twenty years ago and thus stimulate them to make an effort to get out.

The states have reason to felicitate themselves. We find from an exhibit published by Mr. Porter that the state debts of the Union amounted to nine dollars per capita for the whole country in 1870. In 1880 the sum had declined to six dollars per capita, while in 1890 it shrank three dollars. It may be that the figures here are so small that some of the states may be tempted to jump into debt again. The per capita debt of all kinds—state, city, county and national—was in 1870 $84.94 per head. In 1890 it is $32.55.

There are debt making and debt paying periods, Mr. Porter finds. We have had repeatedly "almost crazes of going into debt," and these have been followed by periods of retrenchment and reform. Everything moves in waves. Beginning in 1830 the states had their fever of internal improvements, and so high did the impulse run that in some cases public improvements far in advance of the requirements of the population were ordered. The state debt epidemic reached its culmination in 1842, when seven of the strongest states in the Union staggered on the verge of bankruptcy. From 1870 to 1877 came the municipal improvement craze, and the per capita debt of cities doubled between 1870 and 1880, and, like the state debts before it, went far in advance of the population. The last decade the country over has been one of retrenchment and debt paying. Mr. Porter calls attention to the fact, however, that debt is not always a sign of financial depression. On the contrary, it is frequently a sign of prosperity, since a sound basked business men and corporations frequently increase their working capital by borrowing when they are certain that very act will bring them larger returns.

As to mortgages, abstracts of 9,000,000 mortgages are now on file in the census department. The cost $1,000,000 to collect mortgage statistics, which sum would have paid off a good many of them.

Educational Campaigns.

"Educational campaigns" is a favorite phrase in the months of writers and speakers, used in reference to the political contests of the past two or three years. Political campaigns might be educational, and as a matter of fact always would be, only for the unfairness of the human mind where its interests or prejudices are concerned. All may be fair in love and war, but all is not fair in the field of argument and opinion, far from it.

Whichever side of a question an arguer is on, he ought to know that one of the first rules of logic is to concede to the opposing side all the facts that fairly belong to it, with their proper inferences. But the style of political argument too much in vogue in the campaign just passed has been to seize on two facts that exist side by side and claim one as the consequence of the other. It is as if the logician should say, "A horse has four legs, there are four legs, therefore a table is a horse."

If the cause of university extension advances in America as is expected, then we may hope in time to hear orators that are fair in argument, letting facts go for what they are worth and knowing how to use them. Then political campaigns will indeed be educational. The man who distorts facts has a graver responsibility to shoulder than he perhaps thinks. What mankind needs most for the progress of the race is to get rid of prejudice, and not twist facts to the sole of their passions or interests. The man who knowingly appeals to ignorance or prejudice among the masses tempers does incalculable injury.

Therefore don't rise above party, but be fair and square in argument.

Would it not seem strange to have an American pope? It is a fact that Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, is among those seriously mentioned as a candidate for the papal succession in case of the death of Leo XIII, who is eighty-one years old and feeble. In case of his election to the pontificate Cardinal Gibbons would undoubtedly represent the liberal spirit and policy which has characterized the present papal administration in dealing with the great social questions of the time. And he would be quite untrammeled in political complications that might arise in Europe. But an American in the papal chair would make the pilgrim fathers turn over in their graves.

AN ALLIANCE SCANDAL

A Trust Said to Control Its State Agents.

SECRETARY TILLMAN BACKS DOWN

It Is Alleged That He Went to the Convention Determined to Attack the Third Party Movement, but Altered His Print ed Speech Through Fear.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 18.—A sensational scandal in connection with the Farmers Alliance has developed here. Kelly, of New York, charges that a ring has been formed by the state agents of the Alliance of the jute trust, the Union Cordage company and the National union. The jute trust controls the raw material from which cotton baggins, the binding twine and other products which should be more in interested is made, and the Union Cordage company controls the manufactured product. Kelly says that the state agents have entered into a combine with these two senses of the farmers to control the Alliance and that the scheme has been working for some time. Kelly proposes to bring the matter before the council and demand an investigation.

Wilson Suggests Blackmail.

State Agent Wilson, of New York, in an interview said he did not know on what Kelly based his charges, but he had been credibly informed that Kelly had approached members of the National union and intimated that he could be induced to withhold the publication if given the proposed scandal. The Alliance leaders say that an investigation will be made if there appears any evidence whatever upon which to base it.

The Third Party Movement.

The third party sentiment is believed to be growing. Secretary Tillman even is said to have fallen a victim to the prevalent contagion. He came here with his address already printed.

Not a Third Party.

In a speech sent out before the meeting Secretary Tillman said that he was not here in the interest of any third party, nor to promote the fortunes of any political organization. He called attention to the so called "billion dollar congress," which had expended, he said, an amount equal to sixty dollars a day since the birth of Christ.

He said the tariff must come down to a reasonable basis of taxation, and reckless expenditure must stop, or they would change the personnel of every congress. Two sets of initial letters—L. and C. comprise the unwritten oath of the Alliance—"unprotected labor, capital crush, change and control, and they must crush the trust by a change in the tariff and control of transportation.

Tillman fell with a number of the most prominent advocates of the third party, and when he delivered his address a ruthless reference to them, and their policy during the late session into political pie was studiously omitted. After the address was delivered he revised the copies which had been given out, and made them conform to the utterances of the meeting. Some of the Alliance men believe that he was afraid that he would make enemies and jeopardize his re-election if he delivered the address as prepared, but others think that he has been converted to the third party idea.

To Forge Ranks and Ioggle.

In conclusion Tillman said: "We are going to succeed in our efforts to obtain a large circulating medium. We must have more currency, and will have it. The farmer north, who wore the blue, has reached the south and taken the southern farmer, who wore the gray, by the hand and said to him, 'We have never asked you to surrender to king monopoly and partial legislation, but only to preserve the Union alike good for all; and no more will you ever surrendered to such circumstances.

"Sectional strife and partisan prejudice are buried face downward to scratch on to Hades. And the politician who raises such issues in the future will go like Wade Hampton and John J. Ingalls.

A Non-Partisan Organization.

"The Farmers' Alliance is now in co-operation near 400,000, and it has come to stay and will be held intact as a non-partisan organization. Members of all political parties may join the organization and it will never become a third political party. There is big political significance in it, but purely political significance, because that would spell hopeless ruin. We have already taken party extremes out of the United States, made a few governors and four senators, a congressman and bid fair for 200 next year."

Addresses were also made by General Weaver, Congressman Jerry Simpson, President Wilson, of the Kansas Alliance, and others.

President Polk's Address.

President Polk in his annual address reviewed the financial history of the country, saying that the gross inequalities and discriminations against them had caused a rapid decline in agriculture. The demands of the farmers, he said, were for more currency, government control of the railroads, retention of public domain for the people, prohibition of gambling in futures, free coinage of silver by the United States government, direct vote, a graduated income tax, abrogation of all the abolition of the national banking system.

National Grange Officers.

SPRINGFIELD, O., Nov. 18.—The National Grange elected the following officers: Master, J. H. Brigham, Ohio; overseer, E. W. Davis, Canada; lecturer, Mrs. Mary Whitehead, New Jersey; secretary, M. E. Page, Missouri; assistant, O. E. Hall, Nebraska; executive committee, Mc Daniel, New Jersey; John Trimble, Missouri; John T. Tribble, West Virginia; Jesse J. Hilborn, Texas; Mrs. Mary Ann Bowen, Connecticut. The master's salary was fixed at $500 and expenses, and the secretary's at $1,200.

Governor-elect Flower Receives.

ALBANY, Nov. 18.—Governor-elect Flower held an informal reception in the executive chamber this afternoon, together with Governor Hill. All the state officers and their deputies paid their respects and were presented to Governor-elect. The governor-elect was very happy in his personal remarks, and everybody had a kind word for him. He said there was no political significance in his visit.

Morrison Succeeds Lindsay.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 18.—State Treasurer Boyer has appointed John P. Morrison to be cashier of the treasury, vice William Lindsay, resigned.

SCHULTEIS AT WASHINGTON.

He Proposes to Show Up the Evils of Immigration.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Immigration Commissioner Schulteis, who came over in the Servia's steerage and made such sensational statements about the violation of law that he saw, has gone to report to the treasury department and to congress the same state of facts which, as he charged, his fellow commissioner, Colonel Weber, prevented him from fully establishing by examination at the Barge office. To-morrow this means the commissioner hopes to awaken the people of the whole country, as he puts it, to the existence of such evils as he declares he found in the steerage of the Servia.

Agent Brown, of the Cunard steamship line, has investigated Schulteis' charge. He has issued the following card:

No person has made any charges to us showing any immoralities to have occurred among the passengers of the Servia. If any such charges or facts had been brought to our notice we should at once have investigated them in the most thorough manner and should have taken such action against the wrong-doers, if any. We will now now without the slightest delay if any person will assume the responsibility of making charges.

A person named Schulteis has apparently furnished to the newspapers a statement of alleged occurrences upon the Servia on her passage to this port.

If he has any such charges to make we invite him to make them, so that they may be immediately investigated by ourselves and by the commissioner of immigration.

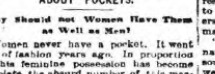
We know beforehand that this man expected to come on the Servia under some disguise, and we have reason to believe that he is simply working for sensational notoriety. He was present at the inspection of the Servia's passengers, and made some complaints which Colonel Weber, the commissioner, dismissed at once. In one instance he charged a poor Swedish girl with immorality, who satisfied the commissioner that the charge was false.

Why Lillie Mackey Killed Herself.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 18.—The mystery which surrounded the death of Lillie Mackey has been cleared up. Physicians testified at the inquest that strychnine was found in the stomach and that she was approaching maternity. Miss Rose, a cousin, testified that Lillie had confided to her on Sunday evening the secret of her betrayal by a young man named Hinnebaugh, declaring that nothing was left her but death.

Kisses Brought Diphtheria.

CHATHAM, N. J., Nov. 18.—Diphtheria has become epidemic at Chatham for some time. Many people believe that the disease was brought to Chatham by a lady who contracted diphtheria in Brooklyn. When she came home she greeted her lady friends with affectionate kisses. Some of them began to complain of sore throats soon after and later diphtheria set in.



ABOUT POCKETS.

Why Should not Women Have Them as Well as Men?

Women never have a pocket. It went out of fashion years ago. In proportion as this feminine possession has become obsolete, the absurd number of this masculine luxury has been steadily increasing. With twenty-five gowns in a feminine outfit there is not one pocket. In ten suits of clothes in a masculine wardrobe there are about 175 pockets. There have been times when man has been known to regret the possession of pockets and to regard them as a highly inconvenient affair. Women have a way of searching through masculine pockets for letters they are only half-expecting to find. Sometimes they find them. Then there is trouble. It may be only the letter she gave him to mail a few weeks ago, and it may be some other letter. In either case the position is awkward for him, and he is apt to regret having pockets.

Woman has been steadily retrograding since she relinquished her title to this highly convenient affair. In the mass of drapery and the paraphernalia of straps, purses, cushions, and so on, into which she was for many years harnessed, the pocket became a superfluity from its very unreachable nature, and was finally abolished.

Is it not time that it be introduced again?

SOME FREAKS OF FASHION.

This a Year for Scarlet—The Marie Antoinette Costumes Again in Vogue.

What a year it is for scarlet! You see a bit of the brilliant color fluttering from inside the smart tailor coat or bodice, in the plaitings of the full skirt, in the vest. It in hats, and sometimes on darting maids in jackets, and now we are to have it in the traditional Red Riding Hood caps of scarlet the most vivid and cloth the finest in quality.

The modes of the imperious but unfortunate Marie Antoinette are leading a picturesque element to winter soirees. Her restored brocades are the most beautiful in design, and her stately style of dress has been the artistic study of the season's favorites. But more universal than either is the fichu. This dainty affair is of chiffon, made very long and bordered with a full frill of silk lace. This turns over, and the fichu is tied round the bodice, the long ends falling lightly in front. For another bit of feminine adornment are we indebted to the unhappy lady, and that is a square handkerchief of chiffon simply hemmed to the depth of one and one-half inches, or having a wide inter woven satin border, which is loosely tied about the low-necked bodice.

In a shop window are boldly displayed the patent artificial hips that the close-fitting skirt has called into being. They are of rubber, filled with air, and fit snugly inside the corset so closely as to defy detection. But if you should see a woman with an abnormal hip development on one side all out of proportion to the other you may know that she is not a subject for orthopedic surgery, but simply the victim of her milliner's art, and that some depraved pin has pierced the hip pad and allowed it air to escape.

Velvet Flowers for Trimming.

Velvet flowers are to be much used during the Winter season. They make a becoming trimming, and as they are made up only in the shapes of flowers we are naturally have petals with rich soft coloring, they are a great success. In single details shapes they are very effective and graceful and unobtrusive, and may be adapted in a way that was impossible with the stiff, double artificial dahlia of old times.

FOSTER'S SILVER VIEWS.

Why He Objects to Free Silver Coinage.

PARITY COULD NOT BE SUSTAINED

He Thinks That the Present Law Does Very Well, and Throws Cold Water on a Scheme of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The one hundred and twenty-third annual dinner of the chambes of commerce was held at Delmonico's last evening. The large dining hall in Delmonico's presented a beautiful picture when the dinner commenced, the decorations being very elaborate. Covers were laid for 332 guests. Charles S. Smith, president of the chamber, presided. At the speakers' table were Secretary of the Treasury Foster, Hon. Carl Schurz, Bishop Potter, Hon. William L. Wilson, General John M. Schofield, Rev. Charles A. Briggs, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Hon. John Bigelow, Samuel D. Babcock, Hon. Edward S. Lacey, Hon. Frank Hiscock, Edward C. Leech, David M. Stone, General O. O. Howard, Hon. Enoch L. Fancher, Captain Henry Erben, U. S. N., and Thomas H. Carter.

Secretary Foster Speaks.

President Smith introduced Hon. Charles Foster, secretary of the treasury, who spoke as follows: "To maintain parity between gold and silver is the fixed policy of the government, because we all recognize the supreme importance. But when we come to the question of what policy is the best to pursue to maintain this desired position, serious differences of opinion arise. We are compelled to admit that we have learned something by the experience of the last sixteen years on the subject of silver.

Gold Too Narrow a Basis.

"It is now agreed on all sides that gold alone furnishes too narrow a basis upon which to conduct the money affairs of the world. Fifteen years ago people who were supposed to understand the question of finance indulged in the prophecy as to the fall that would follow the coinage of 4,500,000 silver dollars per month. The need for the measure, I confess, with great misgiving. I now say frankly that if it had been proposed to coin 300,000,000 of silver dollars in twelve and a half years I should have voted no. Yet we have coined not only 300,000,000, but have reached the sum of over 400,000,000. We have besides purchased $20,000,000 of silver bullion at equal values and paid for it with an issue of 70,000,000 of new treasury notes and yet the parity is maintained. [Applause.]

Parity Cannot Be Maintained.

"The question to consider now is what policy will result in the least strain on our resources and will require the least resort to the exercise of those extraordinary powers conferred on those in authority to maintain the parity of gold and silver?

"The parity, I believe, is a power natural and conferred, with all of our resources employed to their fullest extent, we cannot maintain the parity of the two metals if the policy of free coinage of silver is to prevail. [Applause.]

"I am firmly of the opinion that the parity of the two metals can be maintained under the present policy. The preponderating indications are that the balance of trade with foreign nations for the next two years at least will require gold shipments to us to pay the balance in our favor of $400,000,000 of silver to be purchased at its value in new treasury notes. Under such conditions the parity of the two metals will be maintained without the exercise of the extraordinary resources of power. Even if the balance of trade should turn against us, which seems to me impossible, I believe we would weather the storm and preserve parity.

Under Free Coinage.

"But under free coinage silver would take the place of gold in settling balances. If the price of silver were advanced from less than $1 an ounce to $1.29, all the silver for sale in the world would be directed to this country. To maintain a parity under such conditions would be a task requiring more than our vast resources.

"In my opinion the practical question for you to consider is which of these two policies do you prefer? I know you have expressed a desire for the repeal of the present law, and, as I understand it, you do not propose to substitute a law of any kind. You propose that silver should take care of itself. I have not given much thought to this phase of the subject, because I don't believe congress will indorse your views. But I think I can see clearly that the government could go out of the market the price will decline—perhaps it will be a large decline—in which case it seems that the task of maintaining the parity will be greatly increased and difficult.

A Larger Use of Silver.

"Believing that the good sense of the business world in the near future must be brought into harmony with us in the proposition that gold alone is too narrow a base on which to build the world's financial structure, I have much hope that the better judgment of all concerned will result in a better and more extended use of silver, to be followed by international agreements by which the parity of the two metals may be maintained." [Applause.]

Bishop Potter, Congressman Wilson, Professor Briggs, Chauncey M. Depew, Erastus Wimas and others also spoke.

A Druggist Pays $4,000 for a Mistake.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 18.—Edward J. Price was successful in his suit against Druggist Charles R. Avery, of Fourth place, this city. He sued him for $10,000 damages and got $4,000. His complaint was that he was almost killed by medicine which one of Avery's clerks put up by mistake.

ALMY LOSES HIS HEAD.

He Weeps When Christie Warden's Mother Testifies.

BRAVE FANNY TELLS HER STORY.

Almy Shot at Her Three Times but Failed to Kill Her—Relatives of the Murdered Girl Say She and Almy Were Never Left Alone but Once.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 18.—The immense amount of interest taken in the atrocious murder of Christie Warden, and the fate of her murderer, was shown by the enormous crowd that packed the court room when the trial opened. Even the hallways were packed, while those who failed to get in the building at all lingered around outside. County Solicitor Mitchell opened for the prosecution. He said he proposed to prove deliberate murder on the part of the prisoner.

Mrs. Warden on the Stand.

At the conclusion of Mr. Mitchell's argument Mrs. Warden took the stand and was sworn. Her testimony of what happened on the night of the shooting was substantially the same as that already published. She then went on to tell of the home life at the farm of Almy and Christie. The prisoner, she said, had always maintained the wonderful nerve for which he has become noted, broke down completely during Mrs. Warden's recital of the facts, covered his face with his hands and sobbed quite audibly.

"Please Tell It All."

As Mrs. Warden continued Almy leaped forward and cried out in a voice shaken by emotion, "Oh, Mrs. Warden, please tell it all!" Mr. Burley, of his counsel, restrained him, and Mrs. Warden's examination was continued without interruption. She told of the friendly relations existing between her daughter and Almy. As both had a taste for literature and poetry, they often read together and that they frequently exchanged presents. The family, however, never allowed them to be alone together. Mrs. Warden said she did not believe then that Almy was forming an attachment for Christie. She had seen nothing in Almy's attentions to her daughter indicating a desire to make the latter his wife. The family, she continued, would not have approved of any attempt at courtship.

Brave Fanny Testifies.

Fanny Warden, sister of the dead girl, then took the stand, and in relating the story of the murder she said that Almy had fired three shots at her and finally dragged Christie away from her, pulling the latter through the fence bars by her skirts. When Christie's body was found, she was lying on her back with her legs crossed. Miss Warden said she found her sister's dress skirt and underskirt off and lying at some distance from the body. These garments were here produced and shown to Judge Hazen, sitting with

A HUNTER'S TERRIBLE FIGHT.

Lum Williams' White Shooting Spectacles Attacked by Wildcats.

Recently, while Lum Williams of Lockawaxen was hunting at a place called Panther Knob, the dogs he had with him suddenly began to bark furiously.

"What has got to where the dogs were he found them barking at one end of a long hollow log. The log was very rotten, and the cavity in it over a foot across. He thought it queer that neither of the dogs would go in the log to rout out the game, as they never hesitated to go into one before. Still, it soon occurred to him that the game might not be a coon or a fox. He got a long pole and poked in the hollow, but it was not long enough to reach the supposed coon or fox. Then Lum discovered that there was a long crack near one side of the log, and he made up his mind that he could get a pry in that crack, split the log, and then get at the game.

"He found a heavy cudgel of oak, and inserting it in the crack, pried down a little. The log not only split, but it came in two so suddenly that it startled Lum. He came somewhat, though, startled him a great deal more. Instead of a coon or a fox, out leaped three wildcats. Two of them sprang straight for Lum and the third paid its attention to the dogs. Lum mechanically struck at the wildcats with the heavy cudgel, and hit one of them a powerful blow in the head, which knocked it back, stunned. The other one sprang upon him and caught him just below the left shoulder with its teeth, and planted its long claws in the arm at the same time, ripping off the flesh from the shoulder to the wrist. Lum succeeded in tearing the wildcat loose, and threw it some feet away. The other one had recovered from the effects of Lum's blow, and sprang once more in the attack, the wildcat Lum had shaken loose leaping once again at him at the same time. Lum aimed another blow at the beast, without effect, as the beast brushed it back, but the second one planted both claws in his face and ripped the skin and flesh off back of both ears. By this time the dogs came to his master's aid. He seized the wildcat by the flank, and succeeded in pulling it off of Lum. The dog and wildcat rolled together on the ground, and Lum, with blood streaming from his lacerated face and arm, pitched in to finish the wildcat while the dog was worrying it. He got in a blow that broke the wildcat's back, and another blow smashed its head. But when the dog had been disembowelled by the terrible claws of his antagonist, and was dead.

"By this time the wildcat Lum had twice hit with his club recovered again, and promptly renewed the combat. He managed to leap upon Lum, clutching him in the thigh and ripping the clothing and flesh off near to the calf. Then Lum got in another blow with his club, knocking the wildcat to the ground again. Before it could get up he smashed its head and killed it.

"Having killed two of the foes beside, Lum turned his attention to the latter. He found it and his other dog lying dead together, the dog's teeth fastened in the wildcat's throat and the latter's weak with loss of blood by this time that he fainted. He was found by a man named Peters and taken home. So lay between life and death for a week, but at the end of that got out he was unrecognizable to his acquaintance and a cripple, which he always will be."—N. Y. Sun.

A Dying Wife Fights Her Rival.

About fifteen years ago Isaac Martin and wife were the parents and occupants of a farm in North Carolina. In their merry home they found prosperity and happiness. Several years ago, however, the wife learned of an escapade of her husband's in the old country, in which he had wronged a flaxen haired beauty named Susan Bamblett. She grieved over it, and finally when, a few months ago, she was dying, she called her husband and made him promise to look up the girl, marry her, and let her live with him in honor during the years that might be left her.

After the funeral Harkins wrote home, making inquiries. His mother, learning that it was poverty and woe who had wronged the girl, had kept her as a daughter. It was arranged that Susan, with her child, a bright girl of fifteen, should cross the ocean and meet Harkins at Charleston. There the wrong was righted, and Susan, as his wife, is now on the way to her new home, while the child has at last met her father.

The Bear Killed Her.

Recently Miss Likens, who resides a few miles south of Shawsville, Va., went out to gather berries on the mountain side, near her home.

On her not returning by dinner-time the suspicions of the family were aroused, and a party was formed to go in search of her.

After being out some time a large bear was discovered a few miles from her home, perched upon one of the lower branches of a large tree, while the outlines of a woman could be indistinctly observed on the ground.

On the party fired on Bruin, who dropped dead to the ground.

On arriving at the base of the tree, where the bear had been killed, the body of Miss Likens was found. It was terribly mutilated and every evidence went to show that the unfortunate victim had first been squeezed to death by the bear and then partly devoured.

Killed By a Vicious Mason.

On October 26, James Miller, a prominent citizen of Bergen, a little town near Corning, N. Y. purchased a horse from a drove of western horses which were sold by auction in that place. Miller led the animal to his barn. Beane name afterwards a man passing the barn heard groans, and he found Miller lying on the ground in the rear of the barn and the horse tramping fiercely about in the barnyard. Miller was carried into the house. His right thigh and three ribs were broken, and there were bad bruises on other parts of his body. He died on Saturday. He was seventy-eight years old. It is believed that Miller was attacked by the horse while he was putting it in the barn, and that he was kicked over the barnyard fence by the vicious horse to the place where he was found, although the spot was fifteen feet from the barnyard.

Cut Off His Ten-foot Board.

Mr. Phil Ranson, the gentleman distinguished for having grown the longest beard in the world, found it so inconvenient and uncomfortable that he was induced to cut it off. A number of his friends had planned to place him in charge of the Mississippi department of the World's Exposition at Chicago, where it was presumed his remarkable beard would prove a striking feature in the attractions, and much regret is felt that he chose to relieve himself of that incumbrance. The beard was by actual measurement about ten feet long.—Corinth Herald.

A CRACK FIGHTER.

Amateur Callen, the Phenomenal Two-Handed Pugilist.

There is probably not a more scientific, gamey and clever pugilist in the amateur ring to-day than Mick Callen, the pride of the National Athletic Club of Brooklyn, N. Y.

MICK CALLEN.

The National's boxer is a well built lad, deep-chested, muscular, and as nimble and quick on his feet as a cat. He stands in his stocking feet about 5 feet 8 inches high. His legs are well formed and developed. His arms are massive pieces of sinew and muscle.

Callen's first engagement in the fistic arena was in Billy Madden's boxing tournament, held in Jersey City in 1887. His opponent was "Tip" Hennessy, whom he vanquished in three rounds. The same evening he was pitted against Jack Lyons, whom he defeated in three rounds.

He next made his appearance at the National Athletic Club's tournament in 1888, where he defeated Billy Curtis in three rounds, but was subsequently beaten by Jim Kane, the same evening, by Mike McAuliffe, his old and bitter rival.

Since that time he has engaged in probably over ten contests, in all of which, if not the victor, he, at least, made a draw with his opponent.

The fight which occurred recently at the Yacona Boat Club's tournament in Brooklyn, N. Y., between Callen and McAuliffe, was the most exciting event that ever took place in Brooklyn. It was given to Callen.

Negotiations are now pending for a special "go" between Pat Cahill, of the Scottish-American A. C., of Jersey City, and Callen. If the match is a success, and the man face each other in the ring, it will in all probability be the most exciting contest that ever stirred amateur boxing circles.

HORSE NOTES.

J. Dwyer has sold Dashing Belle, formerly Refraction filly, to D. J. Ruppert for $7,500.

According to the will of the late William L. Scott, all of the thoroughbred horses on the Algonac Stock Farm, will be sold at Tattersall's, New York city, in October, 1892. The sale comprises four stallions, including the famous Rayon d'Or, for which Mr. Scott paid $40,000; eighty-three brood mares, forty-six this year's colts, and a number of yearlings.

The Belle Meade stud lost recently by death the weanling bay colt by Iroquois—Ben Pelleman, by imp. Great Tom, a full brother to Tulla Blackburn and to Maxeon Daly's great two-year-old Tammany. As the latter colt has won over $80,000 in stakes before this year, and Tulla Blackburn has followed up last season's successful winnings with another fairly brilliant, the loss of the young mare is a thing in the neighborhood of $8,000 to his owner.

Marion C., the crack performer of the Western Division in the all-age class, and one of the best-looking gentlemen's hacks in the neighborhood of Chicago, is the property of Mr. Charles Hamlin, of Chicago. There the wrong was righted, and Susan, as his wife, is now on the way to her new home, while the child has at last met her father.

VARIOUS VERSES.

Two Hypocrites.

I.

She sat in her cosy chamber,
With the curtains all drawn tight,
Curled up in a great big rocker
Fair and sweet in the soft lamp light.
A hundred box on the table
With choicest of sweets was filled,
Which she daintily nibbled while writing
The words that her lover thrilled:

"Oh, I long for you now, my darling!
Without you my life seems dreary;
There is never a bit of comfort
For me unless you are near!"

II.

And her lover read the letter
As he sat in his bachelor's den,
With his feet cocked up on the mantel,
In the usual way of men.
With a box of cigars at his elbow
And a pipe and a glass near by,
And the smoke circling around above him
As he echoed her lonely cry:

"Oh, I long for you now, my darling!
Without you my life seems dreary:
There is never a bit of comfort
For me unless you are near."

Fair and Yet Unfair.

Belle all other girls transcended,
Loveliest creature of her genus,
Never clothes-rack could be lended
To suggest a perfect Venus.

Winningest of Love's sweet teachers!
Eyes she had with depths entrancing,
Exquisitely rounded features,
Lips her siren spell enhancing.

Fascination's rapt enchainer!
Every glance of hers enthused me!
Yet was never such a strainer
Than was Belle when she refused me.

Jiggers.

She has a cunning habit,
That of calling people "Jiggers!"
She knows everything as "Jiggers"—
Many dear pets, canes and teddy,
Everything and everybody
Treasure, house, dog and buggy
Are by her termed "Jiggers."

When she feels inclined to say,
In her artless, offlike way,
"Papa's socks will soon fit Willie,"
She could never find a name
As to really mention those
Useful garments known as hose;
But of course she knows the phrases
And for "socks" she says "Jiggers."
How to stop it I have figured,
But must give it up—I'm jiggered.

ENTRANCING A WITNESS.

But There Was a Loophole, and Out He Went in Good Shape.

A case was being tried in a country court. A horse had been stolen from a pasture, and the evidence all pointed to a certain doubtful character of the neighborhood as the culprit. Though his guilt seemed clear he had found a lawyer to undertake his defense. At the trial the defendant's attorney expended his energies in trying to confuse and frighten the opposing witnesses, especially a certain farmer whose testimony was particularly damaging. The lawyer kept up a fire of questions, asking many foolish ones and repeating himself again and again, in the hope of decoying the witness into a contradiction.

"You say," the lawyer went on, "that you can swear to having seen this man drive a horse past your farm on the day in question."

"I can," replied the witness wearily, for he had already answered the question a dozen times.

"What time was this?"

"I told you it was about the middle of the forenoon."

"But I want any 'abouts' or any 'middles.' I want you to tell the jury the exact time."

"Why," said the farmer, "I don't always carry a gold watch with me when I'm digging potatoes."

"But you have a clock in the house, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what time was it by that?"

"Why, by that clock it was just nineteen minutes past 10."

"You were in the field all the morning?" went on the lawyer, smiling suggestively.

"I was."

"How far from the house is this field?"

"About half a mile."

"You swear, do you, that by the clock in your house it was exactly nineteen minutes past 10?"

"I do."

The lawyer paused and looked triumphantly at the jury, at last he had entrapped the witness into a contradictory statement that would greatly weaken his testimony.

"I think that will do," he said, with a wave of his hand. "I am quite through with you."

The farmer leisurely picked up his hat and started to leave the witness stand. Then, turning slowly about, he added, "I ought, perhaps, to say that too much reliance should not be placed upon that clock, as it got out of gear about six months ago, and it's been nineteen minutes past 10 ever since."—Philadelphia Times.

It Was Not Put Up.

At 11 o'clock the other night I passed down Twenty-third street just as a policeman was rescuing a forlorn looking chap out of a public shed-way, whose he had been taking a nap. The man had nothing to say for two or three minutes as we walked on, but he finally got his head hunched up his shoulders, shivered in a vigorous manner and said:

"You saw it all, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Saw him slam me around, knock my head against the wall and club me over the head?"

"Yes."

"Believe it was real, don't you?"

"Of course. Why shouldn't I?"

"Well, I didn't know but what you'd think, when I came to ask you for ten cents to get a bed with, that the officer and I had put up a job to make a nickel apiece out of you!"—New York Evening World.

Colonel Bob's Advice.

Everybody knows how busy Colonel Bob Ingersoll is, but everybody does not know that, no matter how busy he may be, he has always a moment or so to spare to give advice to the young. Quite a number of letters come to him every week, soliciting knowledge on almost every subject. Recently one of these letters came to him when he was head and heels in work. It began, "Dear Sir—I am broken hearted"—Colonel Bob hadn't time to read more, but he managed to return a prompt reply. He wrote:

"MY DEAR BOY—In a month from now you will feel only half broken hearted. In six months you won't feel broken hearted at all and in a year you will probably be engaged to some other girl."—New York Advertiser.

A Desirable Quality.

Who is Fannie Wilson of Liberty Corner?

A handsome and stylishly dressed young woman applied at the Second precinct police station at Newark last evening for a night's lodging. She said she was Fannie Wilson of Liberty Corner, N. J. When she was talking with the officer in charge she became ill, and said she had taken laudanum. She was hurried off the City Hospital and placed in a doctor's care. A little later she was sent back to the Second precinct station. She refused to say why she swallowed the drug.

Rev. Arthur C. Dill, the persecuted Sterling pastor, has come to reside here. He will devote his time to literary pursuits and give up the pulpit for a while.

ALL A PART OF A SCHEME

THE DANGER PLAINFIELD IS REALLY IN.

Let No One Be Deceived.—There is No Getting Around These Facts.—They But Correspond with Everything Else the Combine Has Done.

The opportunity for a big steal in the Sewerage Contract, as now endeavored to be forced upon the city by the combine, is really worse than most people imagine, for it only requires that three of the arbitrators shall agree upon the price that the city shall pay, and the city must buy within ninety days at the price fixed. It goes without saying that the two arbitrators chosen by the Sewerage Company will demand as high a price as they can possibly get, and all that will be required to defraud the city is to find one man among the other arbitrators who can be bought to vote with them.

The city has no option in the matter. The people will be powerless to prevent it. The provision is mandatory. The city must consummate the purchase within ninety days from the time that a price is agreed upon by three of the arbitrators.

Voters had better think of this before it is too late—three men are to have the power to name the sum that the city shall be required to pay for Mr. Low's Sewerage System, and only one of the three shall represent the city!

And when the amount is fixed, bonds will be issued with which to pay, the combine's cry to the contrary at this time being mere pretense. The city is really in great danger from these politicians. We saw the danger two years ago, when the combine was first formed and we have fought in the interest of the people ever since. The day is less than two weeks off when the people must act for themselves, at the polls.

INCENDIARIES AT WORK.

A Barn Consumed and Three Horses Burned to Death.

At an early hour this morning the frame barn belonging to Mr. Joel Giddis was discovered to be afire. A neighbor who saw the flames aroused Mr. Giddis and then attempted to save the horses which were stabled in the building, but the flames had gained too much headway and three horses, together with several tons of hay, several tons of hay, wagons, etc, were consumed. The fire was of incendiary origin.

Mr. Giddis estimates his loss at about $1,500 and is insured for about $700.

An Enjoyable Evening.

Atlas Lodge, No. 135, F. and A. M., of Westfield held its regular communication on Monday evening. The occasion was one of more than ordinary interest, as the third degree was conferred on Edward L. Haun of Scotch Plains, and large numbers of visiting brethren were present from neighboring towns. A bountiful collation was served during the exercises under the direction of Mine Host Coonan of the Westfield Hotel, and unrestricted enjoyment and good fellowship prevailed as only they prevailed at Masonic gatherings. Among those present were Worshipful Master W. J. Ford, Past W. M. Yeager, and Bros. John L. Blackford, T. J. Flannery, and others of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 26 of this city; L. J. Jackson, of Northampton Lodge, No. 26, Va.; E. D. Miller, Corinthian Lodge, No. 57, Orange, N. J.; Wm. Campbell, Acanthus Lodge, No. 709, Brooklyn, N. Y., and many others.

He Took the Duck.

A tame duck was ambling along at Neshanic a few days ago when a Plainfield merchant who had gone to that village hunting for rabbits, espied it. He had seen no rabbits and was on the point of returning home when he espied the poor harmless duck. Of course the duck is not now in the land of the living. It is said that the owner of the duck has since visited Plainfield and compelled the would-be hunter to pay a good price for his day's sport.

Rainbow Festival.

The social committees of the three Christian Endeavor Societies of New Market and Dunellen have arranged a festival to be held in the basement of the Dunellen Presbyterian Church this evening. Supper will be served and there's no reason to doubt that the supper will be something very fine and as to the sociability of our young people, who does not know what good times they have?

C. B. L. Convention.

The State convention of the Catholic Beneficial League is to be held at Paterson next Tuesday. The delegates from Council in this city are Messrs P. Casey and James Connecly.

"Esmeralda" at the Casino To-night.

A brilliant assemblage will greet the talented amateurs who will appear in "Esmeralda," at the Casino, this evening. An enjoyable time is anticipated.

NO SCHOOL ON FRIDAY.

On Account of the Teachers' Meeting at Elizabeth.

The public schools of Plainfield will be closed on Friday, Nov. 20th, to permit the teachers to attend the Union County Teachers' Association to be held in Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 20th and 21st.

The program includes the following. "The Teaching of History, Theory and Practice," by Miss Williams of the New Jersey State Normal School.

"Some Errors in our School Work," by Hon. E. O. Chapman, State Superintendent.

"Essentials of Good Teaching and Development of Character" by Mrs. H. E. Monroe of Philadelphia, and "Nature Study—Training to Observe," by Prof. A. C. Apgar of New Jersey State Normal School.

This is held under the direction of the Union County Superintendent B. Holmes of Elizabeth, and in accordance with the State law.

HER FAMILY OWNED LIBERTY ISLAND

Now Mrs. Theresa Radin is Trying to Break Her Father's Will.

Mrs. Theresa Radin, a member of the Bedloe family, who formerly owned Liberty Island, has begun proceedings to contest her father's will. She resides in Plainfield.

Her father, Thomas Duparrier, died less than a year ago. He bequeathed the bulk of his property to a nephew at Wampsville, a district of the Oneida Community, New York.

Mrs. Radin charges that undue influence was used by the nephew over the deceased in his dying hours, and she says that the will does her a gross injustice. The estate in dispute amounts to many thousands of dollars.

Pen Sketches from Life.

He was a middle aged man and was so drunk that in walking his foot always came down about six inches back of the spot he aimed at.

He is so mean that he has been known to walk a mile to save a cent. The man preferred to be a well-to-do farmer from over Short Hills.

Wednesday when he was in Plainfield—and diguifiedly drunk, as mentioned, he was driving a fine, high-spirited sorrel horse which he tied to a telegraph-pole before entering a saloon.

He soon came out, and after haggling over the price bought an apple at a stand near-by. Then he walked over to untie the horse. "W-w'd'n't y' like t'-hic-have that Bil-hic Billy?" he said, provokingly poking the apple under the four legged animal's nose. "But y' ain't goin' t'" he continued "j-hie-giv y' corkins if-te-he! it his corkins rotten."

During this somewhat lengthy conversation, the sensitive upper lip of the horse had been testing the apple wabbling about in the unsteady hand, and, concluding it was good, Billy quietly opened his mouth and took it in, crouching it with evident appreciation.

The two legged—hem— man, was almost shocked sober at the loss.

"W-w-'ll y' carry sou'gen y'" he spluttered "I'll-hic-pul-pe-hic-pulverize y'. "Then, solemnly, pushing at his right arm sleeve "I show y', hookin' appl' will'y?" and he struck savagely at the horse's head with his clenched fist. His attention was good, but his aim wasn't for he missed the horse and struck the post. "Billy" finished the apple.

When last seen the man was driving out Park avenue nursing his hand.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. William B. Rogers of the firm of Rogers Bros., is confined to the house by illness.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Stewart of West Seventh street entertained a party of friends last evening.

A number of young people enjoyed an evening sociable at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Boyce of Somerset street last evening.

Mr. Seymour G. Smith was to have an operation performed on his hand to-day. The hand is to be cut open and the bone scraped. Physicians claim that the bone is rotten and decaying.

The amateurs who will give "Esmeralda," it is thought, with professional vim at the Casino this evening are Messrs. W. H. Cock, W. Pellitier, W. L. Saunders, W. Kaufman, H. S. Blake, E. C. Perkins, Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Saunders, Miss Corties and Miss Van Boskerck.

The funeral of the late Annie E. Titsworth, who died Sunday morning after a brief illness with gastric fever, took place from her father's residence on West Seventh street yesterday afternoon at 2.45 o'clock. A large number of friends of the deceased were present to pay their last respects to the deceased. The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, the pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, conducted the funeral services.

A TRIP TO CHILI.

REV. MR. ALLIS' LECTURE LAST EVENING IN THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

'Chili and the Chilians" Illustrated by Numerous Stereopticon Views by a Visiting Missionary.—An Interesting Lecture and an Interested Audience.

H E Rev. J. M. Allis, D. D., of Santiago, Chili, addressed an audience which filled the chapel of the Crescent avenue church last evening.

The subject of his address, or lecture, was timely — "Chili and the Chilians" and was illustrated with numerous stereopticon views.

The Rev. Mr. Richards opened the evening's exercises with a short prayer. Then those present joined in singing a hymn, led by Mr. Gavett. After the devotional part of the programme Mr. Richards introduced the speaker, who stood in the gallery.

Mr. Allis first showed a map of Chili, and then the principal sea-coast cities. His description of this pugilistic country was interesting.

All of the views of the cities showed numerous flag-poles in front of the houses. "These," explained Mr. Allis, "are in evidence of what was once a law, but is now a 'dead letter,' that all loyal Chilians should have a flag-pole before their home, on which was spread, on festival or national days, the Chilian flag."

Valparaiso, the city made famous by the recent revolution, was shown from all points.

Few Americans are in business in Chili. There are many English and Germans.

The lecturer described the morals of Chili as "Parisian." "French novels," he said, "are translated into Spanish, and profusely read."

Speaking of Chili, an exchange says:

The recent dispute with Chili has brought to light the fact that Chilians are a people of great generosity. It is said American tramps who strike Santiago make from $15 to $30 a day, begging from the wealthy.

The missionary work in Chili has progressed. A school for the middle and lower classes, started some years ago, has outgrown its present building, and Mr. Allis' visit North was for funds. He has secured about $10,0(.) and needs about $2,000 more. With this money a school is to be built, and the rent, thus saved, will greatly aid them.

A hymn and the benediction closed the evening's exercises.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Don't Like their Criticisms.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Two of the Plainfield papers, the columns of which are controlled by gentlemen who are managing, I should say, handling Stillman Music Hall, were unjust enough to publish their opinion (spoken of as the public "disappointment" at the performance of Mr. Thatcher's Company last Thursday evening. I must confess I was not a little surprised at the comments referred to, and in seeking Mr. Thatcher's opinion, after mature deliberation, we came upon this resolution.

Resolved, That all babies are subject to complaints, not always of a serious nature, however. The two gentlemen managing the Stillman Opera House, are babies—managerial babies, that is, they are new—new in the business, and subject to the ailments so prevalent in babydom, and after a careful diagnosis of their case we find that they have been suffering with a severe attack of wind colic.

How truly they voiced the public sentiment, may be found in the fact that after the performance at Mr. Thatcher's request, I stationed myself in the lobby, to catch the remarks of those who attended. I failed to hear one adverse criticism, and nothing but words of praise, and meeting many whom I knew personally that evening and the following morning. I was overwhelmed with congratulations and complimentary remarks, for each and everyone connected with the company.

If anything was lacking in the entertainment it must reflect upon the local management, who failed to supply the requisite number of ushers to be found in every Hall in every city, town or hamlet from Maine to California. It would be as well, with their limited experience, for the managers (?) I should say gentlemen-in-charge,—of Music Hall, to take a few lessons from Mr. Craig A. Marsh, regarding what is necessary and when and how to do it, (of course it is hardly fair to expect them

A HUNTER'S TERRIBLE FIGHT.

Lem Williams' White Hunting Spaniels Attacked by Wildcats.

Recently, while Lem Williams of Lackawaxen waf hunting at a place called Panther Knob, the dogs he had with him suddenly began to bark furiously.

"When he got to where the dogs were he found them barking at one end of a long hollow log. The log was very rotten, and the cavity in it over a foot across. He thought it queer that neither of the dogs would go in the log to rout out the game, as they never hesitated in such cases before. Still, it never occurred to him that the game might not be a coon or a fox. He got a long pole and poked in the hollow but it was not long enough to reach the supposed coon or fox. Then Lem discovered that there was a long crack along one side of the log, and he made up his mind that he could put a pry in that crack, split the log, and thus get at the game.

"He found a heavy cudgel of oak, and inserting it in the crack, pried down a little. The log not only split, but it came in two on one side, and that startled Lem. What came afterward, though, startled him a great deal more. Instead of a coon or a fox, out leaped three wildcats. Two of these sprang straight for Lem and the third paid its attention to the dogs. Lem mechanically struck at the wildcats with the heavy cudgel, and hit one of them a powerful blow in the face, which knocked it back, stunned. The other cat sprang upon him and caught him down below the left shoulder with its teeth, and planted its long claws in the arm at the same time, ripping off the flesh from the shoulder to the wrist. Lem succeeded in tearing the wildcat loose, and threw it some feet away. The other one had recovered from the effects of Lem's blow, and sprang at once to the attack, the wildcat Lem had shaken loose leaping once again at him at the same time. Lem aimed another blow at the first wildcat, and once more knocked it back, but the second one planted both claws in his face and ripped the skin and flesh off both cheeks. One of the dogs now came to his master's aid. He seized the wildcat by the flank, and succeeded in pulling it out of Lem. Both dog and wildcat rolled together on the ground, and Lem, with blood streaming from his lacerated face and arm, pitched in to finish the wildcat while the dog was worrying it. He got in a blow that broke the wildcat's head, and another blow smashed its head. But the brave dog had been disembowelled by the terrible claws of his antagonist, and was dead.

"By this time the wildcat Lem had twice hit with his club recovered again, and promptly renewed the combat. He managed to leap upon Lem, cutting him in the thigh and ripping the clothing and flesh off clear to the calf. Then Lem got in another blow with his club, knocking the wildcat to the ground again. Before it could get up he smashed in head and killed it.

"Having killed two of the fierce beasts, Lem turned his attention to the third. He found it and his other dog lying dead together, the dog's head having been by the wildcat's throat. Lem was so weak with loss of blood by this time that he fainted. He was found by a man named Peters and taken home. For days between life and death for weeks, and when he did at last get, out he was unrecognizable to his acquaintances, a cripple, which he always will be."—N. Y. Sun.

A CRACK FIGHTER.

Amateur Callon, the Phenomenal Two-Round Pugilist.

There is probably not a more scientific, gamey and clever pugilist in the amateur ring to-day than Nick Callon, the pride of the National Athletic Club of Brooklyn, N. Y.

NICK CALLON.

The National's boxer is a well built lad, deep-chested, muscular, and as nimble and quick on his feet as a cat. He stands in his stocking feet about 5 feet 8 inches high. His legs are well formed and developed. His arms are massive pieces of sinew and muscle.

Callon's first engagement in the fistic arena was in Billy Madden's boxing tournament, held in Jersey City in 1887. His opponent was "Tip" Hennessy, whom he vanquished in three rounds. The same evening he was pitted against Jack Lyons, whom he defeated in three rounds.

He next made his appearance at the National Athletic Club's tournament in 1888, where he defeated Billy Curtis in two rounds. But was subsequently beaten in turn, the same evening, by Mike McAuliffe, his old and bitter rival.

Since that time he has engaged in probably over ten contests, in all of which, if not the victor, he, at least, made a draw with his opponent.

The fight which occurred recently at the Varuna Boat Club's tournament in Brooklyn, N. Y., between Callon and McAuliffe, was the most exciting event that ever took place in Brooklyn. It was given to Callon.

Negotiations are now pending for a special "go" between Pat Cahill, of the Scottish-American A. C., of Jersey City, and Callon. If the match is a success, and the man face each other in the ring, it will in all probability be the most exciting event that ever stirred amateur boxing circles.

HORSE NOTES.

J. Dwyer has sold Dashing Belle, formerly the Refraction filly, to D. J. Ruppert for $7,500.

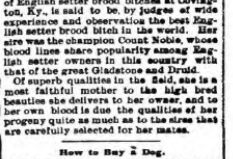
According to the will of the late William L. Scott, all of the thoroughbred horses on the Algonia Stock Farm, will be sold at Tattersall's, New York city, in October, 1892. The stock comprises four stallions, including the famous Rayon d'Or, for which Mr. Scott paid $40,000; eighty-three brood mares, forty-six this year's colts, and a number of yearlings.

The Belle Meade stud lost recently by death the weanling bay colt by Inspector, dam Tullahoma, by imp. Great Tom, a full brother to Tulla Blackburn and to Inspector Daly's great two-year-old Tanagra. As the latter colt has won over $20,000 in stakes and pursues this year, and Tulla Blackburn has followed the Lakeman's successful siblings with another fairly brilliant, the loss of this colt means something in the neighborhood of $6,000 to his owner.

Marion C., the crack performer of the Western Division in the all-age class, and one of the few horses credited with beating the mighty Kingston this year, has been laid up for the season and will not face the flag again until the roses bloom in 1892. Her earnings foot up this year $19,900, which places her and all mares four years old and over on the American turf in 1891 in money won. She retires sound, and with Los Angeles and Firenzi certainly on the retired list, Marion C., is left at least for a short season to wear the honors of the queen of the turf.

BOHEMIAN GIRL.

The English Setter Said to be the Best in the World.



BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Peerless Bohemian Girl, who stands at the head of J. Sheldon Hudson's string of English setter bred bitches at Covington, Ky., is said to be, by judges of wide experience and observation the best English setter bred bitch in the world. Her sire was the champion Count Noble, whose blood lines share popularity among English setter owners in this country with that of the great Gladstone and Druid.

Of superb qualities in the field, she is a most faithful mother to the high bred beauties she delivers to her owner, and to her own blood is due the qualities of her progeny quite as much as to the sires that are carefully selected for her mates.

How to Buy a Dog.

"I would advise the sportsman who is looking around to buy a young field dog to purchase one from a reputable kennel, and a dog possessing blood which for generations back has been prominent in field trials and the field," says H. H. Lacy, one of the best authorities on kennels. "Choose a healthy dog, bright in eye and free from skin diseases, and one by his actions showing no disposition to laziness.

"A lazy dog like a lazy man, will never do any work. A medium-sized dog is the most serviceable one. Any breed, either a pointer or English setter, a dog weighing between forty-five and fifty-five pounds will be found the best. They are capable of more prolonged exertion than the larger or smaller. Good dogs, like good horses, come in all shapes. There are, however, certain points to be remembered in choosing your dor. Avoid a wide chest with heavy shoulders; the chest should be narrow and deep, with well-sprung ribs in a compact body, a good, strong loin and well-turned stifles."

VARIOUS VERSES.

Two Hyperotics.

I.

She sat in her cozy chamber,
With the curtains all drawn tight,
Combed up in a great big rocker,
To and over in the soft lamp light.
A bonbon box on the table
With choicest of sweets was filled,
Which she daintily nibbled while writing
The words that her lover thrilled:

"Oh, I long for you now, my darling!
Without you my life seems drear,
There is never a bit of comfort
For me unless you are near."

II.

And her lover read the letter
As he sat in his bachelor's den,
While his feet rocked up on the mantel,
In the usual way of men.
With a box of cigars at his elbow
And a pipe and a glass near by,
And the smoke clouds wreathed above him
As he sighed her lonely cry:

"Oh, I long for you now, my darling!
Without you my life seems drear;
There is never a bit of comfort
For me unless you are near."

Are by her translated "jiggers."

In her artless, cliffie way,
"Ought to see Mrs. Jones' H. Willie,"
She could never be so silly
As to really mention Willie;
Useful name for tweasers as hers;
But of speech rings in some jiggers
And for "Willie" she says "Jiggers."
How to stop it I have figured,
But must give it up—I'm jiggered.

ENTANGLING A WITNESS.

But There Was a Loophole, and Out He Went in Good Shape.

A case was being tried in a country court. A horse had been stolen from a pasture, and the evidence all pointed to a certain doubtful character of the neighborhood as the culprit. Though his guilt seemed clear he had found a lawyer to undertake his defense. At the trial the defendant's attorney expended his energy in trying to confuse and frighten the opposing witnesses, especially a certain farmer whose testimony was particularly damaging. The lawyer kept up a fire of questions, asking many foolish ones and repeating himself again and again, in the hope of decoying the witness into a contradiction.

"You say," the lawyer went on, "that you can swear to having seen this man drive a horse past your farm on the day in question."

"I can," replied the witness wearily, for he had already answered the question a dozen times.

"What time was this?"

"I told you it was about the middle of the forenoon."

"But I don't want any 'abouts' or any 'middles.' I want you to tell the jury the exact time."

"Why," said the farmer, "I don't always carry a gold watch with me when I'm digging potatoes."

"But you have a clock in the house, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, what time was it by that?"

"Why, by that clock it was just nineteen minutes past 10."

"You were in the field all the morning?" went on the lawyer, smiling suggestively.

"I was."

"How far from the house is this field?"

"About half a mile."

"You swear, do you, that by the clock in your house it was exactly nineteen minutes past 10?"

"I do."

The lawyer paused and looked triumphantly at the jury; at last he had entrapped the witness into a contradictory statement that would greatly weaken his testimony.

"I think that will do," he said, with a wave of his hand. "I am quite through with you."

The farmer leisurely picked up his hat and started to leave the witness stand. Then, turning slowly about, he added, "I might have forgot to say that too much reliance should not be placed upon that clock, as it got out of gear about six months ago, and it's been nineteen minutes past 10 ever since."—Philadelphia Times.

It Was Not Put Up.

At 11 o'clock the other night I passed down Twenty-third street just as a policeman was seating a forlorn looking chap out of a public stairway, whose he had been taking a nap. The man had nothing to say for two or three minutes as we walked along together, but he finally bunched his shoulders, shivered in a vigorous manner and said:

"You saw it all, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"Saw him slam me around, knock my head against the wall and club me over the back?"

"Yes."

"Believe it was real, don't you?"

"Of course. Why shouldn't I?"

"Well, I didn't know but what you'd think when I came to ask you for ten cents for a birthday present for a servant. I had put up a job to make a nickel apiece out of you!"—New York Evening World.

Colonel Bob's Advice.

Everybody knows how busy Colonel Bob Ingersoll is, but everybody does not know that, no matter how busy he may be, he has always a moment or so to spare to give advice to the young. Quite a number of letters come to him every week, soliciting knowledge on almost every subject. Recently one of these letters came to him when he was head and heels in work. It began, "Dear Sir—I am broken hearted"—Colonel Bob hadn't time to read more, but he made time to return a prompt reply. It was:

"MY DEAR BOY—In a month from now you will feel only half broken hearted. In six months you won't feel broken hearted at all and in a year you will probably be engaged to some other girl."—New York Advertiser.

BREVITIES.

—There is to be a five mile foot race at the Crescent Rink to-morrow evening.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will hold its usual mid-week meeting this evening at eight o'clock.

—Another secret meeting was held in North avenue last evening by the alleged leaders of the so-called citizens' ticket.

—Mr. Geo. A. Newman, of Orange, will give an interesting account of a trip to Japan at the Y. M. C. A. rooms to-night. All men are invited.

—The Potter Printing Press Works was shut down yesterday afternoon out of respect to the memory of the late Annie E. Titsworth, whose funeral took place at 2:45 o'clock.

—The Union County Teachers' Institute will be held in the Cherry Street School on Friday and Saturday of this week; in consequence the public schools will be closed on Friday.

—Messrs. Charles Smith, Frederick Sandford and John Haberle went hunting for rabbits yesterday in the vicinity of Piscataway and returned last evening with thirteen "cotton tails."

—The Young Daughters of the King of North Plainfield, will hold a candy and cake sale, at the residence of Mrs. D. L. Thompson, Saturday November 21st, at three o'clock. All are cordially invited.

—John Dorgan of this city was sentenced to thirty days in the Somerset county jail Tuesday on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and trespassing on the cars. He was arrested in Somerville.

—It is stated that Senator John R. McPherson and Franklin L. Price of Union township, Union county, have incorporated a land speculation company to be known as the Old Colony Land Co. Capital stock, $150,000.

—The Fall Conference of the Union County C. E. Union is being held in the Presbyterian church in Westfield to-day. The programme includes papers on "What can the Society do for the Sunday School?" and "Money and Missions," also a "Question Box" conducted by the Rev. J. T. Kerr, of Elizabeth, ex-President of the State C. E. Union.

—A private letter addressed to "My dear, darling duckey," and signed "Your sincere loving friend, George," was picked up on East Front street near Tier's, yesterday by Mr. Richard Raven, and has been placed in our possession. The owner may have it by proving property. If genuine it is a private letter and therefore not proper to make public property by publishing it. If not genuine we simply decline to have our readers humbugged by it. It appears to be genuine.

—The Presbyterian congregation at Springfield, Union county, will celebrate the centennial anniversary of their church building, on Sunday, 29th. A special service will be held [illegible] which the people of [illegible] friends of the church [illegible] invited. The church is an old landmark along the once important North Turnpike, now a county road. The building is in a good state of preservation. The cypress shingles which it was enclosed in a hundred years ago, present an appearance of [illegible] for another century of service. The church also has something of revolutionary fame.

Who is Fannie Wilson of Liberty Corner?

A handsome and stylishly dressed young woman applied at the Second precinct police station at Newark last evening for a night's lodging. She said she was Fannie Wilson of Liberty Corner, N. J. While talking with the officer in charge she became ill, and said she had taken laudanum. She was hurried off to the City Hospital and placed in a doctor's care. A little later she was sent back to the Second precinct station. She refused to say why she swallowed the drug.

Dr. Dill to Reside in Plainfield.

Rev. Arthur C. Dill, the persecuted Sterling pastor, has come to reside here. He will devote his time to literary pursuits and give up the pulpit for a while.

ALL A PART OF A SCHEME

THE DANGER PLAINFIELD IS REALLY IN.

Let No One Be Deceived.—There is No Getting Around These Facts.—They But Correspond with Everything Else the Combine Has Done.

The opportunity for a big steal in the Sewerage Contract, as now endeavored to be forced upon the city by the combine, is really worse than most people imagine, for it only requires that three of the arbitrators shall agree upon the price that the city shall pay, and the city must buy within ninety days at the price fixed. It goes without saying that the two arbitrators chosen by the Sewerage Company will demand as high a price as they can possibly get, and all that will be required to defraud the city is to find one man among the other arbitrators who can be bought to vote with them.

The city has no option in the matter. The people will be powerless to prevent it. The provision is mandatory. The city must consummate the purchase within ninety days from the time that a price is agreed upon by three of the arbitrators.

Voters had better think of this before it is too late—three men are to have the power to name the sum that the city shall be required to pay for Mr. Low's Sewerage System, and only one of the three shall represent the city!

And when the amount is fixed, bonds will be issued with which to pay, the combine's cry to the contrary at this time being mere pretense. The city is really in great danger from these politicians. We saw the danger two years ago, when the combine was first formed and we have fought in the interest of the people ever since. The day is less than two weeks off when the people must act for themselves, at the polls.

INCENDIARIES AT WORK.

A Barn Consumed and Three Horses Burned to Death.

At an early hour this morning the frame barn belonging to Mr. Joel Giddis was discovered to be afire. A neighbor who saw the flames aroused Mr. Giddis and then attempted to save the horses which were stabled in the building, but the flames had gained too much headway and three horses, together with several sets of harness, several tons of hay, wagons, etc, were consumed. The fire was of incendiary origin.

Mr. Giddis estimates his loss at about $1,500 and is insured for about $700.

An Enjoyable Evening.

Atlas Lodge, No. 125, F. and A. M., of Westfield held its regular communication on Monday evening. The occasion was one of more than ordinary interest, as the third degree was conferred on Edward L. Hann of Scotch Plains, and large numbers of visiting brethren were present from neighboring towns. A bountiful collation was served during the exercises under the direction of Mine Host Coombs of the Westfield Hotel, and unrestricted conviviality and good fellowship prevailed as only they prevailed at Masonic gatherings. Among those present were Worshipful Master W. J. Ford, Past W. M. Yeager, and Bros. John L. Blackford, T. J. Flannery, and others of Jerusalem Lodge, No. 36; of this city; L. J. Jackson, of Northampton Lodge, No. 26, Va.; E. D. Miller, Corinthian Lodge, No. 57, Orange, N. J.; Wm. Campbell, Acanthus Lodge, No. 709, Brooklyn, N. Y., and many others.

He Took the Duck.

A tame duck was ambling along at Neshanic a few days ago when a Plainfield merchant who had gone to that village hunting for rabbits, espied it. He had seen no rabbits and was on the point of returning home when he espied the poor harmless duck. Of course the duck is not now in the land of the living. It is said that the owner of the duck has since visited Plainfield and compelled the would-be hunter to pay a good price for his day's sport.

Rainbow Festival.

The social committees of the three Christian Endeavor Societies of New Market and Dunellen have arranged a festival to be held in the basement of the Dunellen Presbyterian Church this evening. Supper will be served and there's no reason to doubt that the supper will be something very fine and as to the sociability of our young people, who does not know what good times they have?

C. B. L. Convention.

The State convention of the Catholic Beneficial League is to be held at Paterson next Tuesday. The delegates from Council in this city are Messrs P. Casey and James Conneely.

"Esmeralda" at the Casino To-night.

A brilliant assemblage will greet the talented amateurs who will appear in "Esmeralda," at the Casino, this evening. An enjoyable time is anticipated.

—Messrs. Neuman Bros. are making a specialty of Hamburg shingles beans, two cans for 25c., and Burnham & Morrill's Paris sugar corn.

NO SCHOOL ON FRIDAY.

On Account of the Teachers' Meeting at Elizabeth.

The public schools of Plainfield will be closed on Friday, Nov. 20th, to permit the teachers to attend the Union County Teachers' Association to be held in Elizabeth, N. J., Nov. 20th and 21st.

The program includes the following, "The Teaching of History, Theory and Practice," by Miss Williams of the New Jersey State Normal School.

"Some Errors in our School Work," by Hon. E. O. Chapman, State Superintendent.

"Essentials of Good Teaching and Development of Character" by Mrs H. E. Monroe of Philadelphia, and "Nature Study—Training to Observe," by Prof. A. C. Apgar of New Jersey State Normal School.

This is held under the direction of the Union County Superintendent B. Holmes of Elizabeth, and in accordance with the State law.

HER FAMILY OWNED LIBERTY ISLAND

Now Mrs. Theresa Radin is Trying to Break Her Father's Will.

Mrs. Theresa Radin, a member of the Bedloe family, who formerly owned Liberty Island, has begun proceedings to contest her father's will. She resides in Plainfield.

Her father, Thomas Duparrier, died less than a year ago. He bequeathed the bulk of his property to a nephew at Wampsville, a district of the Oneida Community, New York.

Mrs. Radin charges that undue influence was used by the nephew over the deceased in his dying hours, and she says that the will does her a gross injustice. The estate in dispute amounts to many thousands of dollars.

Pen Sketches from Life.

He was a middle aged man and was so drunk that in walking his foot always came down about six inches back of the spot he aimed at.

He is so mean that he has been known to walk a mile to save a cent. The man referred to is a well-to-do farmer from over Short Hills.

Wednesday when he was in Plainfield—and dignifiedly drunk, as mentioned, he was driving a fine, high-spirited sorrel horse which he tied to a telegraph-pole before entering a saloon.

He soon came out, and after hazzling over the price bought an apple at a stand near-by. Then he walked over to untie the horse. "W-w'dn't y' like t'-hic-have that Bil-hic Billy?" he said, provokingly poking the apple under the four legged animal's nose. "But y' ain't goin' t'" he continued "t'-hic-tow y' cor-kins if-te-l he'l it hic corkins rotten."

During this somewhat lengthy conversation, the sensitive upper lip of the horse had been testing the apple wabbling about in the unsteady hand and, concluding it was good, Billy quietly opened his mouth and took it in, crouching it with evident appreciation.

The two legged—hem— man, was almost shocked sober at the loss.

"Wow!! y' ornery son'uf'gun y'!" he spluttered "t'-hic-pul-pa-hic-pulverize y'." "Then, solemnly, pushing at his right arm sleeve "I show y', hookin' appl willy?" and he struck savagely at the horse's head with his clenched fist. His intention was good, but his aim wasn't for he missed the horse and struck the post. "Billy" finished the apple.

When last seen the man was driving out Park avenue nursing his hand.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. William B. Rogers of the firm of Rogers Bros., is confined to the house by illness.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Stewart of West Seventh street entertained a party of friends last evening.

A number of young people enjoyed an evening sociable at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Boyce of Somerset street last evening.

Mr. Seymour G. Smith was to have an operation performed on his hand to-day. The hand is to be cut open and the bone scraped. Physicians claim that the bone is rotten and decaying.

The amateurs who will give "Esmeralda," it is thought, with professional vim at the Casino this evening, took place from her father's residence on West Seventh street yesterday afternoon at 2.45 o'clock. A large number of friends of the deceased were present to pay their last respects to the deceased. The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, the pastor of the Seventh-Day Baptist church, conducted the funeral services.

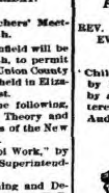
A TRIP TO CHILI.

REV. MR. ALLIS' LECTURE LAST EVENING IN THE CRESCENT AVENUE CHURCH.

'Chili and the Chilians" Illustrated by Numerous Stereopticon Views by a Visiting Missionary.—An Interesting Lecture and an Interested Audience.



THE Rev. J. M. Allis, D. D., of Santiago, Chili, addressed an audience which filled the chapel of the Crescent avenue church last evening.

The subject of his address, or lecture, was timely—"Chili and the Chilians" and was illustrated with numerous stereopticon views.

The Rev. Mr. Richards opened the evening's exercises with a short prayer. Then those present joined in singing a hymn, led by Mr. Gavett. After the devotional part of the programme Mr. Richards introduced the speaker, who stood in the gallery.

Mr. Allis first showed a map of Chili, and then the principal sea-coast cities. His description of this pugilistic country was interesting.

All of the views of the cities showed numerous flag-poles in front of the houses. "These," explained Mr. Allis, "are in evidence of what was once a law, but is now a 'dead letter,' that all loyal Chilians should have a flag-pole before their home, on which was spread, on festival or national days, the Chilian flag."

Valparaiso, the city made famous by the recent revolution, was shown from all points.

Few Americans are in business in Chili. There are many English and Germans.

The lecturer described the morals of Chili as "Parisian." "French novels," he said, "are translated into Spanish, and profusely read."

Speaking of Chili, an exchange says:

The recent dispute with Chili has brought to light the fact that Chilians are a people of great generosity. It is said American tramps who strike Santiago make from $25 to $30 a day, begging from the wealthy.

The missionary work in Chili has progressed. A school for the middle and lower classes, started some years ago, has outgrown its present building, and Mr. Allis' visit North was for funds. He has secured about $10,000 and needs about $2,000 more. With this money a school is to be built, and the rent, thus saved, will greatly aid them.

A hymn and the benediction closed the evening's exercises.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Don't Like their Criticisms.

To THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Two of the Plainfield papers, the columns of which are controlled by two gentlemen who are managing, I should say, handling Stillman Music Hall, were unjust enough in rendering their own opinions to speak of the public "disappointment" at the performance of Tuxedo, given by Mr. Thatcher's pupils, on Monday evening. I must confess I was not a little surprised at the comments referred to, but after reading Mr. Thatcher's opinion, after mature deliberation, we came upon this resolution.

Resolved, That all babies are subject to complaints, not always of a serious nature, however. The two gentlemen managing the Stillman Opera House, are babies—managerial babies, that is, they are now queer in the business, and subject to the ailments so prevalent in babydom, and after a careful diagnosis of their case we find that they are both suffering with a severe attack of wind colic.

How truly they voiced the public sentiment, may be found in the fact that after the performance at Mr. Thatcher's faculty had to expect them at their limited knowledge of the business, to be practical managers as well. Mr. Marsh no doubt for the sake of the theatre-goers of Plainfield would take pleasure in enlightening them.

Mr. Thatcher desires me to say that while he has always looked forward with great pleasure to his annual appearance before the public, at his home, and fully appreciates the liberal receptions that have been accorded him, he feels that he must say goodby to them professionally while the present managers (?) of Stillman Music Hall continue to control the destiny of Music Hall.

In conclusion I would say, we have not found our pleasure to be annual entertainers in Brooklyn this week by the adverse criticism of the Daily Press, and from me—I forget the name of the other little paper! With such opinions as those expressed in the New York Herald, Times, Tribune, Journal, etc., The Boston Globe, Herald and Advertiser, The Philadelphia Ledger, Record, Press, etc., not forgetting The PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS, the entire Western Press, the personal compliments of the theatre goers at large in the "Colorado of the East," the congratulations of W. H. Arkell of "Judge," and Frank Leslie's, Denman Thompson, Henry E. Dixey, Tony Pastor, and a score of others, Mr. Thatcher says he hopes to continue business at the same old stand, with Tuxedo, as the watchword, until further notice, even without the very valuable and liberal support of the present managers (?)—I should say "runners" of Music Hall.

And no one as yet has won the "barrel of red apples."

Yours,
ED. MARBLE.

GRAND LODGE I. O. O. F.

The Annual Session Now Being Held in Trenton.

The Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., met at Trenton yesterday and was also in session again to-day. Grand Secretary, Lewis Parker, reported that there were 226 subordinate lodges in the State, three having been instituted during the year. There were 21,156 members at the last report. Those initiated, admitted by card and re-instated, swelled the number to 23,689. From this number there should be deducted those who withdrew by card, were expelled, died, suspended or dropped for non-payment of dues, amounting to 1,326, making the number of active members January 1st, 1891, 22,363, a gain of 1,207.

The charitable work of the order makes a good showing. 3,025 members were relieved, and 121 widowed families. For the former $86,018.34 was dispensed, and for the latter $1,100.32. For the education of orphans $137 was paid, and $23,613 for the burial of the dead. For special relief, $5,639 was expended. The total sum for relief was $117,840. The amount of annual receipts was $292,375.

The past year has added largely to their membership and financial strength. The order is becoming a powerful instrument in the State for the spread of benevolent and the cultivation of generous principles. No association has accomplished better results for the relief of suffering and the elevation of human character. They are proudly preeminent in these regards among their contemporaries, and can, with confidence, congratulate themselves on the services they have rendered, and the way they have performed them, without parade, without any ostentation, but with a simple desire to help each other in the struggles of life, they have tried in an humble manner to add their tribute to the merits of American Odd Fellowship.

The growing importance of the Degree of Rebekah is shown by the returns in the Grand Secretary's report, which gives a membership, on December 31st, 1890, of 132,808, making this, numerically, the greatest auxiliary department, exceeding the Encampment branch by 17,164. But numbers alone do not enable to form a correct estimate of its value. Only those who have opportunity to observe its quiet and unobstrusive operations can gain a fair idea of the vast amount of good that has been accomplished by the Daughters of Rebekah, acting as the dispensers of the sustaining sympathy of Odd Fellowship—as the almoners of its charity and the guardians of its orphaned children.

The laws limiting the membership of the Rebekah branch have widened with each succeeding year, women bearing but a slight degree of relationship to Odd Fellows may now be admitted, while, with those who are admitted, that relationship may be lost by the death of the relative and subsequent remarriage of the member, and yet the membership remain undisturbed under these circumstances, the question has been asked whether the qualification of relationship might not be altogether dispensed with, and the ranks of the Rebekahs opened to all worthy women, there being no other restrictions than those which apply to men. The Grand Lodge of Australasia has petitioned for this enlargement so far as its own jurisdiction is concerned.—Ex.

—The meeting of the Plainfield Local Christian Endeavor Union on October 23d, for the election of officers, was minus a presiding officer, although there is a president and seven vice-presidents, one of whom at least should have attended. No business was transacted.—Ex.

—Mr. John Joegar who will speak with Col. Bryant at the men's meeting at the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday at 4.15 p. m. has had a marvelous experience. On the 9th day of July, 1891, in one of the poor sections of New York City, a teacher of a Sunday-school where his little girls attended, found him in a fearful condition just on the verge of delirium tremens and generally in a very dilapidated condition. John had formerly been to school and could neither read nor write, and did not know a word of the English language. Mr. Gilbert, the Sunday-school teacher, persuaded him to go that night to Jerry McCauley's Water street mission, and he went forward for prayers. As Jerry prayed the only word that John could understand was Jesus, which sounds in German very much as in English. But he knew enough of the plan of salvation to accept Jesus which he then did, and from that moment to this he has been a new man. He now reads the Bible very well and speaks our language fluently.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Speaking of the autumn financial outlook in the countries of the world, Matthew Marshall says, "There is no country which has so little to complain of as the United States."

It is not likely that the boundary line between Ohio and Indiana will be changed so as to give Ohio a strip off eastern Indiana. Ohio is quite big enough now, especially in her own mind.

More surprising than even the most grotesque election list is a blunder made by the London Daily News in describing the fall elections in the United States. It editorially informs its readers that the Republican party has "carried the entire state of Philadelphia." That the editor of one of the leading papers in London—a paper which flatters itself that it is particularly well up in American affairs—could be guilty of a blunder like this is almost incredible.

The two opposite courses adopted by the New York and Alleghany presbyteries show how the Presbyterians are divided on the subject of revision. While New York calls for thorough revision, and especially for omission of direct statement in regard to foreordination and preterition, the Alleghany presbyterty assembled at Pittsburg protests especially against any revision which is "calculated to weaken the doctrine of God's sovereignty in preterition."

When Edwin Arnold is asked which of all the countries he has visited he likes best he frankly answers, "Japan, by all means." There the people do not get out of temper. There they are always polite to one another, and never expectorate in public places. There the most beautiful chrysanthemums and the most delicious pears are cultivated. An importation of Japanese gardeners into America would mean the vast improving of our horticulture and floriculture. Travelers who have the opportunity to visit Japan and do not do so have no excuse to offer for themselves, in the opinion of the famous editor. "Englishmen, though he is, he would rather live in Japan than anywhere else. But he has too much work to do, which is the trouble with most of us, it may be remarked in connection with going to Japan. "It is the land of poetry, this Japan that I love," says Sir Edwin.

The Cornmeal Boom in Europe.

It was a rare idea of Minister Phelps to give a dinner in Berlin and have the food at that dinner composed largely of American pork and preparations of American cornmeal. The Germans liked the dinner so well that since then the Berlin bakers have not been able to supply the demand for cornmeal. 'Tis well.

The lack of any of the delicious cornmeal preparations to which he is accustomed is a thing strikes the American traveler uncomfortably throughout all parts of Europe. He has been inclined to pity the benighted Europeans in consequence. They have larger, sweeter strawberries and gooseberries than we have, and in England and France better mutton, but what do they not miss? No corn pone, no hoecake baked before hickory coals, no cornstarch, no green corn, and, finally, not even popcorn balls on the railroads! But now they are to have a chance; now they are to know a part at least of what makes America great. Let the European consider himself ready to die till he has tasted southern cornbread.

Dress Reform.

There is one kind of dress reform that nobody seems to have thought anything about, yet it goes to the root of the whole matter for both sexes. That is allowing all members of the human family to dress as they please. Nobody dresses to please himself. It is to please those who look at him. If he varies one hairbreadth from the regulation fashion he is regarded as a crank, no matter how monstrous or uncomfortable the regulation fashion may be. Observe when a foreigner lands upon our shores. It may be an Italian woman with her picturesque black braids and bright handkerchief; it may be a mountaineer with his peaked fur cap, built in another fashion than ours. It is the same in any case. Our rude, provincial populace nudge one another and snicker for all the world like the rustic who was never out of sight of the crossroads postoffice. When the bandanna and becoming bicycle suit first came many thought it was dreadful.

People who want to wear comfortable and convenient clothes do not dare to do so. It is very easy to say what everybody else does, no matter how unsuitable or unbecoming, than to face the inevitable nudge and snicker. Yet we call ourselves a free people. We are not a free people. We go about trussed up and weighted down day by day. There is no free people in civilization. When mankind are free and civilized they will be so accustomed to the costumes of all nations as to recognize that a garment may be the right thing even when unlike their own, and also to recognize that other great truth—that so long as a person is clad in clean, whole garments and decently covered it is nobody's else business how he dresses, and he has a perfect right to exercise his own taste in the matter without being considered a lunatic.

FLOWER FOR PRESIDENT

Democratic Talk of Him as a Compromise.

CONCERNING CLEVELAND AND HILL.

The World Says Many Democrats Believe That Neither the ex-President Nor New York's Governor Could Carry the State but That Flower Could Do It.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The New York World (Democratic) says: "Seven years ago two New York Democrats were candidates for the nomination for president of the United States. One was Grover Cleveland, the other was Roswell P. Flower. One was governor of the state, the other held no office. The governor won. Next year New York will almost surely contain two names for the nomination. One will then be a United States senator. The other will hold no office. But these two do not comprise the possibilities. There may be a third, and the third will then be governor. Ever since Roswell P. Flower carried the Empire state by a majority which approaches and may reach 50,000, there has been much talk of this kind. It has come chiefly from prudent Democrats who are not 'on the inside' of party or factional management."

Flower as a Compromise.

The World claims that many Democrats say that the contest between Cleveland and Hill may render each liable to defeat in New York state if renominated, that the electoral vote of New York is essential to Democratic success; that "the machine" is against Cleveland and for Hill, and that Flower is the compromise candidate would win. The World adds:

The Partisans Deny It.

"The chief object of the Democratic party is to nominate a man whose election would be practically assured. In view of the facts noted, which of these three men named is the most available? Will not the sober sense of the national convention insist upon the elimination of factional strife in this state by the nomination of Governor Flower? Whether there really exist sufficient basis for each of the statements thus given is a matter of opinion. The partisans of both Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Hill say no, and say it emphatically. But the fact remains that many Democrats who do not like each other and who are bitter friends of either are giving serious heed to the position as outlined above, accurately or not."

C. F. CRISP.

They Prefer Hill.

The chief thing to be determined now is whether the impression of the "Flower men" that Governor Hill has the delegates is correct. To obtain definite information on this point a correspondent has interviewed the members of the state committee, nearly all of whom say they prefer Hill, and that he will have the delegation.

Crisp's Head Like Reed's.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Congressman Charles F. Crisp, of Georgia, who is a candidate for the speakership of the house of representatives, is at the Hoffman House. He says that his visit here has nothing to do with the contest. The top of his head looks much like that of ex-speaker "Tom" Reed.

"Yes," said Mr. Crisp, laughing, when reminded of the resemblance, "I have been told that before, but if elected I hope that I shall be somewhat less arbitrary in my decisions and somewhat more conciliatory in speech than was Mr. R. of."

"Who do you think will be the next speaker?" I asked him.

"That's rather an embarrassing question," he replied, smiling. "Mr. Bynum, Mr. Mills, Mr. Springer, Mr. Hatch and myself are all candidates, and each of us, I suppose, thinks he has a better chance to have it than others. But it is a friendly contest all round, and whoever wins will receive the loyal support of his competitors. It is not true, as has been hinted, that I have been influenced in my actions by Tammany's influence. As an organization I don't know that Tammany is for any one in particular. A Democrat will be the next president. He will be chosen on tariff reform and governmental economy, in my opinion."

Opposed to Cleveland.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 19.—The Farmers' Alliance leaders now here are a unit against Grover Cleveland as a presidential candidate. Chairman Taubeneck, of the People's party, says: "Cleveland's nomination would be the best thing that could possibly happen to help along the interests of the People's party. When Mr. Cleveland's pronounced financial views and those of the industrial masses come in contact something is bound to fly off at a tangent. And, on the other hand, his nomination would be by all odds the worst thing the democratic party could possibly do for its cause.

"No southern Alliance man could vote for Mr. Cleveland and remain true to the Alliance."

Colonel Livingston, representative-elect from Georgia, was asked whom Georgia would support. He said the name of Senator Vest, Bowe, Campbell or Gray would be acceptable to us. Mr. Cleveland cannot receive the solid Georgia delegation. A few citizens and the newspapers are for him, but the people, as a mass, are not."

To Fight Senator Brice.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Nov. 19.—Judge King, chairman of the Republican state central committee, has called a meeting of the committee and other prominent men to take action in regard to removing the seat of Colonel Brice in the United States senate and adopt measures to prevent his being sworn in as a senator on the 4th of March next. I believe it can be shown by Mr. Thomas, of Springfield, that Brice corruptly secured the election, and there seems little doubt that sufficient evidence can be obtained that Brice was not a citizen of Ohio at the time he had not resided in the state for a year and was a resident of the city of New York. Further, his defense against paying taxes in Ohio has been that he is not, and has not been, a resident of the state. If this is true, Mr. Brice should not be allowed to represent Ohio in the senate."

They All Want the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Republican national committee will meet in the Arlington hotel in this city on Monday next to choose a place for holding the Republican national convention of 1892. There will be a lively competition for the honor. The cities that have already put in applications are New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Omaha, Minneapolis, Pittsburg, Detroit and Tacoma.

Already the representatives and "boomers" of the various cities have arrived in Washington. Pittsburg is the latest aspirant for conventional honors. A canvass of that city has shown it to contain hotel accommodations equal to Cincinnati, while a guarantee fund of $100,000 is now being raised.

If Deane Should Die.

ALBANY, Nov. 19.—The report from Hudson in the event of the death of Senator-elect Deane, Republican, the Democratic board of supervisors will not give the certificate, Democrat, the certificate of election, is denied by Attorney General Tabor, who says: "If a majority of the votes in the returns from the five counties of the Fifteenth district were cast for Deane he will be declared elected, even if he should be dead. Then a new election would be held."

Serious Illness of Two Senators.

ALBANY, Nov. 19.—The illness of Senator Deane and Senator Harvey J. Donaldson, which has caused so much to the uncertainty of the present political situation, in the case of the former very little, if any, hopes given for his recovery. The case of Senator Donaldson, who was threatened with pneumonia, is not so serious, and it is now believed that the danger line is passed. Both are Republicans.

To Contest Derby's Seat.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 19.—At the meeting of the board of county canvassers last night formal notice of a contest for the seat of John H. Derby, who was elected senator by a 241 majority, was given and the canvassing board authorized a committee to take the notice of the contest with proofs to the state board of canvassers.

Senator Peck Gets a Mandamus.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Rufus T. Peck, Republican senator-elect for this district, was granted a preliminary mandamus directing the board of canvassers of this county to declare the result of the canvass for state senator before Justice George N. Kennedy.

LATEST STYLES IN MILLINERY.

The New Shapes in Hats and Bonnets Novelties in Millinery Trimmings.

The new shapes in felt hats are exceedingly stylish. The jaunty and dat ntyles are thrum up sharply at the back or at one side and fairly bristle with pointed wings and small birds, which form of garniture threatens to be the highest favor. The three cornered hat introduced by Redfern during the summer is to be worn again in felt and velvet. It is trimmed with a mass of ostrich tips at the back, and is very becoming to youthful, piquant faces. Yellow and red are on an equal footing for the moment. The new shades of pink all verge on magenta and are anything but pretty.

RECENT IMPORTATIONS IN MILLINERY.

Bonnets are often entirely formed of beads or of plain felt trimmed with velvet and osprey, or of open jet applique on to the metal. Fluted shapes, the flutes starting from the crown toward the brim, are new and promise to be much worn. Some bonnets are formed entirely of a jet bird, with outstretched wings, having a velvet edge, or sometimes a chenille edge which is newer. Chenille is used in all colors. One of the features in millinery is the varied treatment of feathers. Tiny birds and wings are bedecked with gold, silver and steel tinsels, and many other metallic tints. Gold and silver metallic feathers form an important part in millinery, and feathers of various kinds are covered with spangles of gold, lined with red copper or green, the whole in which these tiny spangles are made are often novel and original. In the cut are shown sketches of recent importations. The hat with the widespreading brim, slightly curved on the left side, is black felt trimmed with black ostrich plumes and a ribbon bow, with a jet shoulder thrust through the center. It would suit any young lady with an artistic face. The other hat is gray felt, trimmed with black velvet and three black birds. It is a useful hat, suitable for wearing with any kind of dress. A jet swan is the chief ornament of the bonnet. It rests on a band of pink velvet, and there are tiny black tips and a cigrette at the back. The strings of bonnets are seldom worn tied in a bow. They are simply crossed under the chin and fastened at the side with jeweled pins.

He Swindled Mrs. Frank Leslie.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.—Albert Hope, Mink Alley Heath, twenty-four years of age, of Shreveport, La., was arrested here charged with forging a check for $250 on Mrs. Frank Leslie, of the Colonial Bank. In his satchel was found a list of names of people whom he declared he had swindled. Among the names was that Mrs. Frank Leslie, who was credited with $165.

The Charleston Ordered Home.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—It was learned at the navy department that the cruiser Charleston has been ordered home from the Asiatic station and would stop at Honolulu on her way to San Francisco. It is stated at the department that the cruiser does not go to Honolulu on any special mission, but will simply stop there for coal.

"I. Paul's Big Blaze.

ST PAUL, Nov. 19.—A fire in the wholesale district of St. Paul, which raged seventeen hours, destroyed the whole sale grocery house of Griggs, Cooper & Co., Farther, his defense against paying taxes in Ohio has been that he is not, and has not been, a resident of the state. If this is true, Mr. Brice should not be allowed to represent Ohio in the senate."

ware buildings and Karl Simmonds' drug store, causing a loss of about $1,300,000.

To Declare Mataafa a Rebel.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 19.—The steamship Australia has arrived from Honolulu and reports that the situation in Samoa is strained and that King Malietoa's request the fulpule had agreed to issue a proclamation declaring Mataafa a rebel.

MINERS MEET AT DENVER

Ten Thousand People Present at the Congress.

A BIG FIGHT OVER FREE COINAGE.

The West and the East Will Look Horns Over the Issue During the Convention. United States Senator Stewart, of Nevada, Makes an Address.

DENVER, Nov. 19.—The largest gathering of mining men ever assembled together at one time is in attendance at the mining congress. It is estimated that fully 10,000 people are present. The purpose of this meeting is to discuss the ways and means for the advancement of the mining industry. A national interest is being taken in the affair. One of the objects of the congress is to urge the adoption of the recommendation to the national congress looking to the passing of improved laws on locating and developing mining claims.

The West and Free Silver Coinage.

The western delegates are absorbed in the question of silver legislation and most of them are strongly in favor of free and unlimited silver coinage. It is claimed that the eastern men have packed the congress and will attempt to sidetrack the issue. A big fight is expected. The events of the first day were a great parade and the formal opening of the magnificent new mining exchange building.

The parade was largely made up of Colorado mines. There were floats loaded with base and refined bullion, nearly $1,000,000 worth of gold and silver mining machines in operation, etc.

Senator Stewart Speaks.

The congress was called to order by temporary chairman ex-Senator Tabor. Forty-one states and territories were represented, besides delegates from several European countries. United States Senator Stewart, of Nevada, was called upon for a speech.

He responded, and his remarks on the the silver question were loudly applauded.

Politics in the Alliance.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 19.—A well laid scheme to elect third party men as officers of the Farmers' Alliance was discovered tonight, and a dozen of the most prominent leaders of the Alliance are working to prevent its accomplishment. By accident it was learned that the national executive committee of the People's party is securing pledges from members in sympathy with political action to vote for the People's party candidates.

To Ignore the People's Party.

With this discovery comes a suspicion that the men advocated by the committee had agreed to turn the Alliance into a political organization. The Alliance leaders are now taking pledges from all possible or probable candidates that they will ignore the demands of the People's party and will, if elected, conform strictly to whatever action the Alliance may take in the premises.

To Defeat Polk.

If politicians are elected as officers of the Alliance it means that the organization will form a coalition with the People's party. While President Polk looks upon the People's party with favor, he believes the Alliance should be kept out of politics as an organization, and for this reason the party men have set about to defeat his re-election.

The advocates of the subtreasury scheme offered a resolution which declared in favor of its incorporation in the platform and asserted that it was a cardinal principle and must be adhered to. It was moved as a substitute that a committee be appointed to receive the protest of the anti-treasury people and report to the council. The substitute was finally adopted, and Congressman Livingston was selected as chairman of the committee.

The Sweating System Condemned.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—The United Garment workers in convention here, adopted a resolution condemning the sweating system and refusing to deal with or recognize National Trade Assembly 231, Knights of Labor, which it alleges is aided in perpetuating the sweating system.

Forger Wood Convicted.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Frank H. Wood has been convicted of forgery in the first degree in the court of general sessions for signing the name of Mrs. Elizabeth B. Raymond, his betrothed, to a certificate of ten shares of Western Union stock. The trial has been going on for ten days, but it only took the jury ten minutes to convict him. He will be sentenced on Monday. Under Wood's conviction he is liable to be sentenced to a life's term.

Tailor Redfern Gets a Divorce.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Ernest A. R. Redfern, the Fifth avenue tailor, obtained from Judge Bookstaver, of the court of common pleas, a decree of absolute divorce from Katherine A. R. Redfern. Mrs. Redfern has never lived with her husband in this country and is now in England.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From committee on lunacy:

To the Board of Chosen Freeholders of the County of Union:

Gentlemen:—Whereas one William Leary has become bedsman to the county to pay the sum of one dollar per week for the support of his wife at the insane asylum at Morris Plains, and it having been represented to us that the said Leary has a large family to support and only receives very small wages, and unable to pay the same we would recommend that the said Leary be relieved from further liability on account of said bond from this date, he to pay any amount due the county in accordance with said bond.

JAMES T. PIERSON,
J. MARTIN ROLZ,
WILLIAM H. BRIANT,
Lunacy Committee.

Freeholder Jones moved the communication. On roll call adopted unanimously.

A communication from Thomas M. Martin with bill for $258.50 for laying drain pipe in side of county road on Morris avenue and on motion of Freeholder West received and placed on file.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

RESOLUTIONS.

By Freeholder Howard:

Whereas, This Board has learned with profound sorrow of the sudden death of their friend and associate, D. C. Ryno, and

Whereas, The deceased as a member and for many years a Director of this Board, served the county faithfully and with signal ability,

Therefore, Resolved, That in the death of ex-Director Ryno the county has lost a worthy citizen, faithful in all the duties of citizenship, and this Board a genial and courteous friend.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes, and a copy sumed by the director and clerk expressing the sympathy of the Board, be sent to family of deceased.

On motion of Freeholder Roll adopted by a rising vote standing vote.

By Freeholder Briant:

Resolved, That the report of committee concerning contract with committee of the township of Summit in laying a sewer through the county road in said township be approved and the director authorized and empowered to execute said contract on behalf of this Board.

Freeholder Howard moved its adoption. On roll call adopted unanimously.

By Freeholder Howard:

Resolved, That the bill of D. K. Ryno, amounting to $30 for burial of unknown dead, be and the same properly approved by the county physician.

Freeholder Briant moved its adoption. On roll call adopted unanimously

By Freeholder West:

Resolved, That all bridge work now unadvertised by this Board or the properly constituted committee and is hereby suspended for the balance of the present fiscal year, except such repairs as may be absolutely necessary to protect property and save the traveling public from harm

ALMY LOVED CHRISTIE,

And He Says She Returned His Affection.

HIS FIRST SHOT WAS ACCIDENTAL.

He Declares That Upon Seeing Her in Terrible Pain He Fired a Second Time to End Her Agony—His Desperate Attempt to See the Girl Alone.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 19.—The defense in the Almy trial have opened their case, and when Almy was placed on the stand the courtroom was packed with eager listeners. Almy told of his first coming to the Warden farm in July of last year and of making a contract with Warden to work on the farm. Myra Warden, one of the girls, had asked him to work at the farm. He further testified: "Christie Warden was a member of the house during this time. During the first period and until Myra and Alice departed to the west, the members of the family were very pleasant. I shared my attentions with them all; if there was any choice Christie had it."

He Loved Christie.

The witness, trembling and weeping, affirmed his love for the Warden girls, and said: "After Myra and Alice went west the best of the girls remained. Christie was a very quiet girl. I loved her and thought the world of her." Witness then told how he assisted Christie in household duties. He detailed at great length his relations with Christie, giving the impression that they were of the most friendly character and of a reciprocal nature. "Our tastes," he said, "were similar, and we were in full sympathy."

How He Got Her Picture.

Almy described how he got Christie's picture. He found the single one of her among the negatives of a photographer to whom he had gone to have a picture of Christie and Myra copied. The latter picture he got from an old Bible.

He loved Christie with all his heart and thought if he could have had her, she would have led him to a better life. They talked it over, and she advised him to get a better education, but lack of funds compelled him to reach to the conclusion to make a short cut to professional fame.

She Kissed Him at Parting.

Witness said Christie kissed him when they parted. She aroused love in his breast, and had Mrs. Warden only spoken one pleasant word to him he would not have been here today. He then gave an account of his travels after leaving Hanover, saying he bought his revolver in Springfield for the purpose of taking it with him to Texas. He had shown it to several persons and had made no attempt to conceal it.

He finally came to Hanover to see Christie alone, to get her approval and encouragement. He did not write while he was away, because he was afraid she would not get the letters. Her reputation was at stake, and as he had no doubt her parents were against him he must see Christie alone. He went into the Warden barn, from which he could command a view of the kitchen and parlor. He thought he could see her when she went to the grange.

He Went to Her Room.

About a month later he went through the house one night. He went four times in all. The last time he decided to open her door and speak to her. He did so, but her brother Myra awoke. He decided not stay all the time in the barn, but wandered about the fields, awaiting nearly a month to see Christie. He told of entering the room at Mr. Rose's, occupied by Christie, but was horrified to find it occupied by another woman. As the latter rose in bed he caught her by the throat and pushed her back. Then he told her his story and his desires to see Christie, but she said Christie was not there. A compact was made to keep the matter of the visit a secret.

The Night of the Murder.

Almy then related what occurred the night of the murder. He said: "I felt on this night that my physical condition was weak and that I had not proper sustenance. I felt too that I must see her that night or not at all. I have been told that my temper was quiet and that when strongly moved I am very excitable. As the four ladies came along I took my position by the barn under the trees. I could hear Christie's voice and the days of waiting became as nothing. I tried to still my emotion as I stepped out to speak to the ladies.

"Mrs. Warden denied that she knew me, and I felt that extreme measures must be used. The scene was overwhelming, and Christie and I got through the bars. I felt that if I could get her alone but for a moment I could explain all. We went across the field and I fired at the ladies. I was somewhat stunned, and from that on my recollections are vague. Christie appeared to be senseless, but I got her under the shelter of the trees.

Shot Her Accidentally.

"I heard the voices of pursuers and I felt that I must get away. My revolver was discharged by some way, and I felt that I had mortally wounded Christie. I felt that I must end her agony, and then I shot again and killed her. I fled to the barn. I couldn't think. I couldn't make it seem that Christie was dead."

The prisoner broke down entirely, and at this point he asked that he could recount his story when he did the bird of his bidding and visiting Christie's grave. He could not realize that she was dead. He never thought of being captured, and the feeling that he could not leave her chained him to the locality. He says he did not mean to fire first shot—it must have been an accident. He could not be sure of this, and time he fired the second shot to put her out of pain.

But the doctors have said that the first shot killed Christie, and the premeditation of the second shot, the one fired after Christie was dead, may not be taken into account. This is Almy's hope. Upon it his life depends. No evidence was allowed to prove that Almy is George H. Abbott, although the matter was once broached by the attorney general.

Their Wages Cut Down.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19.—The employes in Oliver & Roberts' South Side Wire mill have been notified of a 20 per cent. reduction in their wages. The employes are much dissatisfied, but no strike will probably result, as the men are without organization.

General Butler's Condition.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 19.—General Butler is still confined to his house on account of the trouble he has had lately with his ears. The general's son, Paul, states that the family feels no uneasiness over his father's condition.

It Was a Sure Way to Make Money.

His history is briefly told.

After several days of thought he discovered a sure way to make money, and, like other men, he was in a hurry to try it.

He made haste to insert an advertisement something like the following in several country weeklies:

Sure way to kill potato bugs; send twenty two cent postage stamps to X. Y. Z., —, for a recipe that cannot fail.

Then he hired a clerk to bring his mail from the postoffice and had 10,000 of his receipts printed. Inside of two weeks something like 6,000 or 7,000 farmers had contributed twenty two cent stamps each for the printed recipe.

Then several hundred of them bought circles and railroad tickets and started out to interview the advertiser. At his office they were informed that he had left to attend to some business in Europe, and he was not expected back. All he had left was a package of 3,000 or 4,000 slips of paper, on which were printed the following:

"Put your bug on a shingle. Then hit it with another shingle."—Chicago Tribune.

POISONED FOUR MEN.

The Horrible Crime That Made John Rogan an Idiot.

MILAN, Tenn., Nov. 19.—At Cutler's place, twenty miles from here, four drovers—Sam Wilson, Will Barger, Tom Haley and Jack Barger—who went to levy on John Rogan's cattle, were poisoned by Rogan, who placed "Rough on Rats" in their whisky. The dead man drank freely of this and Rogan appeared to do so, but instead poured the poisoned whisky down his bosom. The drovers drank them and went into a stupor from which they never awakened.

Persons passing the place the next morning heard unearthly screams, and a group of citizens entered the house to investigate. The sight which met them at the door as they entered the dining room was a horrible one. On the floor lay the bodies of the drovers, while crouched over them was the gibbering form of Rogan, a raving maniac. He was screaming at the top of his voice, "They've gone home! they've gone home!" It took the united efforts of a dozen men to overpower the maniac and drag him from his victims.

THE CLEVELAND TRIPLETS.

They Are the Pride of a New Jersey Town.

NEW EGYPT, N. J., Nov. 19.—The Cleveland triplets in Caleb Hopkins' home at Archertown have outfooted Plumsted township the biggest sensation since a surface made oil well was discovered on Uncle John Irons' farm. The oil fever soon subsided, but the trio of babies that Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins can't be worried to name after the members of the ex-president's household are a living, breathing reality. Every woman within a radius of ten miles has driven over to see them. The proud father of the triplets is a basketmaker. He was always a frugal man, though generous to his family.

"You never can tell what is going to happen," used to be a favorite saying of his, but he hasn't repeated it since Oct. 12 last. In the light of last night's events words fall flat. The basketmaker's eyes haven't stopped bulging yet. When the nurse came out to see him the day the children were born she said, "Is it a boy or a girl?" The aged lady was in an ecstacy of enjoyment over the great news she had to tell. "Caleb," she said solemnly, "there's more'n one."

The delighted parent stood still and stared at her till he found his tongue. He then asked huskily:

"You don't mean to say it's twins?"

"More'n twins," almost shrieked the aged lady. "There's a boy and two girls."

Caleb never said a word, but sank down on the black haircloth sofa with a thud that made it creak.

Grover Cleveland Hopkins weighed four pounds and one ounce when he was born. He is five minutes the senior of Ruth Cleveland Hopkins, who weighed two ounces less. The youngest of the triplets, and the heaviest, is Frances Folsom Hopkins, between whom and Grover there is a difference of sixteen minutes in age. Frances weighed a full six pounds. The combined weight of the trio was therefore, fifteen pounds and two ounces. Each has doubled in weight since, and all three are as healthy and happy as any set of triplets that ever lived.

KILLED ON A CROSSING.

Three Men Dead and One Fatally Hurt Near Greensburg, Pa.

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 19.—A sad accident occurred at Reiter's Crossing, James Walsh, aged twenty-six years; William Galvin, aged twenty-eight; John McCain, aged eight, and William McCain, aged six, attempted to cross the Southwest Penn track in a wagon. Just as they reached the crossing the Conghlogheny express, going north, turned the curve and struck the unfortunates.

Walsh, Galvin and the eldest McCain boy were instantly killed. The younger McCain is fatally injured. Galvin was married and leaves a widow and one child. The wagon was broken into splinters, but the horses escaped injury.

Two Killed and Many Injured.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Nov. 19.—A terrible passenger train collision occurred at Augbenbaugh station on the Philadelphia and Erie railroad Wednesday afternoon. Two men were killed outright and one sustained injuries that are likely to prove fatal. Twelve or fifteen of the passengers were badly shaken up and bruised. Two engines were demolished and half a dozen coaches badly damaged. Both express trains running at a high rate of speed collided. Lum Ray, one of the train hands, and a passenger named Harry Baird were killed outright.

The engineer was hurled into the air, and when picked up had both his legs broken and received other injuries from which he cannot recover. The two ponderous machines were locked together in an iron grasp and almost totally demolished.

A Woman Dead in the Wreck.

PERRY, N. Y., Nov. 19.—A passenger train on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg railroad jumped the track near this place, and the baggage car and coach went into a gulch. Mrs. Uriah G. Hoyt, of Rochester, was killed.

Slavin's Brother Nearly Whipped.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—Those who went to Miner's Bowery theater last night saw a lively meeting between Jack Slavin, who has been meeting all comers at the theater, and Tom McMahon, a boxer, every day Bowery boy. The bout suddenly cut short by the dropping of the curtain in the middle of the third round, when it was found that Slavin must surely be knocked out with a couple of more punches. Jack Slavin is Frank P. Slavin's brother.

Clergymen and Socialism.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Protestant Episcopal church congress, in session at Washington, discussed the question of socialism. Several of the delegates proclaimed themselves to be out and out socialists and declared William Prail, of Detroit, Mich., said the principles of Christianity and socialism were the same, except that Christianity went further than socialism.

A Jew Who Helps Russia.

VIENNA, Nov. 19.—Much comment was excited today by the announcement that Baron Rothschild had come to the relief of the Russian refugees engaged in flaying the Russian loan by taking 5,000,000 of the unsold scrip. In view of the attitude of the Rothschilds and Jewish bankers generally toward Russia, this is considered a remarkable step.

WOMAN'S HOME

HELPS AND HINDRANCES.

How the Childish Fingers May Be Trained to Give Pleasure to Mother.

Scorn not the help of little hands that are tingling with new blood and reaching out impatiently for the materials of which more experienced workers fashion the things called useful or beautiful, for if, as dear Jean Ingelow has said, "It is delightful help merely not to be hindered," is it not delightful sometimes to be hindered by these same little hands?

What woman that ever takes a glance backward to the long, long days—the days that could not have enough of activities, the days that from earliest consciousness seemed interminable, cannot recall the childish longing for bits of bright embroidery, silk or worsted, pieces of soft flannel, or even dingy calico squares, triangles and stars that were so deftly handled by older girls and skillful women? The carpet rag, if bright and soft, especially when of flannel or silk, had power to charm. The little shiny scissors that made such a smart click as they trimmed the "pieces," what objects of envy they were. To possess even one half so precious or dazzlingly bright.

What lumps would come into the little throat when the desire to take into one's own hands the bright scissors, soft velvet and silk became so strong as to seem irresistible. And finally, when the lump had grown so big that the little throat must burst, and the heart with it, unless the desire is made known, with what an effort, what daring, will it be uttered. "Can I have some of your sewing?" is made. How narrowly the face of the good woman who holds the work is watched for the answer.

And if that answer be, "No, dear, run away and play," what a wreck of childish hopes for the time. Life seems too miserable to be endured. The lump that seemed so powerful to choke has gone, but childish despair has come, and to go away and sob out the disappointment alone is all that is left to do.

But suppose the woman who works with the coveted material has a memory; suppose she retains a lot of June in her heart and takes the ambitious little sewing woman near and says: "Why, dear heart, you shall have some of my sewing. Bring your chair; fill it's lap a piece of work for you." With what happiness the little heart beats and how the fact fly after the chair, which is put close to the woman who knows how to give a little girl joy. This woman may be ever so plain, or, as some would say, "homely," but she has the admirer to whom her face seems more than fair—angelic.

The little sewing woman sits patiently near while her work is being basted, and if any think it is being done slightingly then they are mistaken, for the cloth is cut with precision, the piece of velvet has an artistic shape and is of a delicate color. And do you imagine that woman to be selecting a piece of dull brown, black or gray embroidery silk? Wrong again, for she looks her silks all over to find a color bright enough, one that will tempt the small fingers to work patiently. Do you believe that the little one is blind to the efforts of her teacher? Well, not if you know children. One watches every motion; her eyes brighten when the needle is threaded with rose pink silk (not tied in), and her whole face shows her gratitude. A genius has been said: "Teach the children! It is painting in fresco," and this woman knows that the great man is right.

Who has not heard a mother say, "I never had time to teach my children to sew; it is so much easier and quicker to do it myself." But what about the children? Is not the time coming when they must feel their deficiencies and regret the neglect of their mother? Those who have learned to look to their mother for their best gifts find dearest pleasure in the mother's approval, and many a task has been cheerfully and lovingly performed because of the encouraging, "That will be a great help to mamma." To be mother's help is the highest ambition of many little women, if only the mother's knew it, so let us remember this and "We must sow the seeds and tend the growth if we would enjoy the flowers."—Anna P. Payne in Springfield Homestead.

Family Life in Paris.

Whole families of Paris pack into flats of two or three rooms, out of which they always reserve a salon, which once a week is set out to receive visitors, but invariably closed to visitors on any other day. "Madame est visible," says the concierge, and no one is allowed to go up to the fifth (or even sixth) floor, where they nestle. They work incessantly, the mother sewing and mending, the daughters, perhaps, doing embroidery for the shops. At night they sleep anywhere; perhaps in a corner of a dark passage, screened off, the father or brother on a "shake down" in the salon; the mother and another daughter crammed into a tiny cell, too small for one sleeper, and intolerable for two.

It is all dreadfully unwholesome, no doubt, especially as the whole is warmed by a pestilential "Choubersky" stove, poisonous, cheap, and consequently adopted in such homes, notwithstanding its dangerous effects. "We must manage to live somehow, and rents are so dear that we cannot stop to think of such things." All are very shabbily dressed, usually the mother is even frightfully untidy, but, they argue, no one can get into their den, so what does that matter?"

If their means allow of such a luxury, a "femme de menage" comes for a few hours a day and cooks their dinner, which is always very frugal and limited in quantity. If the "help" cannot be afforded, the mother does the cooking herself, having everything to account, such as bits of dry bread soaked in the water which has boiled vegetables, and thus made into soup, with pea pods, etc. If they live near the "Halle Centrales" or principle markets, the mother goes there late in the afternoon and looks out for articles of food which could not bear a day's delay and pounces upon these, because they are sold at any price.—Murray's Magazine.

Learn to Carry the Baby.

Dear mothers of first babies, let me entreat you to learn the simple art of carrying your baby properly. I was once travelling on a cable car that, among other passengers, contained a young mother holding an infant of three months old. My attention was attracted as soon as I was seated, and I noticed the eyes of other passengers wandering in the same direction. She was never still, and the child might have been a dish rag for all the respect that was paid to its vertebrate system.

First it was thrown over the mother's arm, between the elbow and wrist, its poor little head wabbling about like an apple just ready to fall from the tree. Then it was laid face downward across her knee, and jogged from one to a "rum-tum-tiddy" that might have been soothing to its nerves if they were constructed on a principle different from those of all the rest of humanity. Up to this point it had been quiet, but at the sound of the "rum-tum-tiddy" it inserted a vigorous motion of resentment. It was then transferred to the left internal shoulder and patted on the back with movements that must have appeared to the tender infant like vicarious whacks. It was next tied into a sort of true love knot in the mother's lap, one little foot and one little arm sticking out here and there by way of loops. Unappreciative infant! even then it would not be silent. As a last resource, the mother opened her dress and forced nourishment upon it that it did not need, in the presence of a large crowd of mingled sexes, most of whom were looking on in amusement but poorly concealed.

At last, with overloaded stomach and flushed face, the poor little baby sank into an uneasy slumber, its face and limbs twitching from time to time in a manner to make it look ill for its future. It had not asked for tossings, for pattings or for food; it only needed rest. It did not get it even then, for two blocks farther on the mother sprang up like a whirlwind, first to leave the car and then to get out, which latter she did with the now screaming baby tucked under her arm like an umbrella.—Babyhood.

The Care of the Feet.

Corns and bunions are never cured. They may be soothed and made endurable for months at a time, but, like volcanoes, no one can predict a perpetual cessation of their mischievous activity. Every one, but especially children, should wear properly fitting shoes, no matter how cramped their material. They should be neither too large nor too small and should have low, flat heels that must be promptly "righted" as soon as they begin to wear to one side. If the toes of the foot show a tendency to overlap they should be rubbed with the hands once or twice each day; and if this can be given when the carving commences, it will, as a rule, prove sufficient to correct any irregularities of this nature.

If a child is very hard in its growth, trim it only lightly at the ailing corner, but fully at the opposite corner. If both corners grow too deeply into the flesh, clip them down very lightly, and then scrape the center of the nail from the tip to near the root, until it is thin and flexible. This process seldom fails to correct refractory nails—provided, of course, they are not neglected too long. Neither satisfaction, amusement nor the full measure of benefit can be derived from active games, the exercise of the gymnasium, dancing, tramping, traveling or bicycling if the feet are in imperfect condition. The beauties of the grandest and most romantic scenery are blurred or obliterated to the man or woman who beholds them while suffering mild agonies from tight or ill fitting shoes or from distorted feet, and in the same way the most tempting of banquets or the most magnificent music can be given no sense of one who is a victim of that horrible waking nightmare—toothache.—Delineator.

Hair Dressing Among the Ancients.

A lady's hair was dressed by a slave girl who had learned the art of hair dressing from a professional teacher and who showed much skill in adopting the coiffure best suited to her mistress' type of face.

The general style was set by the empress, and changed according to her fancy or caprice. Auburn or golden hair was the most prized, and natural blond hair was very rare among Roman women great trouble was taken to impart to dark tresses the coveted hue.

The hair was washed with lye, then rubbed with a special kind of pomade and exposed to the rays of the sun. If this did not produce the desired result, wigs made of the blond locks of captive women were worn.

Jewish merchants traveled through Teutonic tribes to buy red hair for the Roman market. A lady's toilet took a long time, for she had a whole bevy of slave girls called "adorners," each trained to a special work.

To keep the complexion smooth and soft a dough kneaded with asses' milk was spread over the face at night, and in the morning it washed off again with milk. One empress, Poppæa, the favorite of Nero, was always accompanied on her travels by a drove of asses that she might never lack the necessary milk.

The eyebrows were drawn in fine curves with a pencil, and the lashes darkened; the nails were filed in fine tapers, the nails were trimmed and polished, the hair was oiled, perfumed and dressed; even the garments were scented.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Ladylike.

The Germans are justly proud of the richness of their language, their well conjoined and artfully compounded words and the beauty of their nouns formed of adjectives. They take a peculiar delight in the long, many syllabled single substantive in which is fused such wealth of meanings that they boastfully declare that it would require a long sentence of the English language to convey it properly. Yet it was with a wistful little sigh that a German lady confessed that her mother tongue held no such beautiful and expressive compound as ladylike. "It means so much," said she enviously, "and is so musical and suggestive."

It was a new point of view, and, like all criticism from without, busied the thoughts with the light thrown upon the old familiar word. Memories of early days were stirred and quickened, for almost the first instruction to a little girl in matters of conduct is conveyed in the admonition to be ladylike. It is a quality, too, which has not its accompanying defect. One can scarcely be too ladylike, unless one happens to belong to the stern sex, which occasionally produces a "Miss Nancy."

Lady has been strangely abused, and is tattered and torn by rough usage and misapplication; but ladylike is still sweet and delicate, and no true woman can object to wear the epithet as a title of honor. Indeed, it is only the true womanly woman who is entitled to wear it, who possesses the exquisite refinement, the dainty modes of thought and gentle speech, which are embodied in the word.—Harper's Bazar.

A Woman's Resolutions.

An old book, treasured as an heirloom, contains the following resolutions of a lady of the olden time on the day of her marriage, April 28, 1741. The good lady wrote thus in a clear, round hand:

I resolve never to contradict my dear husband without it be quite necessary, and then with the greatest good nature I am mistress of.

To serve God more sincerely than I have done in the state I am now about to leave.

Never to fret or fall into a passion about small matters, but to have always a cheerful heart, having learned by happy experience that trifles that can possibly befall me, and in all dangers to commit myself and family to an all wise Providence, and then to be easy about the event.

Likewise to lay aside all fondness for dress, but to be always decently neat and clean.

I resolve to be very active, and never, for the sake of saving myself a walk, to neglect anything, though it be never so great a trifle.

I resolve to be very frugal, and never to put my husband to any needless expense.

I resolve to be very kind to my servants, as well to their souls as their bodies, and always to give exact orders, and never to be in a passion if they are not executed.

I resolve to treat my friends kindly, but never extravagantly, and to be very glad to see my husband's relations as my own.

MARY CHRISTIAN.

If there were more Mary Christians like her of 1741 there would be more marriages today.—San Francisco Argonaut.

No Place to Put Scarfs.

The woman who does "fancy work" and embroiders zoological impossibilities on scarfs and chair tidies is responsible for two new nouns—"scarfs" and "tidies." Personally, I think the use of the words as nouns an insult to our mother tongue and an offense that ought to be capital, but I will admit that no word but "throw" is mean enough to describe the article one sees pinned across the corners of picture frames. Now, there are places where a bit of drapery to break the bareness is beheld, but all the canons of good taste are violated when a picture is mutilated in that fashion. If the picture has merit of drawing or coloring, the frame should all detracts from the color by its own hue or from the drawing by its own folds. If a picture is so poor as to need screening, it ought to be hung in the cellar anyway. At any rate, the scarf should never be applied to a picture.—New York Press.

What the Sleeve Indicates.

The great French authority upon artistic dress, Charles Blanc, laid great stress upon the sleeve as indicating the tendency of the wearer's mind, and saw in the various fashions that have been in vogue a distinct intention. For instance, the long, open sleeves, he says, were disdainful of the pages' dress, and illustrate the freedom of arms they needed in waiting upon the noblesse; while pagoda sleeves originally came from China, and were adopted to make the hands appear small; and epaulet sleeves gave a width to deficient breadth of shoulders. Perhaps all is right, but, if so, it only shows that we are not so sensible as our ancestors, for all that any one cares for nowadays is change—something that was not worn last year, or, if it was, has been modified out of all resemblance.—Domestic Monthly.

An Apple Salad.

For the basis she used solid tart apples, pared and cut into small bits. With this she mixed an equal quantity of celery, cut in bits as small as one's little finger. Thoroughly mixing, she dressed them in the salad bowl with a simple mayonnaise made as follows: Into the yolk of one egg, previously beaten, a sufficient quantity of salad oil was slowly dropped to make a thick cream, which was then thinned to the proper consistency by vinegar, added carefully. Add pepper and salt to taste, and the mayonnaise was ready to dress the salad.—New York Sun.

An Injustice to Babies.

To weigh a little baby down with wraps and heavy embroideries comes very near to being criminal. Did you ever see how a woman carries a baby that is dressed in this way? She does not put her arms comfortably about the child outside of its wraps, and thus relieve it of a good part of the weight of its royal robes. Oh, no! That would muss up the beautiful finings. She inserts her arm underneath the garments, and lets these hang down on every side, leaving their whole weight to draw on the baby's shoulders.—Boston Transcript.

Receptacles for Handkerchiefs.

A pretty receptacle for soiled handkerchiefs and lace is made by taking a palm leaf fan and covering it with cretonne, plush or satin; make a pocket of one-fourth yard of the same material, hemmed and shirred at the top to reach across the fan from the handle. Tack this across the bottom and trim. Trim all around with a pinked plaited edge of the same material, ribbon or lace. Tie a large bow on the handle, which is also covered with the same material as the rest, and fasten to the wall in dressing rooms.—Chicago Herald.

The Overworked Woman.

We always did pity the poor, fagged out woman who tells you she is "worked to death," yet contrives to spend two hours with a dentist in the morning, an hour in the afternoon at a "committee meeting," and two at "the society" in the evening, and then wonders why, when the butcher or dressmaker is mentioned, that people do not make allowance for her nerves, and braces up for the dentist tomorrow and a matinee, and possibly another committee meeting. "So much like men, you know."—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Sure Way of Drawing a Stopper.

One of the small annoyances of life occasionally is the attempt to draw an obstinate glass stopper. Immersion in hot water for some minutes is sometimes efficacious, but far from always. A sure method is to take a piece of twine, cord will do handle or key, holding the other end firmly, and over this tant cord run rapidly the neck of the obstinate bottle. In less than two minutes the glass will be too hot to touch and will have expanded all around the refractory stopper, which will fairly fall out.—Exchange.

Buy bar soap by the quantity if you wish to be truly economical. Stand the bars on edge, one above another, with as much open space as possible between them. They will then dry out and last almost twice as long.

In bottling ketchup or pickles, boil the corks, and while hot you can press them into the bottler and when cold they are tightly sealed. Use the tin foil from compressed yeast to cover the corks.

Cow's milk must be mainly relied upon when an infant is to be nourished artificially. And if other food is given, it must be with cow's milk.

Miss Freida V. Redmond and Miss Amy Cross are two New York women who have succeeded in the exquisite art of miniature painting.

In teeth cutting water softens the gums and frequently stops the fretting and restlessness universal in children at this period.

The proper way to put salt fish to soak is with the flesh side upward. In this way the salt settles at the bottom of the pan.

Beloh Should Get Sota.

There is said to be a girl ten years old living near Pittsburg who speaks only a language of her own invention, although she reads and writes English. Here is a portion of her vocabulary: Sota, angry; phatoa, fun; tooky, a strong rope; beloh, papa. Now, if beloh should get sota and take a tooky and havesome phatoa warning the reporter who spun the yarn, such fictions as this would be fewer.—Detroit Free Press.

BREVITIES.

—Don't forget the foot race at the Crescent Rink to-night.

—The Methodists are arranging for a fair to be held Dec. 1st, 2d and 3d.

—Read the prices you can buy groceries, etc., for at the United Tea & Coffee Grocers' Association.

—The public schools of this city were closed to-day on account of the teachers' institute which is in session at Elizabeth.

—Mr. William Schorb of East Front street will leave to-morrow for Morristown, where he will remain indefinitely.

—"The Ideal Church," will be the theme of the discourse by Dr. Lewis at the Seventh-Day Baptist church to-morrow at 10.30 a. m. Strangers invited.

—Mr. A. M. Griffen, the plumber, put in the fountain which caused complimentary remarks in the third act of Esmeralda at the Casino last evening.

—The Y. P. S. C. E of the Park Avenue Baptist church say they will be pleased to see you to-night at their regular Friday evening meeting, beginning at eight o'clock.

—The members of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., are requested to meet in their Lodge Room at seven p. m. sharp, Sunday, to prepare to attend divine services in the M. E. Church, as per notice elsewhere.

—"The Emerald" is the name of a new monthly four-page publication, published at No. 6 East Front street, by Mr. A. E. It will undoubtedly be made of great value to the Association with such an intelligent and enthusiastic member editing it. We extend to it our best wishes for its success.

—A $500 picture, entitled "The Burning of the Ocean Monarch," now on exhibition in the show window of Schmidt Brothers' clothing store on East Front street, is one of the prizes to be offered at the forthcoming fair of Winfield Scott Post, No. 73, G. A. R., the particulars of which will be duly advertised, meanwhile look at the picture. There is said to be only one copy of it in existence. That is held by the St. George's Society, London.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. William L. Hendricks of Centralia, Pa., is visiting his brother-in-law, Mr. James Lovell of West Third street.

The home of Mr. John Brook on Broadway, last evening was a scene of festivities. The occasion was one long to be remembered by those present. At the hour of five o'clock Miss Mary Brook was joined in wedlock to Mr. Edward Cooley of this city. The Rev. Lorentine Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church, performed the ceremony. Mr. H. C. Vanburgh, a cousin of the groom, acted as best man. The display of chrysanthemums was exceptionally fine and pronounced by the numerous guests as "very beautiful." After the usual congratulations a wedding supper was served. The happy couple started on a wedding trip which will include the South. The presents were numerous and costly. Mr. and Mrs. Cooly will take Plainfield their home.

Injured in a Runaway.

In a runaway accident, last evening, Councilor Nelson W. Runyon, Commissioner J. Fred MacDonald and Treasurer C. R. Sidwell, of the First Presbyterian church, was thrown from a surrey. The three men are executors of the estate of the late Sarah Lattimer, who bequeathed $30,000 to the First Presbyterian church. They were out driving and were viewing property belonging to the estate.

When returning home along South avenue the neck yoke broke, allowing the pole to drop. This frightened the team and they dashed away at a terrific pace. The surrey was completely wrecked. Mr. Bodwell's ankle was sprained and he was scratched about the face. Messrs. MacDonald and Runyon escaped injury.

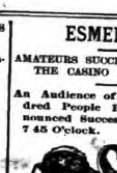
ESMERALDA.

AMATEURS SUCCESSFUL ACTING AT THE CASINO LAST EVENING.

An Audience of About Five Hundred People Present. — A Pronounced Success.—No Seats After 7 45 O'clock.



SELDOM may it be said that amateurs on the stage act their parts with the abandon of self necessary for realism.

Amateurs at the play "Esmeralda," at the Casino last evening, showed how well they could forget themselves as themselves and be the character they represented. A crowded house greeted them and general sociability reigned supreme.

"Esmeralda" is a simple, interesting story. A farm in North Carolina is found, by a mining expert, to contain ore. He attempts to buy it very cheap of the honest old farmer and his grasping, domineering wife, and would have succeeded but for the intervention of the lover of the farmer's daughter, Esmeralda.

This lover outwits the speculator and the farmer becomes rich. The shrewish wife then, by taunts, drives away the poor lover. Esmeralda and her father have been "bossed" so long that they give in.

The farmer, wife and Esmeralda, go to Paris and "cut a dash." The wife tries to force Esmeralda to marry a fraudulent Marquis.

The poor lover in North Carolina sells everything he possesses and follows his sweetheart. He is befriended by an artist who met him on the old farm and by two young ladies studying art. The young ladies slow, easy-going brother also assists.

By a sudden change of affairs the lover grows rich, the farmer grows poor; the Marquis backs out; Esmeralda and her father make a stand against "mother," Esmeralda's daughter, comes on "and every thing ends lovely."

All the participants acted their parts well and were warmly applauded.

The cast of characters were as follows:

Old Man Rogers.....William R. Cock
Mrs. Rogers.....Miss Maude Agnes Bowers
Dave Hardy.....William Pelletier
George Drew.....William L. Saunders
Estabrook.....Mr. Kauffman
Marquis de Montresalut.....H. S. Blake
Jack Desmond.....Edward C. Perkins
Nora Desmond.....Mrs. Josie Mason
Kate Desmond.....Miss VanBrackerk
Nanette.....Miss Cordes
Esmeralda.....Mrs. William L. Saunders

"Old Man Rogers" was a dear, confiding old countryman who caused much laughter.

"Dave Hardy" and "Esmeralda" had the sympathy of the audience in their well acted troubles. Their final triumph was also enjoyed.

"Mrs. Rogers" was exceedingly domineering, and particularly expressive.

"George Drew" the speculator was all business.

"Estabrook" and "Nora Desmond" made love, as a lady described it, "just too delicious for anything."

The "Marquis" was a quiet villain.

"Kate" and "Jack Desmond" were very natural characters.

"Nanette" was neat and prim—an ideal maid.

Admiration was expressed in beautiful bouquets presented to the ladies.

Everything considered it was a most successful evening.

A supper was served afterwards for the performers.

The scenery was artistic. In the third act a conservatory with a fountain, of running water, a trellis and flowers was a bit of realism.

Veterans' Reunion at Newark.

The surviving members of the Eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers and their friends observed the fifteenth annual reunion and banquet at Molter's Hotel, Newark, last evening. About two hundred guests were at the table, including prominent men from all over the State. After an excellent menu had been discussed the cloth was removed and the regular toasts of the evening were announced. They were as follows: "State of New Jersey," Gov. Leon Abbett; "Our Guests and Honorary Members," A. O. Hilsey (Barnes McGoffin); "Some Fruits of the Victory of the Boys in Blue," John Y. Elder; Our Departed Comrades, Albridge C. Smith.

An Objectionable Bridge, Fixed.

An attempt was made to burn the old wooden Albany street bridge across the Raritan at New Brunswick yesterday afternoon, a fire being kindled in the portion between the roadway and the footpath in the middle of the structure. It was making rapid progress when the attention of the bridge-tender was called to it. He promptly extinguished the blaze with buckets o' water, to the loudly expressed disgust of the spectators.

SIR ORACLE SPEAKS.

LET ALL BOW THEIR HEADS AND BE DUMB.

He Confesses That He Made a Dishonorable Deal to Defeat the Popular Will as Expressed at the Polls.

Mr. Spangenberg condescends to explain his position.

He admits he went into a deal to vote as ordered by two men who turned traitors to the party which elected them to power by foul means the power that could not be got by fair means. By his own confession he stamps himself utterly unfit to legislate for a city like Plainfield. But his own confession is unnecessary. His reputation has been established. If he enjoys it we are sure no self-respecting citizen will envy him.

Let us hurriedly look over a portion of his record:

At the first meeting of Council he voted according to the dishonorable deal he now confesses to deprive the people of the representation a majority desired.

The people elected a Republican majority, because it had been found that that party had uniformly acted for the best interests of the city. The Democracies had been tried in former years, found wanting, and swept from power.

Never before in the history of the city had the people been betrayed as by this combine.

The will of the people as expressed at the polls by an overwhelming majority was for a Republican administration, because they had confidence in the Republicans, and Mr. Spangenberg confesses with supreme gall that he complacently and deliberately went into a deal to cheat them, and serve two men who betrayed the party which had elected them. One of these two persons the following paragraph refers to. It was copied into The News from the New York papers of June 5th last:

"Judge Lawrence, of the Supreme Court, has appointed Archibald C Stenstone receiver in supplementary proceedings for Seymour G. Smith, of S. G. Smith & Brother, tea-packers, of No 137 Water street, on the application of Edmund Fitzgibbons, a judgment creditor.

When a debtor has concealed his property to defraud those who trust him, or when it cannot be found, and when the sheriff has reported it is usual to have a receiver appointed for the management of the debtor's affairs pending an investigation in the shape of supplementary proceedings. This prevents a dishonest debtor squandering his credit while these proceedings are in progress by disposing of his property.

The courts of New York found it necessary to interfere with Smith's peculiar methods of conducting his private business, and all the other members of the combine, including this same Spangenberg—the courts of New Jersey have found it necessary to enjoin because of their mean, treacherous and illegal acts, growing out of the deal referred to and following with the treatment of Chief Carey then which the snubbing by this same Spangenberg of the Christian people of this community when they appealed to him not to grant certain liquor licenses. The conduct of the applicants was considered particularly offensive to these people, who supposing this Spangenberg to be a man of better instincts than he afterwards proved himself to be, thought he would listen to reason. Every one of his own Netherwood neighbors signed a special appeal to him, setting forth good reasons why he ought not to do as he afterwards did, but he preferred to be the most servile tool of the two men above referred to (nice specimens) and utterly ignore those who had been deceived into electing him.

Spangenberg says he did his dirty work, "not withstanding the gross representations in The News," but fails to show a single instance of misrepresentation. On the contrary The News has given facts and figures which cannot be gainsayed. Mr. Spangenberg is silent about the outrageous increase in taxes—above the taxes under the Council of 1889, just before the combine by their treachery got control of our affairs, which extravagant increase would not have been possible without Spangenberg's vote.

Before you talk about misrepresentation in The News of you and your ilk, you had better be able to give us a single instance, or we will be compelled to consider correct another paper's reference to you as the "whining Spangenberg."

The people know you now and your whining won't save you, nor any of the other parties to that ignoble deal to ruin this city.

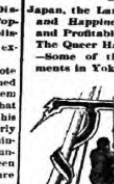
A TRIP TO JAPAN.

MR. NEWMAN'S INTERESTING TALK LAST EVENING AT THE Y. M. C. A.

Japan, the Land of "Peace, Poetry and Happiness." — An Instructive and Profitable Evening Enjoyed.—The Queer Habits of the Celestial.—Some of the Modern Improvements in Yokohama.



O JAPAN—a free round trip—was given by Mr. George A. Newman of Orange, in a most interesting and instructive manner at the Young Men's Christian Association rooms last evening. He spoke in part as follows: "About eleven months ago, just after my return from Japan, one of your members asked me if I would come and tell you a little I had seen there.

I am glad to be with you to-night, and will try to take you with me over some parts of Japan and tell you of some of the things I saw there.

It would be very hard indeed in half or three-quarters of an hour or in fact an evening to take you over about 18,000 miles of travel from the time I left my home until my return.

I will just try to take you over part of my journey as rapidly as I can.

I will not stop to take you across the continent. I will simply start from San Francisco. We reached there on the 7th of July, 1890.

The next day, the eighth, I believe the record shows, was the hottest day of the year; at le st, it was on the Pacific coast."

We left in the afternoon at three o'clock on that day, taking the good ship Rio de Janeiro for a journey of five thousand miles by water.

Passing down through the Golden Gate, in a very few hours we found ourselves upon the broad Pacific.

We arrived at Yokohama, which is a port of entry, on the 26th of July, sometime during the night, and when we awoke in the morning we found ourselves about a mile out from the city.

Vessels cannot get up to the city of Yokohama from the fact that the water is not deep enough. They must anchor out about a mile from the city.

When I had dressed, I went on deck. All around us were native boats ready to transport the passengers to the shore, and I think I am safe when I say I saw a thousand Japanese men and boys, almost naked, with just a strip of cloth about the loins. I don't think I ever felt more lonesome in my life.

Presently, however, one of the officers came to me and said: "Mr. Newman, I think there is a gentleman on the other side who wants to see you."

I was very glad to find it was my friend Mr. John Swift, whom some of you no doubt know. We then went ashore.

Yokohama resembles very much the approach to our Battery in New York. There is a large stone wall very much like the battery though the workmanship is not quite as fine and finished. The Custom House is the first thing you run into. A little nephew whom I have there—he was born in Yokohama—and who rattles Japanese faster than I can talk English, got us through the Japanese Custom House very easily indeed. He jabbered off something to the officers and away we went.

The Jankisha, a carriage drawn only by men, is the mode of traveling in Japan, and to me of course it was very strange. There were four in the party and we had five Jankishas. We got into them, one in each, and I assure you I never felt so foolish in my life. I thought everybody was looking and laughing at me.

But I saw that everybody else was riding just as I was, and I rode a great many miles after that in these same vehicles. These Jankisha men are wonderful runners. I want to speak of it now before I forget it. I think there are very few men that can equal them. One of the missionaries told me that on one occasion he wanted to go sixty miles. He started in the morning, and one of these men took him over the country, sixty miles, in one day and got him to his place of destination before bedtime. It sounds like a big story. It was told me by the missionary himself, and I do not suppose he told an untruth."

Mr. Newman then spoke of the cosmopolitan character of Yokohama's population. He said that the foreigners, Dutch, the English, Germans, Scotch and Americans led a pretty fast club life, and although there are a good many good Christians there the life of the average foreigner is not exactly what it should be.

He said he found in Yokohama street cars built by Messrs. John Stevenson & Co., and conductors and drivers as we have them, though of course they were a little different, and there are electric lights and telegraph wires all over the city.

He said Japan had a Postal system that is equal to if not better than that of this or any other country.

The next day, the 27th of July, we went to Tokio, the capital. This is a city about the size of New York city. The streets are beautifully laid out and are as smooth as any macadamized street we have in this part of the country and they are scrupulously clean. It is a very quiet city and also a very clean city.

EMMA DAY SEEKS DEATH

SHE TAKES POISON TWICE WHILE IN THE HANDS OF THE POLICE.

Her Sister and She Were Summit's Notorious Firebugs—She Applied for Lodging at the Police Station, but Immediately Afterwards Swallowed a Big Dose from a Vial of Laudanum.

Emma Day has been the principal actor in a number of New Jersey sensations during the past few years. Three years ago she and her sister made several desperate attempts to burn down buildings in this city. There was a fiendish streak in them that craved notoriety.

When the two were arrested they tried to set fire to the police station. They attacked the officers and fought like demons. They were so tough that toughness was considered too mild a term to use in describing them. Gleefully they told of their incendiary efforts, and they confessed to participation in the notorious fire-raising cases here. The girls were sent to prison for a term.

About a year ago Emma turned up in Newark and attempted suicide by poisoning. Instead of going to some out-of-the-way place to hide herself until the deed was done, she took the poison and then went to the Second Precinct police station. The police discovered her condition and an emetic was given. Next day her aunt took charge of her.

Nothing more was heard of Emma for months. But she still had an itching for notoriety. She wanted to kill herself and in such a way as to cause a sensation. On Thursday night she called at the Second Precinct station and asked for a night's lodging. She was neatly dressed. She gave her name as Fanny Wilson, and said she lived at Liberty Corner's, N. J. Lieut. Dowling allowed her to use the captain's room. He did not recognize her, as she had aged considerably since he saw her a year ago. She was then not quite twenty years old.

Soon after she went to the room Lieut. Dowling saw that something was wrong with her. In response to his questions she admitted having taken a dose of laudanum. An empty bottle corroborated her confession. She refused to give any reason for her attempted suicide, nor would she say anything about herself. She was sent to the City Hospital in an ambulance.

"We can't do anything for her," the physician said. "She took an overdose and vomited it all up again. She is all right now."

So the policeman took her back to the station and she was locked up in a cell until yesterday morning. Then she was released and advised to go home. An hour later she was back to the station.

"I am so sick she said to Sergt. Beyer, who was in charge.

She was sent back once more to the City Hospital. On the way she threw away a bottle which had contained laudanum.

"Yes, I took another dose," she said in reply to the policeman's question.

The physicians at the City Hospital thought he knew her, but he wasn't sure. He looked closely at her face.

"Why," he said, "you're the girl who was here at midnight. What's up now?"

"Been taking another dose of laudanum," answered the policeman, who accompanied her. She said nothing.

"Laudanum?" said the physician. "Why, laudanum isn't any good to you. Nothing but strychnine will kill you."

Emma smiled in a delancholy way as if she felt complimented but she said nothing. The pumps were applied to her in a vigorous fashion.

Emma was soon beyond danger and she will be tried for attempting to commit suicide.

It was in March, 1889, that Emma and her sister Henrietta fired the post-office block in Summit. Eleven families lived in the block. The sisters went into the house of Mrs. Susan Campbell, where a baby lay sleeping in the cradle. Emma poured kerosene oil on a bundle of rags and then started a blaze. The burning rags were in a closet and Emma shut the door so that the fire might gain headway uninterrupted. The girls went to the house of their sister, Mrs. Henry Ardell, to wait until the fire alarm was given. The occupants of the block had narrow escapes. The Day girls were arrested by Justice Kelly. They told him that they could not help setting fire to buildings, as they liked to see the blaze. To him they confessed the Plainfield fires.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Why They Steal.

It is not as a rule the sneak thief and burglar, whom everybody is on guard against, that in the course of his life steals the most money. It is always the trusted employee who has the confidence of everybody about him that makes the great hauls. A boy goes into an office fresh and bright from school. He has a frank, trustful way with him that all properly born men and women have in youth, before they have been cheated so often that they learn to hide themselves within themselves. But when in spite of being cheated over and again people can still retain this frank, open way through life, it constitutes a great part of that mysterious charm we call magnetism.

The boy wins the hearts of employers by his bright frankness, his quickness and good nature. They in time trust him to any extent, because good nature and obligingness coupled with a quick brain are not plentiful in this world. So it goes on for years. The trusted boy is promoted from post to post of honor and increased wages. They predict for him a splendid future, which he certainly has brains to attain. Then suddenly some trivial thing occurs, perhaps an absence from duty for a day, no matter what. Like a thunderclap comes the revelation that the trusted youth has been stealing right and left for a long time, robbing his friends and employers of hundreds, maybe thousands of dollars.

There was nothing the boy could not have acquired to in that business house. But all goes in a crash. The story follows him, and his future if not ruined is clouded for years. Now it is certain that if he had only had sense enough—plain common sense and foresight—to stick to his work and behave himself in a very short time he would have had far more money than he got by stealing. He stole simply because he had not sense enough to be honest. So with the trusted cashier or president. Those who think they know him best would stake their heads on his integrity, would trust all the savings of their lives to his hands, and do thus trust them. Then some miserable day it falls out that this respected citizen is a thief, a liar and villain.

The few thousands, even the hundreds of thousands for which he has bartered both his present and future, are very paltry compared to what he has lost. The most miserable part of this whole wretched business of gentlemanly stealing is, too, that if the thief would only hold on and remain honest he would ere long in nearly every case have actually more money than he has with all his peculations. He, too, steals for want of sense. It is the best policy to be honest, even if one is honest only from policy.

Be Brief.

In Cyrus Field's advice to young men on how to get rich he says: "Stick to what you undertake. Be honest and be brief. I don't believe in long business letters. There is no business so important that you cannot put the whole of it upon one sheet of paper."

Mr. Field here states one of those great modern truths that ought to sink deep into every human soul, but which do not. Cyrus also thinks the chances for making a fortune are just as good as they ever were, only the methods are different and large combinations of capital are now necessary. But then several poor persons can put their small capital together in our day and make it one large one, so that even the necessity for enormous sums to begin with may be met and fortune won, provided only people will be brief enough. The testimony of this man, who has managed many millions and made them grow larger always, is that he has made the cultivation of brevity in all things a prime point, and found that it paid.

Therefore, be brief, and you will get rich. Whether you make a call, write a letter or preach a sermon, be brief. When you write for publication, be brief. Make no long roll of beginning, make no palaver of ending. Dash into the midst of what you want to say, say it, and stop. The essays in the magazines and reviews could in almost every case be shortened by at least one-half and be the better for it. Life is too short in our century for a deluge of words.

Colonel John R. Weber went to Europe some time since on behalf of the United States government to find out what makes Europeans come to America at the rate of from 300,000 to 1,000,000 a year. He finds that they migrate to us because of two things, namely, the severe demands on them for military service and the low wages for work. European newspapers are, as a rule, not friendly to American immigration, and say not much about the advantages which poor working people will gain in this country, but the masses find it out somehow for themselves, probably from letters of relatives already here, and so they swarm over the ocean to us.

Ithaca has a charter which declares that certain levies of taxes must be passed on by vote of the taxpayers of the city. New York's bachelor governor, Hill, signed the bill conferring this charter. The result is that in Ithaca the women who own property march up like little men and vote whether or not they will tax themselves.

SHOULDER TO SHOULDER

The People's Party Seems to Be Booming.

A BIG JOINT CONVENTION CALLED.

The Alliance, Knights of Labor, Patrons of Husbandry and Many Kindred Organizations to Meet in February and Pool Their Political Strength if Possible

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 20.—The most important meeting that has yet occurred in connection with the Alliance convention was held here in the morning. This was the gathering of the executive committee of the Confederated Industrial union, composed of the Farmers' Alliance, the Farmers' Mutual Benefit association, Knights of Labor, Citizens' Alliance, Working men's League, Patrons of Husbandry and kindred organizations to consult about calling a convention of all these organizations on Feb 22. The committee decided that this convention, looking to unity in legislative demands and political action, shall be held at some point in the central states. The fixing of a place of meeting was left to Messrs. Terrell, Taubeneck and Baumgarten, who were instructed to choose from the following cities: Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati and Springfield, Ill. The committee will select the one that offers to do most for the meeting. The committee is to report within the next twenty days.

The Basis of Representation.

The basis of representation decided upon for the meeting of the Confederated Industrial union is two delegates from each state federated constituting and one delegate for each 10,000 votes cast by the People's party. This will make a delegation of about 600.

"This gathering will be the most important that has ever assembled in the United States," said Chairman Terrell, of the executive committee. "There will be eighteen or twenty organizations represented; it will not be a meeting for political purposes. The union will declare its principles, and if the political party that adopts a platform which conforms most nearly to our declaration of principles will get our votes."

They Favor the Subtreasury Plank.

At today's session of the F. M. B. A., the following officers were elected: President, S. S. Gaus, of Iowa; vice president, W. A. Bartlett, of West Virginia; secretary, John P. Stille, of Illinois.

It was voted to increase the per capita tax from one to two cents. The funds will be used in pushing the F. M. B. A. in organized territory. A resolution was presented indorsing the subtreasury plank of the Alliance and favorably received but not voted upon. A joint committee of the organizations is at work and it is probable that a plan will soon be adopted. Taubeneck says the F. M. B. A. is in favor of the third party consolidation which, he thinks, is bound to occur in a few days.

Will Form an Alliance.

The ultimatum of the Alliance to the anti-subtreasury people is that the organization will not recede from its adherence to the Ocala demands of 1890 platform. The anti-subtreasury men, McAllister says, will at once form a new alliance. Another objection they have to the Alliance is the government ownership of railways.

Senator Wolcott Attacks the President.

DENVER, Nov. 20.—At the session of the bimetalling congress United States Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, made a forcible speech in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and took advantage of the opportunity to strike a blow at President Harrison. He stigmatizes the demonetization of silver in 1873 as the most iniquitous treachery ever perpetrated, and attacked Senator Sherman's prediction that with a circulation of $50,000,000 silver would drive the gold out of the country, and claimed that since making that statement, and since the silver circulation had reached into hundreds of millions, that the Sherman following had changed its position and was demanding an increase in the circulating currency. The silver dollar, he said, is the dollar of the people, and not that of the aristocracy. The silver dollar is an honest one. The opponents of bimetallism say it is a 72-cent dollar, but ship a million to Liverpool and you will get an equal number of gold ones less the transportation expenses.

SENATOR WOLCOTT.

The West Not Selfish.

Senator Wolcott denied that the west was selfish in its demand for free coinage, but they wanted silver restored to its place as a money metal, because it was right and because the commerce of the world required it.

Senator Wolcott said that in the future, as in the past, no matter what the position of the Republican party or its chief executive might be, no matter how much his (Wolcott's) actions might bring him into disfavor in the councils of the party in the senate, or no difference how much it would obscure the sunlight of presidential patronage from shining upon him, he would be found fighting to the end for the restoration of silver into its former place and for its free and unrestricted coinage and recognition as money material.

The senator's remarks were cheered to the echo. The committee on resolutions were drawn up strong and uncompromising resolutions favoring unlimited coinage.

There is every reason to believe that they will be passed today by the congress without much opposition.

Faster Stratton Dead.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Henry Stratton, the faster, died at Bellevue hospital of "fatty degeneration of the heart, due to alcoholism," and exhaustion due to his self imposed fast. Stratton was a cook in the Messenger House at Cortland, N. Y. He entered a fasting contest six or seven weeks ago with the intention of breaking Succi's forty-five day record.

Stratton at the beginning of the fast weighed over 275 pounds. He lost during the fast nearly sixty pounds.

Reporter Wong Chin Foo Acquitted.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Wong Chin Foo, the Chinese reporter charged with failing registration, was acquitted in Recorder Smyth's court.

THE SPEAKERSHIP FIGHT.

Mills, Crisp and Springer All at New York City.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—The active contest for the speakership for the next house of representatives was transferred in earnest yesterday from Washington to this city. Mr. Crisp was already here, Mr. Springer arrived on a morning train and Mr. Mills came later. Mr. Mills's objective point was Brooklyn, and he went directly to the house of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, at 176 Columbia Heights. The Mills boom has been engineered of late by members of the Reform club of this city, under the direction of

R. Q. MILLS

Representative John De Witt Warner, and in New England by Sherman Hoar and George Fred Williams. They have been aided by Congressman Tracy, the New York Times, the St. Louis Republic and other ardent supporters of Mr. Cleveland.

Senator Gorman, Governor Abbett and Congressman O'Neill, the Democratic leader of Boston, are supposed to be friendly to Mr. Crisp. That is, Crisp and Mr. Mills will lead on the first ballot nobody questions. The only hope entertained by Mr. Springer, Mr. Bynum, Mr. McMillan or Mr. Hatch is that he may have a chance in the event of a deadlock. Mr. Mills' friends claim 80 votes toward the 118 and Crisp's friends say he has 107 votes pledged. This is said a conservative estimate. They leave out Connecticut and Brooklyn entirely and expect to get at least two more votes from Pennsylvania, two more from Alabama, another from California and finally all but two from New York. Should they succeed they would have a majority on the first ballot. Of the other candidates Springer will get the votes from Illinois and a few more from Iowa, Nebraska and possibly Minnesota. Bynum will have Indiana and Hatch Missouri. Wilson, if he enters the race, will have West Virginia. McMillan will have Tennessee and a score or more of scattering votes. If there should be a prospect of close work between Mills and Crisp at last, many of the new members who have no special preference will vote for McMillan long enough to see which way the cat is going to jump.

W. M. SPRINGER.

FASHIONS

Boas Again the Rage.

Boas are to be the rage again. They are much larger than three or four years ago, and are in all lengths, from the short collar tied at the back with long ribbons to the long garland which will be draped. They are made of lace, flowers, feathers and every kind of fur. The cock feather boas are not stylish unless of the pointed black variety; they are made very large at the back of the neck and taper to slender points at the ends. Great fluffy boas of gauze are made in all the delicate colors for ballroom wear.

Attractive Hairdressing.

The fair sex is not restricted this season to any one style of coiffure. Women may dress their hair high or low as best suits their individual requirements and yet be in fashion.

A PARISIAN COIFFURE.

In our illustration is shown one of the very latest Parisian fashions. In this the hair is dressed low in the neck in coils or soft curls as desired. A band of velvet is then placed about the coil and an exquisite coil of hair while a decorative comb thrust in above gives a pretty finish to the whole. The fringe of hair in front is brought very low on the forehead, while a slight waved undulation gives a natural effect and harmonious contour.

Scarfs and fichus of muslin for evening wear are to be had in several new shapes. They are mostly trimmed with lace or marabouts.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Jimmie Larkin Knocked Out by Johnnie Griffin.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20.—The fight to a finish between Johnnie Griffin, of Brooklyn, Mass., and Jimmie Larkin, of Jersey City, before Pelican A. C. Olympic Athletic club last night for a purse of $2,500 of which $500 went to the loser, was won by Griffin in the fourth round.

In the second round Griffin got in three rightHanders on Jimmie's body, and it was evident that Larkin was gone. Larkin was seen to be knocked out, but arose before three had been counted.

In the third round Griffin pushed Larkin out of the ring over the lower rope and the ball of Larkin's left foot rested hard to his corner and complained that his right leg was sprained. It was rubbed and he limped to the center of the ring for the fourth round. The fourth round was a short slugging match, in which Larkin was twice knocked down. The first time he arose in three seconds and the second time he was counted out.

The War Against Gloucesters.

GLOUCESTER, N. J., Nov. 20.—The Law and Order league, of Camden, N. J., has taken up the cudgel against the Gloucester race track, and if the place is not closed within forty-eight hours a force of men will be sent down there sufficient to arrest all attendees of the track. The consequence is that Thompson will not dare keep the track going another week in defiance of the law.

AS OUR NEXT PRESIDENT

Mr. McKinley Thus Cheered by Boston Republicans.

HE TALKS ABOUT THE TARIFF ISSUE

Many Prominent Republicans Present at the Banquet of the Home Market Club.

Senator Hoar Refers to the Free Iron and Coal Question in New England.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—The Home Market club's banquet in honor of the leaders of legislation at the Hotel Vendome last night was attended by fully 800 members and guests, among them being General W. F. Draper, who presided; Governor-elect William McKinley of Ohio, Senators Aldrich and Hoar, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Hon. A. W. Beard, Hon. Elijah A. Morse, ex-Governor Alexander H. Rice, ex-Governor Brackett, Hon. T. B. Reed, Postmaster Hart and T. Jefferson Coolidge. After discussing the elaborate menu, General Draper made a brief speech, during which he mentioned McKinley's name. The called forth an enthusiastic demonstration, the company rising and cheering for "the future president of the United States." At Tremont Temple, where the speaking commenced, Senator Hoar was the first orator. He said in part:

Senator Hoar's Speech.

Our Democratic brethren are making special threats and are offering special bribes to Massachusetts. One orator tells us that unless she comes to their terms the banners of free trade are to be flung to the breeze. Others tempt the virtue of her manufacturers with the bribes of free iron and free wool and free coal. To the first of these temptations the Massachusetts will abandon the policy that they have held for thirty years, and to which they owe all their prosperity, and free coal so long as American coal of better quality can be laid down in Boston for cheaper than that from Nova Scotia? Will free iron be much of a bribe just now, when this country is taking its place at the head of the production of the world? Do they think that the woolen manufacturers of New England are so lacking in a sense of public duty that the home product should be protected without a corresponding protection to the wool of the farmer?

A true friend of the friend of man, Senator Platt, of Connecticut, aptly compared this specious free trade device to the story of Polyphemus and Ulysses. The one-eyed giant had promised Ulysses a reward. When Ulysses claimed it, he told him that the reward that he would give him would be that he should be devoured the last of his companions.

Senator Hoar then paid a glowing tribute to the services performed in the last congress by Thomas B. Reed, Major McKinley and Senator Aldrich. Governor-elect McKinley was the next speaker. He received an enthusiastic reception and almost every sentence elicited applause. He said:

Mr. McKinley's Address.

Protection is a great cause, because it is that of home, country and family. Any form of taxation is inconsistent with the best form of taxation is that which rests most easily upon the citizen, and while raising the required revenue, gives encouragement to our own people in their occupations. The Home Market club and Republican party don't believe in free trade, except in the face of a national emergency. The difference between a revenue and a protective tariff is one of principle, which touches every enterprise of the people. A protective tariff, a more certain agent for raising revenue than a revenue tariff, encourages the industries of our own country and protects our own labor. A revenue tariff encourages foreign labor, and by so much and discourages the domestic, for you cannot have large importations of competing foreign products without displacing domestic products, diminishing the demand for American working men and increasing the demand for working men abroad. There comes a time when a revenue tariff fails, because the people have grown too poor to send money abroad to buy; then a protective tariff fails. Under it we have reached the first rank in the world as a manufacturing, mining and agricultural nation.

Not a Burden, He Says.

No one knows from personal realization of a burden that there is such a thing in existence as an American protective tariff, and a man isn't very much hurt if he doesn't know it, but every one knows from personal realization the blessings of a protective tariff; the laboring man from work and wages, the farmer from the most magnificent home market in the world, and the consumer from cheaper products than under a revenue tariff.

This is the best country in the world, and it is our duty to keep it so. Our history shows that the balance of trade against our country from 1888 to 1860 of $366,000,000 was turned in the next thirty years from 1861 to 1891 into a balance of $2,666,000,000 in our favor. If it is foreign trade you want, you find the fact the government ever enjoyed under the protective periods of its history. In the last twenty years we have reduced the national indebtedness 38 per cent, and the indebtedness of counties and municipalities over 18 per cent., and our per capita debt is less than that of any government in the world.

When Free Trade May Come.

We never had as much foreign trade in any twelve months as in the last two months, and Europe paid us at the end of that time $90,000,000 in gold, representing the excess they bought of us over what we bought of them. We never had anything but raw material under a revenue tariff. It was under developed till touched by the magic hand of protection. This policy of protection must be maintained, because it represents the highest civilization and noblest destiny. I will tell you when we can have free trade. Whenever the nations of the world will bring their condition up to ours, whenever they will pay to their labor the same wages we pay ours. We will meet them in the markets of the world, and it will be the survival of the fittest.

Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, and ex-Speaker Reed also spoke.

Governor Campbell Talks.

NEW YORK, Nov. 20.—Governor James E. Campbell, of Ohio, who is at the Fifth Avenue hotel, says: "We lost the fight, but the Democracy of Ohio is neither discouraged nor demoralized. It is true that the Republican plurality in Ohio is larger this year than it has been for nineteen years, but I ran about 15,000 ahead of my ticket this year.

"The Republican managers of Major McKinley's canvass make no concealment of the fact that they had all the money they could possibly use. A contribution of $6,000 was tendered to the chairman of the Republican committee of Hamilton county. He said that he had $40,000 deposited to his credit in the bank, which was all that he desired, and he forwarded the $6,000 to the Republican state committee at Columbus simply to get it off his hands."

Governor Campbell was asked about the prevailing sentiment among Ohio Democrats regarding the presidential nomination next year.

"I think," said Governor Campbell, "that a poll of the state would show a majority for Governor Boies in favor of Cleveland. Governor Hill, Governor Patterson, Mr. Gorman, Mr. Gray of Indiana and Governor Boies of Iowa all have many friends in Ohio."

Ex-Consul Diller Dead.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—Isaac R. Diller, ex-United States consul at Florence, died here Nov. 19 from a complication of diseases.

TARRED AND FEATHERED A GIRL.

Julia Beam's Persecutors Held for Trial at Glen Gardner, N. J.

GLEN GARDNER, N. J., Nov. 20.—The Glen Gardner Whitecaps who tarred and feathered Julia Beam two weeks ago were held for trial here. The prisoners are John T. Bangham, Austin Lisk, Michael Collins, Edward Shannon, Harry Thatcher, Clark Fisk, and Frank Miller. Mrs. Ballington Booth of the Salvation Army is here and will help the girl to reform.

When the examination of Michael Collins was begun Julia Beam was the first witness called. She came quietly and modestly into the room, her eyes red from weeping. There was nothing about her to mark the shocking depravity that Glen Gardner people talk so much about. On the contrary, she would impress almost any one as a quiet, well behaved girl, and if she only possessed the necessary apparel she would be more than ordinarily attractive.

She related how she had been in the cornfield on the night of Oct. 17 with her sister, Edward Lisk and Elwood Warman. While there ten masked men had suddenly appeared; one had caught her by the hair and flung her violently to the ground. Then some one had torn off her clothing, and she was covered with tar and feathers from her waist to her feet.

The charge made against each of the prisoners is assault and battery, but under the statutes of New Jersey it is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary for two years and a fine of $500.

THE UTICA EXPRESS ROBBER CAUGHT

Oliver C. Perry Arrested in Vermont by a Detective.

BARRE, Vt., Nov. 20.—Oliver Curtis Perry was arrested at Washington upon the charge of having robbed an express car on the New York Central railroad, near Utica, N. Y., on Sept. 30 last. The arrest was made by Detective Hinds of the Pinkerton agency, who has tracked Perry for over a month, he having secured a clew through the pawning of a watch stolen from the express car.

One thousand dollars reward is offered for the conviction of the robber. Perry's reputation is bad and he has been arrested a number of times before for various crimes.

Two Miners Killed.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 20.—Charles Cutcabbage was instantly killed and Victor Miskill was mortally wounded by a fall of top coal in the Sugar Notch colliery. Anthony Silvesky was killed in the Northampton colliery by a similar fall. All were miners.

ACTOR FLORENCE DEAD.

The Curtain Falls on a Great Comedian's Life.

HIS POPULARITY WAS WORLD WIDE

Loved and Admired in America and Great Britain as a Great Actor, a Cultured and Noble Hearted Gentleman, and Prince of Bon Vivants and Jokers.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—William J. Florence died at 5:30 o'clock last night in his room in the Continental hotel. The end was altogether unexpected. The patient had been rallying steadily ever since Tuesday night, and so strong was the belief that he was on the road to recovery that Mr. Florence's brother, Inspector Conlin, left on the 6 o'clock train for New York. He felt sure then, from the cheerful demeanor of the sick man, that he had passed the critical point. The same old cheery smile was on his face, and he was able to chat and joke, and assure his brother that he would be out of bed in a day or two.

Two hours after Mr. Florence sank into a state of coma, which so alarmed his valet that he sent for Dr. Donellan.

The End Had Come.

The physician saw instantly that the end had come, and twenty minutes later the actor had breathed his last. The only persons present besides Mrs. Barney Williams and Mrs. Wyard were the doctor and the servant. A cable message was sent to Mrs. Florence telling her that her husband was critically ill. The friends could not tell the blunt truth that took from a most devoted wife one of the noblest and most devoted of husbands. Mr. Florence's death was primarily due to double pneumonia. The immediate cause was heart failure.

The body will be kept embalmed until the arrival of Mrs. Florence. She will sail from England Saturday.

Mr. Florence's Career.

William J. Florence, whose family name is Conlin, was born in Albany, July 26, 1831. He was always "Billy" Florence. On the playbills only was he William J. Florence. From one end of the country to the other people will hear the news of his death with a sense of personal loss. Everybody loved him. With him dies a score of people whom he made—people whom others fashioned into human shape, but whom "Billy" Florence lighted with that divine spark which made them live and be. And in years to come, when tongue or fancy recalls the comedian, the mind's eye will see the shadowy forms of the Hon. Bardwell Slote, Captain Cuttle, Sir Lucius O'Trigger.

Of the stage he was an incorrigible joker, the prince of raconteurs, bon vivant and bibliophile, the sentimentalist and gourmet, and one of the finest gentlemen and best actors the stage has ever had. For forty-two years "Billy" Florence has been making people love life as he loved it. It was in 1849 that he went into the stage. When he was a boy he was a member of the Murdock Dramatic association, of New York city. He said "Hold off" in "Evadne" at the Bowery theater in 1849, but his first real speaking part was as Peter in "The Stranger," at Richmond, Va.

His First Success.

After a season of hard work and late in 1851 Florence appeared in Providence, R. I., playing Macduff to the elder Booth's Macbeth. He also played Laertes with Booth. He was with Forrest also, playing Titus, Horatio and Lucullus. In April, 1852, that Florence made his first pronounced success. It was in a whimsically fashioned Yankee monologue called "A Row at the Lyceum; or, Green Room Secrets." It was supposed to represent a rehearsal. The following August Florence appeared as Tom Tiptoe, in "The Hunchback," in the Broadway theater. He was very successful. Florence was married Jan. 1, 1853. His wife had been Malvina Pray, one of the Pray sisters, dancers and sketch actresses. Mrs. Florence soon made a name for herself as a comedienne. Their characters, she as a Yankee girl, he as an Irish boy, made them the talk of the town.

As a Practical Joker.

It was about this time that Florence began to be known as a practical joker. He and the elder Sothern were engaged in innumerable pranks. One day Southern had invited Lord Fitzroy, the son of the Duke of Seaford, to breakfast. While the host was out of the room Florence persuaded Fitzroy that his health demanded that he should throw himself up and down on the floor. Then Florence ran and told Sothern that Fitzroy was insane and imagined that Florence wanted to murder him, and that he was trying to crawl out of the transom. Sothern rushed up and pacified the lordling.

Mr. and Mrs. Florence went abroad in 1856. The couple made fifty-seven trips across the Atlantic since then. When they returned, in 1857, they appeared in Burton's new theater, playing "Yankee Housekeeper," "Lalla Rookh," "Dombey and Son" and "Toodles."

One of Florence's greatest successes was that of Bob Brierly in "The Ticket-of-Leave Man." It is said that no one has ever played the part as well as he. He played Bob Brierly more than 3,000 times. But Captain Cuttle was then, as it was until the day of his death, his most artistic performance.

His Wonderful Feat of Memory.

In 1867 Florence saw Robertson's play "Caste" in London. Calling into action his wonderful memory he came to New York and produced the play, carrying the whole drama in his mind. It was a success. A year later Florence delighted New York with a performance of Jules Eckert Goodman's "Coquette," in which Charles Fechter made famous. "The Field of the Cloth of Gold" was produced in Brooklyn in 1870. Florence wrote it. For the first fifteen years during which he and his wife played together every play in which they appeared came from his pen.

It was Mrs. Florence who suggested "The Mighty Dollar," which made so much money for the Florences. Ben Woolf, a newspaper man, was directed to write it. It was first called "The Almighty Dollar." The public wouldn't have it, and so it was changed to "The Mighty Dollar." It was produced in 1873. The Hon. Bardwell Slote and Mrs. Gimblet Gilfoyle have come to be among the best known characters on the stage. Mr. and Mrs. Florence played "The Mighty Dollar" over 3,300 times. The critics went for it on the first production, but it ran 100 nights. It made thousands upon thousands of dollars.

Four years ago Mr. and Mrs. Florence gave up their joint starring tours. They went to London, where Mrs. Florence has since lived. Three years ago Florence became associated with Joseph Jefferson.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

Much speculation is current in Washington as to when Governor-Senator Hill will take his seat in the senate.

Anonymous letters and cards accusing the New York Jewelers' association of discrimination against the Hebrews have been circulated at New York.

So great has been the attendance at the New York horse show that at least $100,000 will be realized on the enterprise.

William Pritchard has contracted with the Mexican government to construct a harbor at Coatzacoalcos, in the state of Vera Cruz, for $4,500,000.

One-third of the wheat crop of North Dakota is reported as still unthreshed, as the cold weather and lack of accommodations for threshers prevent farmers from obtaining help.

William Keck, a quarryman, of Ironton, Pa., is in jail, threatened with lynching, charged with the murder of Mrs. William Nitch and mortally wounding of her husband on Wednesday.

The Mormon church choir, 300 strong, will visit Chicago during the World's fair and compete for a prize in the Exposition, with seven choirs from Wales and a number of American choirs.

Bequests to educational institutions and charities to the amount of $500,000 are made in the will of F. O. H. P. Burnham, the old Boston bookseller, who died last week, leaving $1,000,000.

Jacob Ruffner has been arrested at Pittsburg on the charge of killing a boy named Rosenteel, twenty-five years ago. Ruffner threw a stone at the boy, whom he found in his cherry tree at Rimcoton, Pa.

After an investigation of charges of inhuman treatment of the forty United States prisoners in the Arkansas penitentiary, Attorney General Miller has ordered their removal to the Columbus penitentiary.

J. Hubbard Marr, charged with the betrayal of Nellie Baker, at Kansas City, Mo., married the young woman Wednesday, clasping her hand through the bars of his cell. She cannot now testify against him.

Governor Jackson, of Maryland, has appointed ex-Congressman Gibson to the vacancy in the United States senate occasioned by the death of Senator Wilson. The appointment is for about a month only, as the legislature will meet in January to elect a new senator.

Lieutenant Commander Joseph Marthon, commander of the United States ship Palos, died at Shanghai.

LAURIER ON ANNEXATION.

The Canadian Statesman Will Not Discuss the Question Until Compelled To.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—The Hon. Wilfred Laurier, the Canadian statesman, was given a public reception in Faneuil hall by the prominent merchants of Boston.

Laurier's utterances on reciprocity and annexation were listened to with interest. He said: "The question I would speak on today is that of bringing closer relations between the United States and Canada. I represent one-half the people of Canada and speak their sentiments. Our banner is marked for the greatest freedom of trade which we believe is necessary. To those who believe in protection, I should say that the trade of Canada would not be affected by reciprocity. You could settle this question without referring to the subject of annexation. We, the Liberal party are being accused of being traitors to our country, and are told that reciprocity would mean annexation. It would not. Canadian people are pleased with American people, and so am I, but I never will discuss the question until forced to, and then I will not discuss it on a political basis, but on financial merits. It is not a political question, but one of political economy."

Another Railway Murder.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 20.—Rose Johnson, aged fifty years, was found dead last night in the house of William Ward, a woodchopper, in Montrose street, East Rahway. There were marks on her head that looked as if she had been beaten with a club. She has for some time been housekeeper for Ward, who is now missing.

Minister Smith Not at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—Charles Emory Smith, United States minister to Russia, is not in this city, as has been reported recently. He left here for Russia some time ago.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 20.—Three new cases of smallpox were discovered yesterday in the Italian quarter of Newark, making seven cases so far reported.

ALMY MUST HANG.

Christie Warden's Murderer to Die in December, 1892.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 20.—The Almy murder trial is over, the slayer of Christie Warden has been pronounced guilty and has been taken to Concord jail, there to remain until the time of his execution, Dec. 6, 1892. There was great excitement in court when Judges Doe and Allen handed down their decision, which was received with cheers. The following is the official document:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, GRAFTON COUNTY, SS.
SUPREME COURT, NOV. 19, 1891.

State vs. F. C. Almy. Indictment for murder. The defendant having pleaded guilty the question of degree is determined by the court, and it finds that the defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree. Hereupon the judgment and sentence of the law is that said F. C. Almy be imprisoned in the state prison at Concord until the first Tuesday in December, 1892, and that on said first Tuesday of December, 1892, between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon, within the walls or yard of the state prison, he be hanged by the neck until he is dead.

Justices DOE and ALLEN.

The chief claim of Almy's counsel was that it was impulsive insanity which led his client to kill Christie Warden. Had Almy not been sentenced to death it is likely that there would have been an outbreak among the people here, because the feeling against the murderer has ran very high. The crime for which Almy was sentenced to pay the life penalty was the deliberate murder of Christie Warden. She had refused to have anything to do with him, after he had been pressing his unwelcome attentions on her. He was employed about the Warden farm. When Miss Warden and her sister and mother were walking home one evening Almy seized Christie, dragged her over the ground to a seclude spot and killed her. He then disappeared, and for an entire month a most vigorous search was maintained for him.

At the end of that time he was discovered in the Wardens' barn, where he had been staying during all the time the authorities had were searching for him. One of his legs was broken by a bullet as he tried to escape. It was set, and he subsequently broke it himself in an effort to delay the trial.

Almy Is Sawtelle's Neighbor.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 20.—Several hundred people gathered at the station when the train with Almy arrived from Plymouth. The prisoner was obliged to walk on his crutches from the cars to a barge in which he was to be conveyed to the prison, a distance of several rods. He arrived with difficulty and had to stop two or three times and rest. He was surrounded by the police. As he approached the barge, cries of "Hang him!" "String him up with a rope!" and "Lynch him!" were heard. He was assigned to one of the murderers' cells. His nearest neighbor will be Nicholas Sawtelle, who is to be executed for killing his brother Hiram.

CHILI IS MORE FRIENDLY.

The Dispatch of War Vessels Seems to Have Had Effect.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via GALVESTON, TEX., Nov. 20.—The Chilian government has descended from the lofty pedestal it has so long occupied in dealing with the outrageous assault by a Valparaiso mob upon the sailors of the Baltimore. Captain Schley has received a letter from the Intendente of this city inclosing another letter from Judge Crimes Foster. In his communication Judge Foster grants the request made some time ago by Captain Schley, that our representations here be furnished by the court of inquiry with copies of all depositions made before it in the Baltimore investigation. It will be remembered that this same request had been absolutely refused on all previous occasions.

The dispatch of American war vessels to the Pacific squadron had a salutary effect in Chili. The electoral college unanimously voted for Admiral Jorge Montt as president of the republic.

Admiral Brown Praises Egan.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 20.—The United States cruiser San Francisco, flagship of the Pacific squadron, which left here April 8 for Chili, has just returned here. Admiral George Brown says that the fall of Valparaiso, after the defeat of the Balmaceda forces at Vina Del Mar by the Congressionalists under General Canto, was attended with scenes of carnage and rapine. Concerning the reports that the San Francisco had given Balmaceda information in regard to the landing of the insurgents at Quinteros, the admiral refused to talk at any length. He said:

"I took with me on the San Francisco only one person belonging to my crew, and he was a flag officer belonging to the German warship Leipzig. On returning to Valparaiso I sent Lieutenant George L. Dyer ashore with a flag of truce launch. He, as was necessary, went to the office of the Intendente. The dispatch was then cabled to Washington, not a soul in Valparaiso knowing its contents. The statement that the papers got out extra stating that, by the kindness of the San Francisco officers, they gave particulars of the landing of Quanteros is altogether false." Concerning Minister Egan, he says: "He conducted himself through the entire trouble with a dignity commanded by his position. No man situated as he could have done more."

Imprisoned by Fonseca.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 20.—Dictator Fonseca has imprisoned all the deputies from Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, except four to be sent to Rio Janeiro. Passage of his ships up the Rio Grande river is stopped. Uruguay will remain neutral. Two prominent members of the junta have resigned.

Died on His Locomotive.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 20.—Henry Flynn, a Lehigh Valley engineer, died on his engine while the train was running at full speed between Waverly and Elmira. He was apparently well when he left Waverly.

A FINE FOOTBALL PLAYER.

Mentioned by Many as One of the Best Tackiers in the Country.

CAPTAIN W. W. BLUNT

William W. Blunt of the class of '92, of Lehigh University, and captain and manager of the Lehigh football team, was born in Camden, Md., twenty-two years ago. He weighs 190 pounds, and is slightly over six feet in height. He played on the St. John's College team before entering Lehigh, and has been on the Lehigh team during the entire course. He is the best tackle Lehigh has ever had, and is considered by many of the best judges of the game to be one of the best in the country. He does a great deal of the tackling and is a strong and speedy runner. He has proved himself an excellent captain. Blunt has also played on the Lehigh Lacrosse team during his entire course. He is at present president of the Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association.

The Kite-Shaped Track.

Budd Doble, the noted horseman, in an interview recently, had this to say about the kite-shaped track:

"The difference between the kite-shaped and regulation track," said Mr. Doble, "is that in the former there is but one turn, about a third of a mile, while on the regulation track there are two turns of a quarter of a mile each, making in all a half mile. Now tracks are measured for the mile three feet from the pole, but a horse never travels closer to the pole than five feet. It is plain to see, therefore, that the horse on a kite track, making the turn of a third of a mile five feet from the pole, has a decided advantage over the horse traveling a half mile on the turns of a regular track.

"The kite track will not come into general use for several reasons," continued Doble. "First of all, persons who make racing possible, and having paid their money to see a race, will not be content with a glimpse of the horses as they score down for the word, and are only again seen as they flash under the wire. On a kite track, in the long stretches, it is almost impossible to determine the relative position of the horses, and whether they are on their stride. Then another thing against the change is that Cleveland, Lexington, Rochester, Terre Haute, Buffalo, Philadelphia, and a score of other prominent racing points, have invested large sums of money in regulation tracks, built on the public map over the racing, and it is beyond reason to suppose these properties would be destroyed and kite tracks substituted."

Jockey Barnes Gives Up Riding.

The fickleness of fortune and favor, particularly in racing, was well illustrated last week when it was announced that "Pike" Barnes would leave the saddle for the season. Less than two years ago such announcement would have created a world of surprise. Now nobody objects. Then "Pike" was popular. In the year of Proctor Knott's futurity no light-weight jockey approached him, either in popularity or success.

Failing fortune decreased his popularity. He was the victim first of circumstances and next of accident. He could not always keep up his brilliant riding. Overwork made him stale, and owners with horses fit sought the services of others. Next came the unfortunate accident in which Jockey Abbes was killed by the horse ridden by Barnes. Since that day Barnes has never been really in possession of his old time power. He always felt that by pulling up and losing the race he could have saved the life of Abbes, who had been thrown, and was lying in front of him. Instead, he went on and his horse trampled out the life of the prostrate lad.

THE COMING FOOTBALL GAME.

Sixty Thousand People May Witness the Game.

Ever since the seats, boxes and carriage stalls at Manhattan Field, N. Y., have been on sale for the great football game to be played on Thanksgiving day between Yale and Princeton, the Manhattan club-house has been besieged with people anxious to obtain choice situations.

Every available box and carriage stall has been sold, as have also the seats under the reserved grand stand. Of course the Presidents of the Yale and Princeton teams reserved some of the best points of view for the tenants of their respective colleges. Still these have been disposed of also.

The prices received and premiums paid for choice locations show the great interest that is being taken in the event. The thirty boxes have brought about $4,000.

The seats in the covered grand stand brought $14,000 and the carriage stalls $1,500.

Stand D as the new stand has been called that has been built on the west side of the grounds, contains 9,000 seats, and are being sold like hot-cakes at $1.50 each. These will aggregate $13,500.

The bleachers that may be had for the price of general admission are 15,000 in number and will be sold for $1.50 each. There will be standing room for 20,000 more at $1. When the hill on the west side of the field, forming a good point of observation, has been fenced in and admission can be gained within the enclosure for fifty cents a head. It is expected that at least 15,000 persons will take advantage of this offer.

This will bring the total receipts very close to $76,000.

The "Giants" New Manager.

Pat Powers, who on Saturday, November 7 was made manager of the New York League Baseball Club, is a well-known figure in the baseball world. He is a hale-set, medium-sized man of thirty-five or thereabouts, with a clean shaven face and affable manner. He made his debut as a baseball manager in 1884 when he piloted the Trenton Club to victory, and made them close second in 1885. He was at the head of the noted Jersey City Club in 1886, and in 1888 took hold of Rochester, which made a splendid record for the three years he was there. Last season he managed the Buffalo Club of the Eastern Association, and won two championships in one season.

Powers has always had absolute control of every team he has been connected with, and, as a natural sequence expects to be master of the "Giants."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

CHILDREN AT A MISSION.

What Happened at the School on a Hot Afternoon.

The ragged little children marched into the room one by one; some cried, some crowed, some sucked their thumbs, some marked time and some munched apples. The afternoon was hot, and the babies were just a little tired of romping and rather pleased to sit down again in a good place. One little boy had not been out to play at all. He preferred to take a snooze, and there he was, pointed at by fingers of scorn, his face pillowed on his little arms, mouth open, and perfectly happy. A little vixen of three pulled his hair, and the sleeping boy opened one eye, marked her with it sardonically, as much as to say, "Ha, ha, fooled again!" Then he made himself a pillow of his hands and dropped off to sleep again. Now, when a little lean boy who hails from the city's slums drops off to sleep, you know that a humane teacher will let him sleep on if she happens to know that he was up at 5 a. m., when all really nice and proper people are in bed, and did not have his breakfast—not eggs and bacon, or a mutton chop, or anything more luxurious than you are in the habit of taking—until noon, when his mother brought it to him, in the shape of a crust, having had to earn it. So the sleepy boy slept on, and the fifty other babies forgot him.

THE SLEEPY BOY.

The fact is, there were so many more interesting things to think of than snoring lean boys. For instance, "teacher" said, "Now, babies"—they ranged from two and a half to three or four years, I suppose—"now, babies, we'll play 'The Babes in the Wood,' shall we!" Then some babies made a circle in the open space in front of the teacher's desk. They were the trees, and two other little babies were the Babes. They lay down and we covered them with handfuls of imaginary leaves by little robins, who kept saying, "Poo' Babies, Poo' Babies," and wiping their eyes with very dirty fingers. Then the robins flew away, or the trees blew away, and the Babes shook off the imaginary leaves and tidied themselves and adjusted their hair —as maidens of all sizes from one to ninety-nine do, and ever shall, whether they live in a tenement house or a castle. Then the second piece was put on—that famous comedy known as "Little Bo-Peep"—which was played with enormous gestures. Simple kindergarten exercises and singing helped to pass the remainder of the afternoon, during which time the teachers reigned over these little children with the most patient interest. When the school was over the mothers and elder sisters called for the little ones and took them home.

An Earthquake in New Zealand.

Here is a letter from a little girl living at Auckland, New Zealand, which will interest many readers:

I am Maud Shroff and I live in New Zealand. I want to tell about an earthquake that happened the other day. I was at school when it happened. We were doing our lessons at 11 o'clock, when all of a sudden we heard a rumbling noise as though a train were going under the school, and then we saw the walls begin to bend, the roof looked as if it were coming in and the slates fell off the desks, so the teachers looked at each other and then cried out, "Run, children, run as fast as you can," and there was a tremendous rush to the door, as there are from 400 to 500 children in our school. There was no harm done to our school, but we heard afterward that in town chimneys were fell off, the bells were set ringing, some clocks were stopped and the people were very much frightened. Auckland is a very pretty part of the country; the sun is always shining. We have a boat on the water, which comes right up to our garden, and my sister and I often go out in it to gather ferns.

Sea Lions.

Sea lions are very large seals, differing but little from their smaller brethren. They come from the Kamchatka and the Kurile islands. They are called sea lions because they have thick, rather crisp, curly hair on neck and shoulders.

TRAINED SEA LIONS.

In the picture here given are illustrated some trained sea lions at the zoological gardens at London. It is amusing to see a sea lion seated in a chair on the stage right in the center of the pond, catching the fish which the keeper throws to him, or leaping off the high stage into the water. His swimming powers are wonderful, and the pose he head out of the water every now and then, as he swims round and round watching the movements of his keeper. These sea lions are very tame, and they let the visitors stroke them without the slightest fear.

A Wooden Legged Sailor.

There was a wooden legged sailor,
Who thought that he should make a good tailor;
But his new zolay pags
Wouldn't cross like true legs,
Which grieved that poor wooden legged sailor.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Its Origin, Development and Final Adoption Throughout the Country.

The first Thanksgiving day held in America is believed to have occurred in February, 1631, at which date a vessel laden with supplies arrived to succor the starving colony at Charlestown. During the following years frequent days of thanks and prayer were held in the New England colonies. At first these appointments were at different seasons of the year—sometimes twice in one year—and for special reasons. Thanksgiving day was a national institution during the Revolution and was annually recommended by congress, but after a general thanksgiving for peace in 1784 there was no national appointment till 1789, when President Washington recommended a thanksgiving for the adoption of the constitution. In 1795 Washington appointed another national thanksgiving on account of the suppression of the insurrection of that year. In both a day of thanksgiving for the restoration of peace was recommended by President Madison, but during the early part of the century thanksgiving remained an institution peculiar to New England, but was not always held either on the same day or in the same month. The Protestant Episcopal prayer book adopted in 1789 contained only a day of thanksgiving the first Thursday in November, and this day was observed by the church generally in states where there was no official thanksgiving appointed.

The first official appointment of a Thanksgiving day in the state of New York was made in 1817, but the governors of western and southern states did not generally follow the custom until after 1850. Proclamations recommending special thanksgiving for victory were issued by President Lincoln in 1863 and 1863, and in 1863 and 1864 he appointed the annual Thanksgiving day by national proclamation. Since that time annual thanksgiving proclamations have been issued by the presidents, the governors of the several states and the mayors of the principal cities. The last Thursday of November is celebrated as Thanksgiving day throughout the country.

Phrenology from a Hatter's Point of View.

A London hatter states his observation of character, as phrenologically revealed, as follows: "A high forehead, broad, symmetrically divided, indicates a large mind, noble thoughts, and almost invariably genius." In support of this he refers his reader to the outlines of the heads of such men as M. Jules Simon and Victor Hugo. Bumps above and behind the ears show cruelty. Persons whose heads bulge out above the ears are usually prone to save money; those with a bump on the top of the head are often very proud; a very large bump in this place denotes great egotism. Men of wit and learning have a prominent and bulging forehead. He has also noted that actors have usually a forehead which sticks out greatly. People with remarkable memories have prominent eyes; mathematicians have the angle of the eyelids visible from the side.

Personal Ornaments of Ancient Date.

The exploration of an extensive graveyard near Reichenhall, in Bavaria, brought to light a number of highly interesting specimens of jewelry belonging to the period from the Fourth to the Seventh century, when the country was inhabited by the Sigbwarians, from whom the present Bavarians descend. The most important among these finds were the fibulas, one of which is depicted in the accompanying illustration. By means of the fibula the togalike upper garment of the women was held together on the right shoulder. The body of the fibula is made of silver, with niello ornamentation in a bluish black. The seven rays on the top are of copper richly gilt, as also is the dragon or serpent's head at the lower end, the eyes of which are formed by beads of blue glass.

A FIBULA.

Girdle clasps and other ornaments found were composed either of silver, bronze or iron, and decorated with incised and niello work, pearl shaped bosses being introduced into some of them. Conspicuous in this collection was a necklace, composed of glass beads of irregular size and shape and of various colors. There were also peculiar bell shaped cardrops, made either in silver or bronze and of good design. Only three finger rings, all of silver, were found.

Hyloidealism.

A thing is anything. So John Stuart Mill explained. A thing as it is, and a thing as it appears to be, are two different things. Tom and Harry may share in the possession of a cat; but the cat, as she appears to Tom, is not the same as appears to Harry. Yet, all the same, she is the same. Hyloidealism has confounded the fact. Hyloidealism will be a new word to some. It has been shaped to cover the operation of the mind in the apprehension of fact. The argument of the hyloidealist has the futility of an endless whip. "Alice in Wonderland" is made to say, "I have seen a cat without a grin, but I never saw a grin without a cat before." The intellectual relations of the materialist and the hyloidealist would seem to be much as those of the grinless cat and the unincorporate grin.

"Bride of the Sea."

From the ancient annual ceremony of throwing a ring into the sea by the doge Venice gained her second name, "Bride of the Sea." In the Twelfth century, it is said, this custom began. The pope of Rome presented to the doge of Venice a ring, saying, "Take this as a pledge of authority over the sea, and marry her every year, you and your successors forever, in order that all may know she is under your jurisdiction and that I have placed her under your dominion as a wife under the dominion of her husband." Hence arose the strange custom of "wedding the Adriatic."

Champagne Bottles.

Champagne bottles cannot be used a second time, as the pressure to which they are subject seems, in some unexplained fashion, to strain the glass so as to make it unsafe for future use. Unless the strength of the bottle is great, there is sure to be large waste by breakage.

A MEETING OF CITIZENS CALLED.

To Confer About Opening Peace Street.

All citizens interested in the opening of Peace street will meet at Spencer's Hall, Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

The Township Committee will be in session to hear remarks from the citizens in relation to this matter.

(Signed) JUSTUS H. COOLEY,
Chairman of last meeting.

BREVITIES.

—The City Common Council will meet in adjourned session Monday evening.

—With the combine in power another two years, Plainfield, N. J., will become Plainfield N. G.

—The petit jurors for the December session of the Somerset county court will be drawn next Tuesday.

—Read the Bee Hive "ad," and notice the reduction in Germantown wool, Zephyr, Spanish yarn and fur trimming.

—Do not fail to hear the remarkable experience of John Jaeger at the Trinity Reformed Church to-morrow at 4:15 p.m.

—Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., will hold a meeting next Monday evening, when the first degree will be worked on several candidates for membership.

—At the meeting of Perseverance Lodge, No. 74, K. of P., held last evening, the rank of Esquire was conferred on one candidate and the rank of Knight on two.

—Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., will attend divine services in the M. E. church to-morrow evening. Members are requested to meet in their Lodge Room at seven o'clock p. m.

—The combine are always protesting that they have'nt got a dollar out of any of the various franchise schemes that they have tried to push through. Probably they have not—yet. What they expect is quite another matter.

—The amount received from license fees in Somerset county for the last year is $13,000. Of this sum Bridgewater contributes $6,575, of which Somerville will receive $2,875; Raritan, $1,450; Bound Brook, $650; Township Collector, $300.

—Twenty bright, sociable young people of this city, who are also original, have organized themselves into a club. Their originality is displayed in two ways—their name and size of membership. Free Lances they call themselves and a member must not be engaged.

—There were 305 failures in the United States reported to Bradstreet's during the week, against 268 in the preceding week and 285, 259, 232 and 153 in the corresponding weeks of 1890, 1889, 1888 and 1887 respectively. The total number of failures in the United States January 1st to date is 10,692 against 8,947 in 1890.

—Now the combine are endeavoring to colonize the First Ward. They find that public sentiment is overwhelmingly against them, and propose to import enough voters to get elected at all hazards. The First Ward colonizers are to vote for Hetfield, who is said to have made a house to house canvas, and to have found out that he is sure to be defeated, on a fair test of public sentiment.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Miss Mable Van Middlesworth of Elmwood place is spending a few weeks with her aunt, Mrs. Chas. Foster, of Jersey City.

The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes of the First Baptist church will exchange pulpits tomorrow morning, with the Rev. Charles L. Goodrich, of the Congregational church.

A Runaway.

A horse attached to a grocery wagon belonging to Mr. S. B. Williams became frightened on Front street at about ten o'clock this morning and ran away. The frightened animal was caught near Somerset street by Mr. A. G. Voorhees, before it succeeded in wrecking the vehicle to which it was attached.

REVEALED BY THE MOONLIGHT.

A Midnight Chase After a Supposed Burglar.

Wednesday night Mr. T. Parkinson and his son, while on their way home at about 12 o'clock, passed along Mountain avenue.

The night was frosty and the bright moon made it like day.

As they neared ex-Councilman Ira Riker's home, a man ran from the rear of the house back to a small carpenter shop in the rear. In the shadow of this building he was lost sight of.

This late hour made the action doubly suspicious and Mr. Parkinson determined to investigate.

His son hid behind a bush to see if the man left his place of concealment and Mr. Parkinson walked on until the house hid his movements. Then he rang the door-bell. While waiting for Mr. Riker's appearance he left the stoop and walked around the side of the house, keeping in the shadow, to watch.

Soon Mr. Riker, who thought the ring at the bell was a telegram, came down scantily clad. Seeing no one on the stoop he was closing the door again when Mr. Parkinson called softly

"Riker! Is that you?"

"Yes! What's the matter?"

Mr. Parkinson told him and Mr. Riker hastily slipping on some warmer clothing came out and together they went toward the carpenter shop. No sooner did they leave the shadow of the building, however, and become visible in the bright moonlight, then the dark figure of a man left the deep shadow of the carpenter shop and was seen to run rapidly across a field and disappear in the darkness beyond.

The Rikers were cold, and Mr. Riker, whose hastily donned clothing was not sufficient to keep out the icy air decided to go in.

He thinks that the would-be burglar had just reached the rear of the house when scared away by Mr. Parkinson's approach.

PAYING ELECTION BILLS.

The Board of Freeholders Held a Special Meeting Thursday.

Thursday afternoon a special meeting of the Board of Chosen Freeholders was held for the purpose of paying the bills of the election officers for their services at the recent election. The auditing of the bills consumed most of the afternoon and it was very late when the Board convened. The claims were made in accordance with the new law—one half the amount earned by the election boards being paid by the county, and the other by the city and townships.

The Summit Gas Light Company petitioned for permission to lay pipes on Springfield avenue in Summit, agreeing to replace the street in the same condition as before it was disturbed.

The request was briefly discussed and the privilege granted, the work to be done under the supervision of the county engineer.

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

The Relief Association asks for donations of poultry, vegetables, fruit, etc., for the Thanksgiving dinners, which, as usual, are to be distributed among the poor of Plainfield. Last year eighty-two families were provided for, and this year it is hoped that the number may be increased. Gifts should be sent on either Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning next, to the Relief Rooms, 45 West Second street.

A Small Fire.

At about four o'clock yesterday afternoon a house belonging to Mrs. Flanders situated at the corner of Park avenue and Ninth street was discovered to be afire. An alarm was sounded and the department turned out and extinguished the flames. The loss is about $300 and is covered by insurance.

Mrs. Flanders who was ill at the time was assisted to the house of a neighbor.

THE PROPOSED NEW ROAD.

Surveyors of the Highway Go Over the Route.—To Meet Again Next Wednesday.

Yesterday morning Samuel S. Giles and Albert L. Boice, of Piscataway; Alfred Mundy, of Raritan township; Henry V. N. Garretson, of Bridgewater; C. N. Swazey, of Franklin, and W. V. D. Layton, of Barnards, the Surveyors of the Highway appointed to lay the new road across the Greenbrook north of the Central tracks, met at the Mansion House, Bound Brook, and organized with Mr. Layton as chairman. They then proceeded to view the proposed route which begins on East street, just south of the Presbyterian church, and 250 feet north of the Central Railroad. Thence eleven-odd rods eastward, parallel with the Central road to the vicinity of the old Elm Park Hotel, crossing the lands of the Presbyterian Church, occupied by their sheds, B. Billian, F. S. Carr, Mrs. Hovey and the meadow owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company.

After viewing the ground the Surveyors went back to the hotel and heard arguments for and against the road. H. C. Suydam represented the applicants and he explained the public necessity of the new highway. James J. Bergen appeared for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company and asked that his corporation be awarded a liberal amount for the damage to the valuable meadow land.

J. C. Garretson was there in behalf of Messrs. Billian and Carr, who did not oppose the road but wanted proper compensation for their land. W. S. Negus wanted the row of church sheds made good. John H. Jackson represented the the rights of Piscataway township, and George A. Vaarwerker spoke up for Bridgewater's interests. R. H. Swayze denied that the road was a mere scheme of the American Engine Company to get an easy access to Bound Brook. Roads had been asked for across the old mill pond site long before the new owners of the Eastern District had located there, and the building of the Port Reading Railroad now made the proposed road more necessary than ever.

After hearing all the arguments, pro and con, the Surveyors adjourned until next Wednesday for the purpose of considering the subject of damages and benefits.

Pen Sketches From Life.

A crowd simply grows at a fire. Otherwise the firemen couldn't work. Without the spectators there would be no fun in swearing round, spoiling goods, wetting onlookers and also putting out fires.

At the fire on Park avenue and Ninth street yesterday the firemen and the crowd arrived at about the same time. Opinions as to how and what should be done were freely exchanged. The firemen took a short cut to the cellar by going upstairs and chopping a hole through a hardwood floor. Through this hole a hose was thrust and a swimming pool formed in the cellar.

When the pool was deep enough to suit them the hose was pulled up. Two well-known men were standing in the door-way when the hose came up. The business end of it got unsteady, and the two men made a turn to get out of the way. Of course it was accidental. They simply didn't move quick enough. A stalwart, healthy stream of water, started to get out of the door they occupied. It got out So did the men.

One gentleman, with great politeness, turned from the door head in his hurry to give the energetic comer passage. He was materially assisted by a splatter in the rear which wet him from head to foot.

The other gentleman leaned against the side of the stream for a second before moving—and got his trousers wet.

Robbed of Sixty Dollars.

A few evenings ago George Anulo, who works for the Central Railroad at Dunellen, went to visit some friends who board with John Lisowsky, on VanKueren avenue, Bound Brook. They treated him with beer and whisky and got him drunk. They started to dance and began to fight. John Koruiz, who already had a black eye, took Anulo to his home, one of Mrs. Jackson's houses, on Vosseller avenue, and put him to bed. When Anulo awoke Sunday morning he missed $60 from his inside pocket and in there the night before. Monday afternoon Anulo asked Morris Fox to accompany him to Justice Brampton's office, for the purpose of getting a warrant, but after advising with the 'Squire and going up to Lisowsky's house it was considered best to wait developments. Mr. Fox has never studied law but perhaps knows as much as some folks who think themselves very smart. —Bound Brook Chronicle.

A Remedy for Hydrophobia.

J. D. Savidge of Hamilton Square, who, observing a case of hydrophobia published in a recent issue of The True American, sent for publication in that paper a prescription for that terrible disease, which was used with beneficial effects a generation ago. It originated with a Mr. Fay of Germantown, Pa., and is copied by Mr. Savidge from a pamphlet published by Dr. J. H. Schenck, Sr. It is as follows:

FAY'S PRESCRIPTION.

The patient is to be kept free from excitement of every sort. The medicine is to be prepared by taking one ounce of Elecampane root (powdered), one tablespoonful of madder, and one quart of new milk, and boiling them altogether, slowly, in a water bath if possible, until reduced to a pint. The dose is one wine glass full once a day for three days, then intermit three days, then repeat, and intermit again, and again repeat. That is, nine wine glassfuls are taken in all, and there are three intermissions.

CONSUMPTION IN DWELLINGS.

Conclusive Experiments by Physicians—Care in Changing Your Residence.

It is in some measure a question still unsettled as to the degree in which consumption is infectious, and yet it will be generally agreed that testimony to the supposition of its grave menaces is accumulating, and that we have no right to take great risks with our present knowledge of the character of the disease. Dr. Lawrence F. Flick, a Philadelphia physician, has for a period of twenty-five years carried on an investigation in that city, and as a result of his long study declares that he is convinced that fully one-half the cases of tuberculosis among the poor classes originate directly or indirectly in infected houses.

A family moves into a tenement recently occupied by a consumptive, ignorant of the former presence of the disease, and the weakest one among the new-comers falls a victim, and becomes a factor in the further propagation of the malady. Within a few days we have read of another physician whose investigation of a similar character led to an equally strong conviction that the disease is infectious. He conducted his inquiry with the greatest care, scraping the dust from obscure portions of a room in which a consumptive had been quartered and then injecting particles of the matter thus collected into certain animals, with the result that they soon became tuberculous.

In view of such testimony, it is plain that we need to exercise the greatest caution in individual instances, and that the public health authorities should see to it that infected rooms, or those supposed to be infected, are subjected to the closest official scrutiny. Dr. Flick declares that whenever a consumptive patient dies or is removed from a house it should be thoroughly disinfected, the room in which the invalid was quartered should be scraped and replastered, and care should be taken that none of the clothing or furniture used by the patient is given away or left for the use of others unless a complete disinfection is first accomplished.

Moreover, when a house has been thus cleansed it should be so recorded at the headquarters of the Health Department, in order that another person desiring to occupy it may do so without the burden of anxiety or of genuine risk. It is, of course, improbable that the disease can be transmitted to a healthy person whose system is not susceptible to its introduction, but it seems to be shown with a fair degree of certainty that there are many instances of physical weakness where the germs are given lodgment with fatal consequences. It should be noted that apparently the chief if not the only danger of infection comes from dust which contains particles of the dried discharges of the lungs.

Detailed Routes of the Pennsylvania Railroad's Golden Gate Tours.

These tours to California under the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's personally-conducted tourist system have excited considerable interest. The routes adopted are very diversified and interesting. On the first the Pullman vestibule train will leave January 13th, going via St. Louis, Kansas City, Las Vegas Hot Springs, and Sante Fe.

Returning after six weeks in California, the Salt Lake, Glenwood Springs, Leadville, side trip over Marshall Pass, Colorado Springs, Manitou, Denver, Omaha, and Chicago.

Rate from Philadelphia, $390.

The second tour leaves February 24th, going via Cincinnati, Mammoth Cave, Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans, Mardi Gras festivities, Galveston, Houston, San Antonio, and El Paso.

Returning after four weeks in California, via route of first tour.

Rate from Philadelphia, $295.

The third tour leaves March 24th, going via St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou, side trip over Marshall Pass, Glenwood Springs, and Salt Lake City.

Returning, after four weeks in California, via the Shasta route, stopping at Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane, Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Chicago.

Rate from Phil delphia, $360.

The fourth, April 20th, will run west via Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou, side trip over Marshall Pass, Glenwood Springs, and Salt Lake City. Tourist will return independently within six months.

Rate from Philadelphia, $295; via Portland, $20 additional.

The rates fixed for the first three tours cover every necessary expense en route in both directions, including hotel accommodation and several carriage rides, and trains for all side trips in California, while rate for fourth tour covers every necessary expense as above west-bound only, all side trips in California and trains only returning via route selected. This particular tour is designed to accommodate those who desire to visit the Yosemite Valley and Yellowstone Park prior to their return to the East.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Our Navy in Case of War.

Among the navies of the world, that of the United States stands sixth in rank. Great Britain is first and greatest, France second, Russia third, Germany fourth and Italy fifth. Chili is eighteenth among the nations in respect to her naval resources. She has twelve effective warships. If war should suddenly be declared between the two countries, Chili's cruisers could do our merchantmen in the Pacific waters millions of dollars' worth of damages, only for one thing. We have no merchantmen to speak of in Pacific waters. We ought to have, but have not.

In case of war with Chili our Pacific coast would undoubtedly suffer. Chili has an old grudge at the Californians, dating back many years, and would take the first occasion to pay it off. At the first rumors of the misunderstanding with Chili 1,000 men were put at once to work in the Mare Island navy yard at San Francisco, where the old wooden Monitcan lay resting and rusting. She could not do much at fighting, but she might be a tolerable blockader.

At the Brooklyn navy yard 2,000 men were put at work immediately on receipt of the disquieting telegrams. By the middle of December most of the available United States naval vessels will be ready. In case of war Chili would have only 3 armored cruisers to match our 29. Chili has 19 unarmored vessels of our class, 16 of the same kind on our side. The United States has 75 warships of all kinds to put against only 13 in the Chilian navy. In one respect Chili has the advantage, and that is torpedo boats. She has 13, while the United States has only 2. What is still worse, ours are of the antiquated type, in which the torpedo projects out upon a spar in front of the torpedo launch. This is called the spar torpedo, and is a little bit more dangerous to the party using it than to the enemy. Two of Chili's vessels are the torpedo cruisers Almirante Lynch and Almirante Condell, 750 tons each. These are the two torpedo boats which sank the Balmaceda government's fine cruiser Blanco Encalada last summer in Caldera bay. We have in our navy nothing in any shape or form that could match them. Our weak point in naval equipments is the torpedo. The two Chilian torpedo cruisers can travel twenty-one miles an hour and have each coaling capacity for 2,600 miles.

Thanksgiving Dinner.

Remember, American viands on your table for Thanksgiving. Mince pie, plum pudding and roast goose belong to Christmas in the old countries. In the United States roast turkey and pumpkin pie belong to Thanksgiving. Then there are cider and the rich California wines, Florida oranges, California nuts and raisins and sweet potatoes from all over. Anything far fetched or Frenchy on that day will be sacrilege. By no means omit succotash, the rare old Indian delicacy, from your list.

The olives and salt almonds for a relish are products of your own magnificent land. So is the rich ruby cranberry sauce that makes the turkey taste like the ambrosia of the gods. With sugar at five cents a pound candies can be made at home more toothsome than those from the confectioner's. Nearly everything that goes to make up the true Thanksgiving dinner is American except the coffee, and that we get by reciprocity treaty with Brazil, so we need not feel any hesitation about drinking that.

Then, when all is ready, call in every member of your family, the relatives you love best, one or two forlorn widows, old maids, widowers and old bachelors who have nobody to make a feast for them, drape the flag with forty-four stars above your table and eat your dinner and thank God you are Americans.

The Canadian parliament will be asked to make large additional appropriations to aid immigration to the northwestern part of the Dominion. Canada is getting desperate over her want of prosperity. Meantime here, just over the border, we are getting, without any inducements at all, so many immigrants that we don't know what to do with them all, and would be glad to spare some thousands of them to Canada every month, if that would help her any. But it would not. Nothing would help her except annexation to the United States. Goldwin Smith says. He declares it to be inevitable, whoever likes or does not like it. Canadians must share this continent with the Americans. Canada's interests are bound up with those of her powerful neighbor.

The person who would hold a negro woman in slavery all these years since the war, keeping her in ignorance of her freedom and getting her services for nearly thirty years for nothing, would steal the last piece of bread from the plate of his own blind, deaf and dumb grandmother. Yet this man has been found. Where? We are ashamed to tell where such a mean man lives.

In Massachusetts the Knights of Labor have made up their minds by resolution that hereafter the affairs of their order in that state shall be intrusted only to members who have proved their loyalty to the order and their ability to keep secrets. Good idea, especially the last clause.

WHICH CITY WILL WIN?

Many Aspirants for the National Republican Convention.

NEW YORK CITY HAS 21 VOTES.

Washington Invaded by an Army of Enthusiastic Boomers—Every Delegation Confident of Success—McKinley Will Advance Cincinnati's Claims.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The bustle and commotion in the lower corridors, parlors and the lobby of the Arlington hotel reminds one of the first days of a new administration, which brings with it crowds of office seekers. The cause of all this bustle is the arrival of the delegations from the different cities that have come here to capture the next national Republican convention. On Monday the national Republican committee will meet here to hear the claims of the various cities and decide where the convention shall be held.

Preparing for the Battle.

All of the committees of the ambitious convention cities are located at the Arlington. Omaha has established its headquarters in the main parlor just inside the main entrance, from which point of vantage the members of the committee can swoop down upon and capture any arriving who they may be especially interested. The Omaha people declare them selves for Omaha first, last and all the time. Quite a number, in company with ex-Senator Saunders, have visited the president.

New York Claims Twenty-one Votes.

Among the Cincinnati boomers are Mayor Mosby, Representative Storer, General Griffin, Governor Cox, ex-Governor Foraker and Harry Morehead. Cincinnatians are of opinion that Governor McKinley's presentation of their case will be of great weight and may probably give them the prize. Detroit and Pittsburg are expected to establish headquarters today.

New York will have headquarters across the hall from the California delegation. General Clarkson, Warner Miller and J. W. Vrooman are among her representatives, and other big guns are coming today. New York asserts that she will have twenty one votes at the start; San Francisco claims ten, while Minneapolis men say their city will record 15 votes.

The Twin Cities for Once United.

Among the partisans of San Francisco are M. H. De Young, of the San Francisco Chronicle; Internal Revenue Collector Quinn, A. B. Booth and C. A. Alexander. A large delegation from Minneapolis and St. Paul was welcomed by ex-Senator Pierce, editor of the Minneapolis Tribune, who expressed himself as being confident of victory for his city. St. Paul and Minneapolis act on one in the matter of urging Minneapolis, and he thought that in the end Minneapolis would be selected.

New York Has $45,000 Ready.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The committee of business men organized to urge the claims of New York as a proper place for the holding of the next Republican national convention met at the Fifth Avenue hotel last night. There were also present a number of members of the Republican county committee. Chauncey M. Depew appeared and added his voice to the counsels of the meeting. It was announced that the money already pledged toward defraying the expenses of the convention was $45,000, with more in sight.

"The drift of opinion among national committemen as far as I know anything about it is distinctly in favor of New York. I think that we will get the convention. A good deal has been said regarding the big sums of money other cities have collected. It is proposed by one western town to pay the transportation and all the hotel bills of all the delegates and alternates to the convention.

Mr. Depew said:

"The superlative advantages of this city will be the reason why the convention comes here if it does. Should it be located somewhere else it will be for the reason that the national Republican committee deems it more expedient to go to another part of the country."

Senator Hiscock followed Mr. Depew in speech expressing similar views.

Colonel Shepard thought $60,000 should be guaranteed to the convention. Mr. Depew will probably go before the national committee here. There is a good deal of talk to the effect that Chicago should have the honor again, but it is made by Chicagoans, who grasp at everything and continually cry for more. The big business men and leaders in the city believe that Chicago has already had more than her share, and they decry the spirit of greed that is shown by some. A good deal is said about Chicago's wonderful hotel facilities. It is true that there are large hotels here, but it is evident that New York is better equipped to handle a large crowd than is the Windy City.

Monongahela's Loss by Fire.

MONONGAHELA CITY, PA., Nov. 21.—Nine buildings were destroyed by fire and fifty pieces of timber land, the property of the Brown Coal company, were burned over, involving a loss of $80,000. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Fears of Smallpox at Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 21.—No new cases of smallpox in this city were reported yesterday, but it is expected that there will be some startling developments with regard to the disease within a short time.

Want Estee to Succeed Proctor.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21.—A petition urging President Harrison to appoint M. M. Estee secretary of war in place of Proctor is being actively circulated and signed throughout California.

To Save Herself from Suicide.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 21.—Emma T. Day, who attempted to commit suicide twice on Thursday and was treated at the Newark City hospital, was at her own request committed for ninety days.

WORLD'S FAIR MATTERS.

Scoop of Interest About the Great Chicago Exposition.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—The subjects that will be talked about at the political and economic reform congresses during the World's fair have just been provisionally settled. Separate international congresses are to be held on each of the themes as follows:

(a) Political Economy - be province of government; the wealth of nations; the distribution of wealth; the problem of wages; the causes of poverty, avoidable, curable and incontrollable, cost of production to producers; cost of products to consumers, etc.

(b) Public Revenues—Their levy, collection and disbursement; the distribution of the burdens of taxation; modern theories of taxation, etc.

(c) Statistics—The science of statistics; the application of statistics to public business and political affairs; census methods and results, and wherein the same may be enlarged and improved.

(d) Weights and Measures—Present international difficulties of weights and measures, and the importance of the adoption of a uniform system by the leading nations, and its extension as rapidly as may be throughout the world.

(e) Postal Service—Differences in the present systems of various countries, and the importance of a uniform system be adopted by the leading nations, and its speedy extension throughout the world.

(f) Suffrage—Suffrage, as it now exists in republic, kingdom and empire; the right to vote, its nature, conditions, exceptions and qualifications, including age, sex, nativity, naturalization, education, property, payment of taxes, etc.

(g) Civil Service Reform — The principles which should govern the civil service, and the practical application of those principles to that service.

It is just as American flag on every schoolhouse in the United States at the time of the dedicatory ceremonies is the ambition of the publishers of the Youth's Companion.

Up to the present time $651,508 insurance is carried on the buildings at Jackson park. The amount is increased from time to time as the buildings approach completion.

Miss Julia Nelson has been appointed commissioner from Norway to women's department.

FASHIONS

FOR THE FAIR SEX.

THE VERY LATEST AND MOST BEAUTIFUL FASHIONS.

Curious Notes About Women Gathered From Every Where—the Some Useful Hints as to Dress—Feminine Chitchat.

The newest wraps are either extremely long coats or mantles that reach to the knees. There are also some long driving-coats of fleecy soft camelshair in mottled patterns richly trimmed with furs in harmonizing colors. The coat may be of black, and so that it can be worn with any dress, or it may be in colors like granite or tan, to harmonize or contrast with the gown, as the wearer fancies. The newest color this season in coats is cornflower blue—a darker, more becoming shade than the cadet blue of a few years ago. The new wraps are almost always trimmed with fur; the jackets have fur collars and are faced with fur in front. The capes are often finished with the popular triple bands around the edge, separated by a space, each band being only an inch wide on the pelt, but about three times this width on the face. Pale granite-gray camelshair cases mottled in a darker tone are trimmed with bands of sable and finished with a high Medici collar lined with sable. Royal blue is another color which is liked in broadcloth for coats and is generally trimmed with a long fur like Alaska sable, or a light fur like fox. Made shades of cloth are often made up into coats and long wraps, and trimmed with showy, though inexpensive, badger fur, which comes in tones of these colors.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Very Latest.

A JANE HADING GOWN.

Here is a gown of white brocaded gauze, trimmed with broad lace of Alencon style, the gauze waist shirred at the neck and wrists, and elaborately arranged with a fine trimming also of lace, the full sleeves of Alencon to match; a drapery of white satin is lightly pleated round the waist in long ends and carries in a bow and ends that fall on the skirt behind.

Dr. Charles Imbrie Dead.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 21.—Dr. Charles K. Imbrie, pastor emeritus of the First Presbyterian church of this city, died Nov. 20, aged seventy-seven. He was pastor of the First Presbyterian church for thirty years and was made pastor emeritus two years ago.

Whipped by White Caps.

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—At Lyndeld the house of Richard Ruggles was visited by five masked men, who took him into a field and whipped and kicked him. Ruggles had complained against a roadhouse bearing an unsavory reputation.

The Boston at Bahia.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The navy department has received a cablegram announcing the arrival of the cruiser Boston at Bahia on the 19th instant. She is on her way to Chili, and should arrive at Valparaiso within a month.

CLEVELAND IS NEUTRAL

He Says He Has No Speakership Favorite.

IS GOVERNOR HILL OUT FOR CRISP?

"What's the Matter with Crisp?" He Said When Asked if He Did Not Think Mills Would Win—A Deadlock, Perhaps, in New York's Legislature.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The Recorder says that ex-President Grover Cleveland authorizes the statement that he is taking no part in the contest for the speakership of the house; that he is as much the friend of each candidate as he is of any other; that he has never declared himself as favoring Mr. Mills more than Mr. Crisp, or Mr. Springer, or Mr. McMillan, and that he has not made and does not intend making any suggestions in respect to the organization of the house of representatives. Mr. Cleveland made this expression of his views to an eminent politician and personal friend who went to him last Thursday in behalf of one of the candidates for the speakership.

Not for Any One in Particular.

"It is not true that I have said I wanted Mr. Mills to be speaker," replied Mr. Cleveland in substance. "I am a friend of Mr. Mills, but I am also the friend of Mr. Springer and Mr. Crisp and Mr. McMillan. I am equally interested in the canvass of each of these gentlemen, and any use of my name by the friends of Mr. Mills is unwarranted and unjust to me."

There is more speakership contest in New York this week than there is in Washington. Each of the candidates, with one or two exceptions, is seeking Tammany Hall influence and the votes of the New York delegation. It is said that New York members, whether Tammany or not, are unpledged yet except Cummings, who is for Crisp, and Tracy and Warner, who are for Mills.

Mr. Mills in Brooklyn.

"Brooklyn has been highly honored," said ex Congressman Felix Campbell to Congressman Roger Q. Mills yesterday. "We have had Messrs. Springer and McMillin here, as well as yourself." Congressman Mills looked surprised at learning that his rivals had preceded him, but Congressman William J. Coombs relieved him by saying: "But you will get all the votes." But Hugh McLaughlin did not meet Congressman Mills, and as no one could speak for the Kings county leader, Mr. Mills was not altogether certain when he left for Washington that he had the four votes in his pocket. In conversation with Rev. Charles H. Hall, Mr. Mills said:

Not a Free Trader.

"I am not a free trader, replied the congressman. That is a concoction of the enemy. I believe in a tariff for revenue only, with the least burden of taxation. Until Mr. Cleveland wrote his famous message in 1887 most Democrats believed that they owed their prosperity to protection. They are gradually getting over that error. The silver question, the Lodge bill and other side issues bound to be relegated to the rear. If we concentrate all our efforts on tariff reform and make that the sole issue we will win in 1892."

Is Hill for Crisp?

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Governor Hill is here to look up his winter quarters. When asked if he did not think that Mills had a good show for the speakership he is said to have remarked in his peculiarly significant way, "What is the matter with Crisp?" This is regarded as indicating that the anti-Cleveland sentiment will solidify about Crisp.

He refused to say whether he would take his seat in the senate in December or January, adding that that question would be settled hereafter.

Senator Deane's Death.

HUDSON, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Senator Gilbert A. Deane, of the Fifteenth district, died at his home in Copake, Columbia county, Nov. 20. Mr. Deane's death will make no difference with the canvass of the boards now in session in Dutchess and Columbia counties. Should the certificate of election be given him for the state board of canvassers, he will be declared elected even though dead. In such event an official notification will be forwarded to Governor Hill and a special election will be ordered in the district.

Senator Deane was born in Connecticut July 21, 1837. He was a member of assembly in 1884 and was elected to the state senate in 1887, re elected in 1889 and renominated this year. He will be buried Monday afternoon.

A Deadlock, Perhaps.

ALBANY, Nov. 21.—The death of Senator Deane leaves the political contest in practically the same position as before. The senate, exclusive of Edwards (Independent), stands: Republicans, 16; Democrats, 14.

Should Senator Edwards vote with the Democrats, an action which his intimate friends are positive he will not take, they would still have to gain another member in order to control the senate. While leading politicians in each party claim the legislature, elsewhere observers, not biased by partisanship figure out that both the senate and the assembly will be tied. Should a deadlock result scenes such as made the legislature of 1886 memorable are likely to make the session of 1892 more than lively.

Ryan Declared Elected.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 21.—The Onondaga board of canvassers have declared Patrick J. Ryan, Democrat, elected to the assembly from the First district, over David Allen Munroe, Jr., Republican, by a vote of 5,229 to 4,398. The board is composed of five Democrats and four Republicans.

Preston's Plan Criticised.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 21.—There is considerable opposition among depositors over the reorganization plan of the Ulster County Savings institution, because Superintendent Preston does not mention whether the old or new trustees will have charge of the management of the institution. Depositors may petition the court to remove the trustees. The signers to the petition for resumption are few.

Lemon's Appeal for the Veterans.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—Washington has subscribed a fund of $36,000 to make preparations for the Grand Army encampment next September. Captain George E. Lemon, chairman of the finance committee, is out in an appeal to Washingtonians to make the guarantee $500,000. He tells the public that the soldiers will spend $8,000,000 in this city.

STETSON SETTLES FOR $30,000.

A Novel Gambling Suit Ends at Boston.

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—John Stetson, banker, broker and theatrical manager, has paid to Mrs. Anna B. Everett $30,000, and thus settled one of the most remarkable cases ever tried. Mrs. Everett claimed that Stetson was the proprietor of a swell gambling club, known as the Carlton. On Nov. 2, 1889, Jonathan Bourne, Jr., of New Bedford, son of the late millionaire mill owner, bucked the tiger at the Carlton club and lost $65,000 in one setting. He was drunk and later compromised by paying $16,000.

One of Mr. Stetson's clerks, George Everett, knew of this incident, and when he was arrested on the charge of embezzlement alleged that Stetson wanted to get rid of him that he might not see too much of what was done at the Carlton. Then Everett's wife went to his rescue in a novel way. There is an old law in Massachusetts which gives to any person the right to sue for money lost at gaming by any other person, provided the loser does not bring suit within three months. In case of recovery the plaintiff is to receive three times the amount lost. Mrs. Everett immediately sued Stetson to recover $51,000, which is three times the amount Mr. Bourne lost at gambling, including interest.

Mrs. Everett refused to listen to any talk of a compromise until the criminal case against her husband was withdrawn. At 3 p. m. that case was not pressed, and a few minutes later Mr. Stetson's lawyer paid to Mrs. Everett $30,000 in cash.

A Countess Cooking Fishballs.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—There is one countess in this city who can cook fishballs for a living when necessity brings her to that dire extremity. She is the Countess Marie von Stumpf, and she is head cook at the Gold and Silver restaurant in the basement of 363 Broadway. She was once a soubrette in one of Herr Ambers's companies, and is suing for an absolute divorce from Count Louis Stumpf, who fell in love with her in 1889 and they were married. He deserted her and she was compelled to earn her living as best she could. Marie wants her divorce, she says, so she can marry the proprietor of the restaurant.

A SUBTREASURY SPLIT.

The Alliance Divided on an Important Question.

THE ANTI-OMAHA CONVENTION TOO

It Will Be Held at Memphis in December and May Prove a Formidable Thorn in the Side of the Big Alliance Consolidation Scheme.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 21.—Chairman W. S. McAllister, of the anti-subtreasury Alliance executive committee, has issued a call for a national convention of all anti-subtreasury Alliance men to be held at Memphis, Dec. 16. This is the first move to organize an opposition to the Alliance, F. M. B. A. and People's party, and is the direct result of the refusal of the Alliance to hear the protest of the McAllister faction.

The People's Party Will Wait.

The course of all the parties for the future has become well defined. At present there will be no formal indorsement or co-operation between the Alliance, F. M. B. A. and the People's party. The executive committee of the People's party, upon the advice of Ignatius Donnelly, has decided not to push its demands for indorsement at this time. The committee thinks that at the national convention of the party next summer a platform can be built that will serve the common political purposes of every industrial organization in the country. Jerry Simpson says that the consolidation of all these interests will be a direct result of the Confederated Unions' conference in February, and that it is in this conference that the People's party's claims for support will be pushed.

Four Million Voters Represented.

The party managers claim that their enunciated principles and avowed purposes represent the combined efforts of 4,000,000 voters. The removal of the probability of a fight upon the third party question in the Alliance council leaves that body with but little business of public importance. The Alliance has re-elected President Polk and the old board of officers.

The Farmers' Mutual Benefit association elected S. S. Ganze, of Missouri, president; W. A. Barnett, of West Virginia, vice president, and J. P. Stelle, of Illinois, secretary and treasurer, and enthusiastically indorsed the third party idea.

Chairman Secure Attacked.

W. S. McAllister, of Mississippi, chairman of the executive committee of the Anti-Subtreasury Alliance, today publishes an open letter making a fierce attack upon Dr. C. W. Macune, chairman of the executive committee of the Alliance, whom he accuses of cheating the subscribers to the Texas Alliance Exchange out of $148,000.

The executive committee of the People's party have issued a proclamation signed by H. F. Taubeneck chairman, which says: "There is no longer any doubt that candidates for president and vice president will be in the field before June 1, 1892, nominated by the People's party. No influence of the old political organizations can longer prevent the co-operation of all the labor organizations in the United States."

The Mining Congress.

DENVER, Nov. 21.—The committee on resolutions of the Mining congress has reported as follows:

Resolved, That the first National Mining congress is unalterably in favor of the primitive bimetallism as approved by Jefferson and Hamilton, enacted to law by congress in 1786, and accepted by the country for all public and private business during the first years of our history; that we believe gold and silver, not one to the exclusion of the other, form the money metals of the constitution; that we are opposed to any law which treats silver as a commodity; that we declare that gold and silver should have by law equal rights, uses and monetary purposes, and to that end we demand of the congress of the United States the enactment of a law by which silver shall be coined free in all the mints equally with gold and to have with it free and unrestricted monetary power; that the coinage be in the ratio of sixteen to one grain, and when the coinage is represented by treasury notes as each dollar shall represent 412½ grains of standard silver or 25.8 grains of gold.

The resolution protested against any construction of the statutes of the United States which will result in the confiscation of the Pacific railways or the mineral claims within their grants, and declare that the alien act so far as it operates to exclude foreign capital from investment in mining bonds in the territories is pernicious and should be repealed.

Would Vote for a Piute Indian.

G. W. Cassidy of Nevada, said that in his state both Democrats and Republicans had united in demanding free and unlimited coinage, and would take none other; that they would vote for a Piute Indian if he was running on a free coinage platform against the best man in the country. The delegates all shouted, "That's right; so will we!"

C. C. Goodwin, editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, said he did not believe the lower house of congress would pass a free coinage bill by a year unless they thought that by so doing it would get the president in a hole and that the senate had been for years sneezing when Wall street took snuff.

The East Votes for Free Coinage.

When the resolutions were adopted the vote was 457 to 4, and cheers arose as the delegations of Arkansas, Maine, Connecticut, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and many other eastern states voted for the free coinage platform. Adjourned sine die.

A Rich Widow's Penniless Husband.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 21.—Mrs. Annie Dunn, aged forty years, a niece of General Forrest, of the Confederate cavalry fame, and worth a quarter of a million of dollars, was married to a penniless young clerk named Henry. Mrs. Dunn was also engaged in managing one of her plantation managers. She took her husband to New York.

Syracuse's Standard Theater Burned.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 21.—The Standard theater and Elite Music were destroyed by fire early this morning. Loss, $60,000.

Mr. Carr Ahead.

He was standing on the corner of Hastings and Gratiot streets when another young man about his age came along, and the first one said:

"Look heah, Mistah Carr, I want to gin yo' a few words ob advice."

"Well, sah?"

"Yes, sah—yes, sah."

"Bin buyin her boxes of candy an sendin up bokays, I understan."

"Jes so, sah."

"Well, sah, in order to save yo' furder bodder an expense I will inform you dat I am dun engaged to marry Miss Perkins in de nigh fucher."

"Really, sah, 'tactly; an in order to save you furder bodder an expense I will inform you dat Miss Perkins dun becum Mrs. Carr last evenin at 8 o'clock! Weddin strictly privates! No keerds!"—Detroit Free Press.

VICTIMS OF A GRADE CROSSING.

One Hartford Young Lady Killed and Another Fatally Injured.

HARTFORD, Nov. 21.—Miss Mildred Burden, of Burnside, was instantly killed and Miss Katie Williams fatally injured by a freight train on the Asylum street crossing in East Hartford last evening. The ladies stepped back to avoid a passenger train, when the freight backed down and ran over them.

There was no rear light on the freight train and its approach was entirely with out warning. Mrs. Williams was with the young ladies, but escaped with slight bruises.

Mayor Sargent's Close Call.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 21.—Mayor Joseph B. Sargent had a narrow escape from a horrible death Friday afternoon while endeavoring to run the elevator in the city hall in the absence of the regular attendant. The mayor entered the car and ran it to the third story. Here he passed out of the car and attempted to send it back to the first floor by pulling the cable. He forgot about the automatic sliding door and before he could regain the landing he was caught. His face and body was badly bruised, but he was very fortunate in escaping instant death.

She Gets $50,000 for Breach of Promise.

BANGOR, Me., Nov. 21.—Mrs. Hattie Moore, formerly of Bath City, has finally won the breach of promise suit against Moses Hopkins, the California millionaire, and brother of the late Mark Hopkins. The jury awarded her $75,000, but the amount was reduced to $50,000, which has finally been paid.

Smallpox in Kingston.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Another case of smallpox has made its appearance here. An eight-year-old child of Willard Grile's, whose wife washes clothes for the family of A. E. Pye, where a case of the disease recently broke out, is down with the scourge. The house has been quarantined.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Yale and Harvard Eleven Meet in Battle Array This Afternoon.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 21.—There is an immense crowd at Hampden park today to witness the Yale-Harvard football game. Every one of the 30,000 seats were sold, and speculators who had secured good points of vantage disposed of them at a high premium. Yale is the favorite in the betting at odds of 5 to 4. The teams will line up, from present indications, as follows:

YALE.	POSITIONS.	HARVARD.
Hartwell	Right end	Hallowell
Wills	Right tackle	Newell
Morrison	Right guard	Mackie
Sanford	Center	Hangs
Heffelfinger	Left guard	Dexter
Winter	Left tackle	Waters
Hinckley	Left end	Emmons
Barbour	Quarter back	Gage
McClung	Half back	Lake
L. Bliss	Half back	Corbett
McCormick	Full back	Trafford

Mr. Colby of Wesleyan will be the umpire and Mr. Moffat of Princeton, the referee.

Two Women in the Ring.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 21.—Hattie Leslie, who is known as the "Woman John L. Sullivan," and Gussie Freeman, who rejoices in the sobriquet of "The Tarnely," had a four round fight with four ounce gloves in the Grand Street theater last night. At the call of time both women assumed true pugilistic attitudes and sparred cautiously for an opening. The Leslie woman was the aggressor throughout, and led frequently on the Freeman woman's face and body. The latter showed considerable science. She stopped her opponent's leads and swings, cleverly holding back for a swing on the Leslie woman's neck in order to inflict a quietus.

It was sip and tuck throughout the next two rounds with both women very tired.

In the fourth and last round both women went at each other hammer and tongs, and during the excitement acted as if they wished to scratch and pull hair. The Leslie woman finally forced her opponent into her corner, where the Freeman woman caught her head in chancery and inflicted several desperate upper cuts. The police then stopped the mill, and when the referee awarded the fight to Mrs. Leslie on a foul Lonely got real mad, and offered to adjourn with Mrs. Leslie and fight it out. Mrs. Leslie did not accept the challenge.

Thousands at the Horse Show.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—At every horse show for the last five years Friday night has been the best of the week in point of attendance. Last night was no exception, and a conservative estimate placed the number of people present at 14,000. Nearly as many more saw the show during the day, so that it is safe to say that 25,000 people paid to get into the garden between 9 a. m. and midnight. The last event of the day, a high jumping contest, in which Ben Ibaseen, Transport, Ontario, Punch and The Countess took part, was won by Punch at 6 ft. 6 in. Ontario was second.

DEMAND FONSECA'S RESIGNATION.

Peace Cannot Prevail Under Any Other Condition in Brazil.

BUENOS AYRES, Nov. 21.—The latest advices from Uruguay and southern Brazil are not favorable to Fonseca. Rio Grande do Sul has invited the province of Santa Catharina to free itself from the tyranny of the authorities of the latter province have the proposal under consideration. The statement is confirmed that the provisional junta of Rio Grande do Sul telegraphed to Minister Barao de Lucena that Fonseca must resign as a preliminary for the arrival at a friendly understanding.

Fonseca was very much offended by this message, and although suffering considerably with nervous prostration, he aroused himself to give fresh and vigorous orders for the prosecution of the struggle. His physical condition is, however, against him.

A dispatch received here announces that General Osorio, who commands the insurgent forces in Rio Grande do Sul, has issued a manifesto in which he threatens to march on Rio Janeiro. The forts at the Rio Grande bar, it is learned, have been completed.

Charles L. Andrews' Divorce Suit.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Nov. 21.—The divorce suit of Charles L. Andrews versus Mary E. Andrews has been filed in the clerk's office of this county. The plaintiff is the son of C. H. Andrews, proprietor of the Boston Herald. Personal service was had upon Mrs. Andrews in Washington. The complaint is based upon desertion. The marriage of Mr. Andrews and Miss Kate Bowditch took place in Boston April 13, 1887, and was one of the leading society events of the year.

Missed a Nail and Struck a Live Wire.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 21.—George Sullivan, a plumber who was engaged in making repairs at the Birmingham company's power house, was killed by a live wire at noon. In striking at the nail he missed it and struck a live wire. An awful flash resulted. Sullivan fell backward, striking another live wire with the back of his neck. He then fell to the floor dead.

Premier Mercier Strikes Back.

QUEBEC, Nov. 21.—Hon. H. Mercier, premier of Quebec, has sworn out criminal charges against J. P. Wheelan, the contractor who has stated that he had to bribe Mr. Mercier and several members of the latter's government to secure a contract. The premier has also made similar charges against several newspapers.

To Attack the Amalgamated Association.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 21.—It is reported that the iron and steel manufacturers of the United States will make a general assault on the Amalgamated association in the spring. The object is to destroy the union mills belong to to the association, and the annual wage scale of the United States is made in this city.

Treasurer Smith Gone with $50,000.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 21.—An attachment for $53,000 was placed on funds belonging to Dr. S. D. Smith at the Railroad National bank. Smith is the missing supreme treasurer of the Order of the Rising Sun, and he is alleged to have improperly loaned $50,000 of the funds of that organization.

THE HOUSEHOLD

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE HOME.

Fashions in Draperies and Embroideries.

The Making Up of Cushions.

The rage for draping every article of furniture that could by any possibility bear it, and some that could not bear it, without appearing utterly grotesque, has happily gone the way of all overdone fashions. Women are content now with a square of embroidered silk laid on the top of a grand piano, and perhaps a large easel, with silk and plush thrown in careless folds about it and knotted here and there, or tied with cords and tassels.

Covered or sham stitch embroideries, carried out in softly tinted silks on a white silk ground, are very delicate. One of the prettiest has a light design, worked in pale green and pink silks on a white ground. A length of this combined with olive or chestnut plush drapes an easel most satisfactorily.

The best cushions are now covered on both sides with the same material and finished with a wide double frill of soft satin. These embroidered silks are well suited for small occasional table covers. It is better to line them, as that gives them just the necessary substance, besides which ladies who are particular in having everything in their rooms natty think almost as much of the "making up" as of the material itself. The corners of the cover are sure now and again to turn back, and if there is only a narrow tasseled fringe at the edge, then the prettily tinted lining gives an additional charm. It is not well to use them without something to border them; a deep frill is undoubtedly most popular.

Coverlet in Embroidered Canvas.

On a square of fine white canvas of the desired size thirty-six smaller squares are marked out, as shown in the first cut.

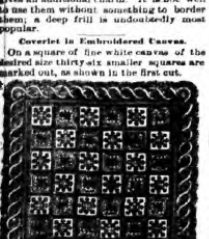

FIG. I.—EMBROIDERED COVERLET.

These squares are embroidered in two alternate designs with colored cotton, according to the working details given in the second cut.

FIG. II.—DETAILS OF COVERLET.

The twelve leaf-stem threads which have been left standing between the small squares are made into drawn work borders and the cover is finished with a Torchon lace border.

Stuffed Cabbage.

The following is an excellent way to cook cabbage: Choose a firm, nice cabbage, pick off the outside leaves and plunge the cabbage into boiling water, pressing it down with a spoon to allow the water to penetrate and loosen the leaves. Then place the cabbage on a meat board and open each leaf gently until you reach the center, out of which cut a piece about the size of an egg. Fill this space where you have cut out the heart with a mixture of minced cold meat or chicken, chopped bacon and two well beaten eggs; bring the nearest leaves well over to re-form the heart and fill each space between the leaves with a thin layer of the mixture, bringing each leaf back as nearly as possible to its original place. Lay two strips of bacon sideways over the cabbage and tie it all around with thick thread so it cannot fall to pieces. Make a nice brown gravy and pour over the cabbage; let this simmer the cabbage gently for four hours.

Thanksgiving Plum Pudding.

This requires three pints of milk, eight eggs, a tea cent loaf of baker's bread, one cupful of sugar, one pound of raisins, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and one-half cupful of butter, says Good Housekeeping. Remove the seeds from the raisins. Place the milk and raisins in a double boiler, and make them boiling hot. Beat the eggs slightly, add the sugar, then the boiling milk, the salt and vanilla. Slice the bread and spread it with the melted butter; then put the slices in the box custard. Butter well a deep brown pudding pan. Put a layer of the soaked bread in the pan and scatter raisins over it; then more bread and more raisins until all are used, having the last layer of bread. Bake in a slow oven for two hours. When ready for serving turn it from the pan into a pudding dish, and use with it a hard sauce made from one-half a cupful of butter beaten to a cream, and one cupful of powdered sugar beaten into it until it is very light and creamy. Add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla extract or one tablespoonful of wine. Pile it roughly on a pretty dish and grate nutmeg over it.

Perfumery.

It is told on high authority that Queen Victoria's favorite scents are patchouli and marechale. Those famous Indian shawls which she gives as wedding presents are perfumed with marechale. A new oriental perfume is "Kus-kus" or Indian Vilvert. The French and English women perfume their dresses by stitching a strip of perfumed kid skin, made for the purpose and known as "Peau d'Espagne," in front of the bodice. Rose mouthwash has taken the place with some of aromatic lozenges for perfuming the breath. A new English soap is named Extract of Palm. It is put up in glass pots like pomade, and is delicately scented with geranium.

Parsnip Fritters.

This is one of the best ways of cooking parsnips: Scrape, and if large, cut them; put them into well salted boiling water and boil until tender; then mash them, adding to four or five parsnips a heaping teaspoonful of flour, one or two eggs well beaten, pepper and salt to taste. Form the mixture into small cakes three-quarters of an inch thick and two and a half in diameter and fry them on both sides to a delicate brown in a little hot butter.

THE MEGATHERIUM.

Interesting Facts Concerning the Giant Sloths of the Past.

When Cuvier cleaned the megatherium with its huge and formidable frame among the relentless, the naturalists of his day were greatly surprised. They could not believe that any relation existed between this gigantic creature and the small, insignificant sloths. Modern science has, however, confirmed his sagacity, the megatherium having been accepted as substantially a gigantic antique sloth.

In the menageries, says a writer in Popular Science News, are the little living animals dragging their limbs laboriously and awkwardly along the ground, hanging asleep from the limbs of trees, or climbing with activity and ease among the branches. In the museum is this colossal skeleton of their ancestor, standing as a perpetual witness to the fact that the mighty must yield when conditions become fit only for the humble and weak. The megatherium is now desired for any museum, but happy is that institution that can secure even a few bones of the mighty beast. Madrid is the happy owner of the classical specimen studied by Cuvier; Paris boasts an almost complete skeleton; Berlin is equally fortunate. But, with these exceptions and that of the skeleton discovered at Lima in 1795 —which may be the one now at Berlin—the animal is chiefly known by plaster models made from a study of detached bones. Such a model adorns the new natural history building at Kensington, London.

The pelvis, thighs and upper bones of the tail are cast, with some other parts, from remains found by Sir Woodbine Parish in the bed of a stream near Buenos Ayres, after a succession of three unusually dry seasons. They indicate a skeleton still larger than that described by Cuvier.

The megatherium, the first of the extinct ground sloths to be brought back into the life of the present, is still regarded as the most interesting and wonderful of the family, although remains of at least seven other gigantic forms have been discovered and described. The first of these to attract wide attention was the almost complete skeleton of an animal somewhat smaller than the megatherium, being only seven feet from the point of the muzzle to the end of the tail. This was found by Sir Woodbine Parish near Buenos Ayres in 1841, and presented to the Royal College of Surgeons, in London, where it may still be seen as it was first set up. To this creature was given the name mylodon, or the still toothed animal, to which was added to indicate the formidable strength of its framework. As with the remains of megatherium, says the authority quoted, so it is with those of mylodon; detached bones of more than one species are found in North and South America, but a complete skeleton seldom comes to light. Indeed, besides that of the Royal College of Surgeons, there is as yet but one other, and that has been set up recently in the new Natural History building at South Kensington.

Disposal of Sewage.

The disposal of sewage is a question which has been agitated in various countries for many years. Engineering says that nowhere on the Continent has it been dealt with in a more systematic manner than in Germany. In Berlin the drains from the houses receive both the rain water, the dirty water from the kitchen, etc., and the contents of the water closets, conducting them to a system of radial sewers, through which they, by a natural fall, proceed to a dozen various pumping stations within the area of the town. From these the sewage, through the medium of combined force and suction pumps, passes through pipes of three feet or still greater diameter to the land which the corporation of Berlin possesses, and where the sewage is used as a fertilizer. The sewage makes its final exit through a system of conduits so arranged that before reaching them it has parted with all its manurial power to the soil through which it is made to pass. The sewage water thus filtered reaches the river through the natural fall of the conduits in a comparatively pure and fit state. The sewage is an exceptionally good manure.

Frankfort-on-the-Main is another German town where the sewage system is very perfect, but owing to the excessive cost of land in that locality the sewage is not, as in Berlin, used as manure in the first instance. The sewage is purified before being allowed to escape into the Main, and the residue is pumped into receptacles from where the farmers fetch it.

Peculiar Property of Cotton Seed Oil.

Cotton seed oil possesses the peculiar property of taking up lead under certain conditions. That quality is now being utilized, and adds one more to the numerous uses to which this remarkable product can be applied. The peculiarity was set forth, says the Florida Dispatch, as follows: "One gallon of pure cotton seed oil is plated in a suitable iron vessel into which twenty pounds of molten lead are poured. After a thorough stirring the lead separates into globules, and when the oil has been poured off, after cooling, there is found to be about seventeen pounds of the lead, the remainder having been absorbed by the oil. On the lead being again melted and the operation repeated for the fifth pouring—the amount of lead being less at each succeeding pouring—the total amount of lead absorbed is about ten pounds. The oil thus charged with the lead is now used as a paint, being applied in the ordinary way to metallic surfaces. It is claimed that this liquid, which adheres closely and becomes very hard, is especially useful in protecting metals from oxidation or corrosion."

Stains from Marble.

The Horological Review says, "To remove stains from marble mines, clocks, dials, etc., take equal parts of fresh oil of vitriol and lemon juice, shake up these substances very thoroughly in a bottle, wet the spot with the mixture, and in a few minutes afterward rub with a soft linen cloth and the spots will be found to have disappeared."

GOOD HEALTH

THE YOUTH LOOK.

How to Keep This and Prevent the Dreadful Wrinkles.

If one is free from ruffle of feeling the face shows the calm of repose, the eye the quiet depth of unstirred thought—the normal expression. Harper's Bazar says: "This should be induced by every woman many times each day, if she would keep her youth looking freedom from anxiety, perfect placidity and smoothness. Whether it be in the afternoon siesta or the dropping of brain work now and then through the day, it relieves the contraction of muscles, brings relaxation and rest, and, above all, keeps off wrinkles, those dreadful "expression lines" that come with heavy cares and continued set of muscle.

"'Facial massage' is one of the latest fads, and certainly has its value—manipulation of the muscles of the face, so as to break up the setness of line made by the wear and tear of life.

"Continued face gesture, frequently useless, from year to year, brings wrinkled age. One should recognize that there is all the difference in the world between the impulse of genuine emotion and feeling with the natural gestures and play of face and features, and those multitudinous and incessant facial gymnastics with which conversation is frequently absurdly enlivened and embellished.

"The woman who continually stretches her eyes, twists, screws and contracts her lips in mouthing her words and sentences, however charming, is forming habits of muscle use which will surely trace premature and indelible lines. It is possible, though, by a little common sense, a little appreciation of the value and importance of forming habits of rest and relaxation, habits of control and repose, to oppose and retard the advance. Women, as a rule, from their very build and life, are not calm, particularly the American woman. The lesson she is to learn, the lesson she must learn, is conservation, not how to do more, but how to do a little well and be content; how to go so far and no farther, that she may preserve her stock personal, at its best, to the height of the demand. To do this she needs to know how to rest, to relax, to "let go," as well as how to strengthen and to do. Action and reaction should be equal—a prime law of physics."

Why Our Spirits Follow the Barometer.

There are a great many people who say that the weather does not affect them at all, but the weather does affect everybody. When the barometer goes up our spirits go up, and when the barometer goes down our spirits go down. When the barometer is high we get more oxygen and the vital fires burn brighter, and when the barometer is low the reverse is true. It is no wonder that persons subject to rheumatism or neuralgia feels these changes in the weather with particular force. When the barometer rises the skin does more work, and when the barometer falls the skin does less work. When the skin does less work the kidneys, liver and other excretory organs have to do the work.

But the changes in the weather are exactly what we need as stimulants to the system, and the reason why people who live in tropical climates lack in vigor and will down quickly under diseases is that they have none of the bracing effects which come from changes of temperature.

These may be called a species of physical gymnastics. It is exactly like living a sedentary life to live in a climate in which there is no change.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

AT A CHURCH WEDDING.

How the Bridal Party Enter and Group Themselves at the Altar.

According to Good Form in weddings, the first to leave the bride's home is the family, except her father and mother. The bridesmaids go next and then the maid of honor, with the father or mother, and the bride last, with one of her parents. While the bridal party are grouping themselves in the church, the mother is conducted to her seat next the altar by some chosen friend, if she has no son or near relative to escort her. The ushers, two and two, march in first; then the bridesmaids in pairs, the maid of honor next and the bride follows last, leaning upon her father's right arm. The groom and best man have come to the altar with the clergyman from the vestry and are awaiting the bride. The groom steps slightly forward to meet her, leads her to the altar and both kneel for a minute or so in devotion.

Grouping of bridal parties are matters of personal taste. Half the ushers usually place themselves on either side of the altar, while the bridesmaids are all at the bride's left, but sometimes half of the latter are upon each side, pairs parting near the chancel rail, as do the ushers.

Maids of honor always stand next the bride and the best man next the groom. The person who is to give the bride away (sometimes it be a widowed mother) is seated nearest the aisle at the left, and when the question, "Who giveth this woman?" is asked, he or she rises and bows to the clergyman. It is no longer common to place the hand of the bride in that of the clergyman, but so pleasant and impressive a custom should not be allowed to disappear.

The bride of today goes to church without gloves, thus sparing the marriage service that awkward pause which was once too common during their removal. This usage is a lately adopted one, but is sure of general approval. The groom removes the bride from his right hand a gloveless groom by daylight not having yet been sanctioned. He may do this in the vestry if he chooses.

When there are no bridesmaids a pretty effect is produced by the bride's entrance alone, preceded by her parents arm in arm, spirits go down. When the barometer is high we get more oxygen and the vital fires burn brighter, and when the barometer is low the reverse is true. It is no wonder that persons subject to rheumatism or neuralgia feels these changes in the weather with particular force. When the barometer rises the skin does more work, and when the barometer falls the skin does less work. VOLTAIRE.

49 B. C.—Marcus Licinius Crassus, the richest man in the world, killed by the Parthians, who poured melted gold down his throat in cruel satire. His wealth is estimated at $60,000,000, about one-eighth of that of the richest American.

1679—Sir Thomas Grosham died in London, born there 1619; famous in political economy as "Gresham's Law," laid down by him, is that the poorest money will always circulate in preference to the best.

1694—Voltaire born in Paris; died there 1778; his first lessons in skepticism were received from a priest.

1730—Edmund Lord Lyons, British admiral and father of the famous minister to the United States, born at Burton, Hants; died 1858.

1803—James Hogg, the "Ettrick Shepherd," Scotch author, died, born 1770.

1857—Chloroform first used.

1873—Grand reception of the Grand Duke Alexis at New York.

1875—Senator Orris S. Ferry of Connecticut, died, aged 58.

1888—Charles Francis Adams died, born 1807.

One from Fifth Avenue.

I was investigating a lot of old relics in a second hand store on lower Sixth avenue when a colored woman came in and inquired for a second hand coal stove.

"Certainly, ma'am—hundreds to select from," replied the dealer. "I'll have my man to wait on you at once. Here, Henry, show this lady some coal stoves. How high did you want to go, ma'am?"

"Not very high."

"Then show her those three stoves which that millionaire on Fifty-ninth street burned one winter and then sold because he was going to Italy on a three years' trip."

"Yes, sir," replied Henry.

"And if none of them suit her show her the four dollar stoves I got of that heiress on Fifth avenue last week because the trimmings didn't match her carpets."

The woman took a "Fifth avenue stove," and she was only seven minutes looking it over, paying cash down and getting out of the store.—New York Evening World.

BREVITIES.

—Don't forget to register to-morrow.

—The City Common Council will hold an adjourn meeting this evening.

—Freight cars passed through this city yesterday morning covered with snow.

—A regular meeting of Wetumka Commandery, No. 34, K. of H., will be held on Monday evening, Nov. 23d.

—Two dogs engaged in a fight on Park avenue at about five o'clock Saturday night. Considerable excitement was the result.

—The polling places have been changed this year. This is intended by the combine to confuse the voters. Keep in mind the places when we publish them.

—Mr. John Harkins, the well-known ball player, has notified the manager of the West End Park ball team of Somerville that he will not play with the team next season.

—While lighting the candles in St. Joseph's church at the Vesper service last evening one of the altar boys accidently set fire to another one's surplice. The flames were extinguished before much damage resulted.

—In the Methodist church Rev. Mr. Mitchell preached a most able sermon last evening to the Junior Order of American Mechanics, a large congregation being in attendance. The sermon was preached by special request.

—"A Review of the Book of Genesis, with an Introductory Study to Exodus," will be the lesson of the Bible Normal Class, which meets in the First Baptist Church this evening. A very cordial invitation is extended to any one in the city, either young or old, to become members of this class.

—There were fires and alarms of fires all over the country yesterday, and the total losses aggregated a great sum. A cold snap always starts stoves and furnaces everywhere, and there is so much haste to get warm that safety is sometimes overlooked. Hence the sudden increase in the number of fires.—Elizabeth Journal of Saturday, November 21st.

—The approaches from Eighth avenue, leading to the M. E. church in Perry street, New York City, have upon the street lamps come and hear the "tornado evangelist." This church is packed nightly to hear this original and strange minister, brought from the West by the Rev. Mr. Tinker, the pastor. Such is the interest that a second, and third meeting was held last evening the preaching continuing far into midnight. Mr. Emma E. Poole, formerly of this city, is working with this evangelist, Webber. Last evening several friends from Plainfield were in the audience and reached home on the midnight train.

The Annual Convention Opens With a Large Attendance of Delegates.

The fourth annual convention of the Fourth district of Young Men's Christian Associations opened in the First Baptist church at Rahway Friday evening. The first thing on the programme was a song service under the leadership of Mr. James Dunn, followed by a scripture reading by the pastor of the church, Rev. Wm. Rollinson, who also led in prayer.

At the close of the prayer Rev. Dr. Liggett, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church, arrived with the Rev. Dr. Scott, president of Rutgers college, who he introduced as the speaker of the evening.

Dr. Scott took his text from the career of the prodigal son of Scripture, from which he drew some very interesting and instructive lessons.

Dr. Liggett followed with a few witty yet complimentary remarks, which were showered on Dr. Scott's head in a manner that made that gentleman fairly "grin" with amusement as well as the audience. The services closed with singing.

Here are the delegates that had arrived up to noon, the remainder being expected this evening, when the second public session will be held in the First Presbyterian church.

W. D. Murray, Plainfield; W. A. Venter, Trenton; Professor Byron Cummings, Rutger's Grammar School, New Brunswick; W. E. Compton and A. C. McLennan, New Brunswick; Messrs. Meeker, Schneider, Wyckoff, Cooke, Snoel, Scudder and Bell, Rutger's Grammar School; F. Thurston and G. M. Leonover, Rutger's College; State Secretary D. F. Moore and Assistant State Secretaries A. J. McCulley and H. M. Sham of Rutger's College; John Houghton and William Allstrom of Long Branch.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

After Instructive and Entertaining Sessions the Teachers Disperse.

The school teachers of Union county assembled Saturday morning in Public School No. 4, at Elizabeth, for the last session of the Institute of 1891. County Superintendent B. Holmes presided and Principal L. A. Goodenough acted as secretary.

Prominent among those in attendance were N. W. Pease, who for over twenty years was Superintendent of Public Schools of this county, and Principals Robinson and Heyer of Elizabeth; Messrs. Shallow, Corson, Story and McIlvaine of Rahway; and Messrs. Francis of Westfield and Clement of Cranford.

All the teachers of this city were in attendance.

Superintendent Dix conducted the opening exercises. Prof. A. C. Apgar of the State Normal School gave a lucid, humorous and highly characteristic address on the subject of "Nature Study Training to Observe." The Professor made many friends, and one teacher voiced the sentiments of many by saying that Professor Apgar was always sure to interest, to instruct, but never to tire an audience.

At 10.30 Mrs. H. E. Monroe of Philadelphia began her fourth address before this institute, her subject being "Teaching of English Composition."

Mrs. Monroe has never before spoken before the teachers of Union county, but so well satisfied are the members of the Institute with her work that she will cordially be welcomed to address future meetings of our teachers.

Principal Clement of Cranford offered resolutions thanking Principal Robinson and his assistant teachers for the generous and hospitable manner in which they entertained the members of the Institute Friday, and also thanking the Board of Education of the city of Elizabeth for so kindly giving the use of Public School Building No. 4 during the sessions of this Institute. Superintendent B. Holmes extended hearty thanks to all teachers for their attendance and attention and declared the Institute adjourned without day.

A CAT ROASTED.

Crawled Into an Oven—Found by the Odor.

A few days ago the oven door in the stove in the home of Cornelius Spillane of West Fourth street was left open and a cat got inside and went to sleep. During the day young Spillane started a fire in the stove. Shortly afterward an odor of burning flesh caused the inmates of the house to investigate, and upon opening the oven door they were horrified to find that a cat had been roasted to death.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Mr. James McCarthy and Miss Mary McGlynn, both of this city, are to be married in St. Mary's church Wednesday.

Miss Louise K. Green of Park avenue has been confined to her home for the past week by an attack of "La Grippe." Dr. E. W. Hedges is attending her.

Mrs. S. J. Taylor and Miss Amey I. Green returned home Saturday afternoon from Boston, where they have been attending the World's Convention of the W. C. T. U.

Again Proved False.

The "combine" has tried to give the people the idea that the State Board of Health had approved the sewerage scheme for which they have granted a franchise, over the Mayor's veto to Mr. Low, a resident of Kingston. Mr. Frank Runyon, the editor of the Courier, believing the statement untrue, wrote to the State Board of Health and received the following reply:

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH
F. W. RUNYON, Editor.

DEAR SIR:—We have heard nothing for months past as to the proposed sewer system for Plainfield. It has not been presented to the State Board of Health for approval. Respectfully yours,
E. M. HUNT, Sec'y.

Trenton, Nov. 19, 1891.

Without Home or Money.

A man and wife, both on the evening side of life, were lodgers in the police headquarters last night. They were cleanly and comfortably clothed, and had the appearance of respectable people. They were, however, without home and money, and were traveling to Pennsylvania where they expect to find friends. The couple gave their names as Frederick and Annie Luther. They were given a breakfast this morning, and overseer Lutz furnished them with railroad tickets for Plainfield. Justice Hetfield and Chief Tenney gave the couple money, and they went on their way very grateful.

Wheelmen's Reception.

A delegation of the Mercury Wheelmen of this city were the guests of Mr. A. B. Carpenter, of 230 West Front street, Plainfield, last evening. The house was very prettily decorated in honor of the event. A very hearty welcome awaited the boys, and a delightful evening's entertainment crowned by an excellent dinner, with a cordial invitation to call again cheered their homeward journey. —Saturday's Elizabeth Journal.

—To-morrow will be the last registration day. See that your name is recorded.

THE MASKED BURGLARS

SENTENCED TO THE STATE PRISON FOR TEN YEARS.

Justice Blauvelt's Case to be Appealed.—Klein's Bondsmen Still Searching for Him.

Saturday was sentence day in the Union county court. There were several cases of unusual interest pending, and the attendance of spectators was large.

Judge McCormick presided, and the prisoners were arraigned on the motion of Prosecutor Marsh. The first arraignments were the masked robbers who were arrested some two weeks ago returning from Linden, where they had robbed the store of Henry Gessner. They had the booty in their possession were armed with revolvers, and carried masks and burglars' tools.

TEN YEARS FOR THE MASKED BURGLARS.

The prisoners gave the names of Thomas Hill, George Stiles and John Allen, and they pleaded guilty to the charge on Wednesday last.

Stiles was first sentenced. He is the youngest of the trio. In passing judgment Judge McCormick spoke of the grievous crime, and said it was the d uty of the court to impose a punishment which would be an example to deter others from following their course. The court had determined to rid the community of this class, and the sentence was for the full extent of the law—ten years in State prison.

Hill and Allen were sentenced each for a like term, and brief words of rebuke were addressed to them.

BLAUVELT AND LINSKI'S CASE APPEALED.

In the case of Justice Blauvelt and Bernnin Linski, who were convicted of the larceny of the stock of Farmer Daly, the passing of sentence was deferred for two weeks.

Judge McCormick said a bill of exceptions had been taken by the prisoner's counsel, Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, and the bill could be arranged for argument at the next term.

Mr. Voorhees desired that final judgment be passed before the argument and the court fixed Dec. 5 for the proceeding.

Linski's bondsman surrendered him, and County Detective Keron became his surety in the sum of $1,500.

Otto Weir, who stole a horse blanket from the stable of Mrs. Capt. Williams at Westfield, pleaded guilty, and he was sentenced to State prison for a term of one year.

YOUTHFUL PRISONERS ARRAIGNED.

Philip Meisler, a fourteen-year-old boy, was next charged with stealing $90 from his parents, residents of Summit. Prosecutor Marsh said the parents were aged people. The boy took the money from his mother's trunk, and with a companion went to Asbury Park and spent it. Meisler's parents were desirous that the court send him to the Reform School. He had never been convicted of crime before. Sentence postponed the sentence for one week.

Daniel and Willie Fletcher, boys of tender years, were next tried for tilt-tapping. Daniel, the oldest boy, was alleged to have sent his brother into several stores and he stole the money. The last place visited was a store on Spring street, and the boys were arrested by Detective McGrail and Decker. Judge McCormick sentenced each to the Reform school.

EX-OFFICER KLINE' STILL MISSING.

Ex-Special Officer Joseph Kline, who was recently convicted of assault and battery, and has escaped from the city, has not been found. Prosecutor Marsh called his case, and Judge McCormick said that Mr. Blum, Kline's bondsman, was hopeful of securing him, and the case went over another week.

Boys' Club Notes.

The average attendance last week at the rooms was sixty-seven per evening, the largest being seventy-six and the smallest forty eight. Number of visitors was fifteen. Four boys joined during the week.

Next Wednesday evening occurs our "Thanksgiving Entertainment" for the boys. We hope every member of the club will come and enjoy the evening. The entertainment will consist of two farces given by the Four Leaf Clover Dramatic Club, vocal and instrumental music, and a "Silent Drill" by twelve members of the Edwards' Zouaves. All friends of the club are also invited to be present.

There will be a rehearsal of the Edwards' Zouaves, taking part in the "Silent Drill," this evening at 8:30.

The rooms will be open as usual on Thanksgiving evening.

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

The *Relief Association asks for do*nations of poultry, vegetables, fruit, etc., for the Thanksgiving dinners, which, as usual, are to be distributed among the poor of Plainfield. Last year eighty-two families were provided for, and this year it is hoped that the number may be increased. Gifts should be sent on either Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning next, to the Relief Rooms, 45 West Second street.

THE CORONER SYSTEM.

An Effort to be Made to Wipe it Out Altogether.

According to the Trenton Gazette, the State Board of Health is formulating a plan for "wiping out" the present Coroner System in New Jersey, and substituting therefore the system in use in Massachusetts, where in each county "the Governor appoints able and discreet men, learned in the science of medicine, to be medical examiners.

When a body is found, and a careful examination is necessary to ascertain the cause of death, they notify the District Attorney or Mayor of the condition of affairs and receive orders from them for the autopsy. If the death is caused by violence, they notify the District Attorney or the police, and one of these or all of them will then take up the legal inquiry into the cause of death. The President Justice or Trial Justice, after hearing testimony, draws up and signs a report, in which he must define and certify when and where and by what means the person deceased came to his death. If the Justice finds that murder, man*slaughter or an assault has been com*mitted, he may bind over as in criminal prosecution such witness as he deems necessary, or as the District Attorney may designate."

The Camden Courier in commenting on what the Gazette says very forcibly points out the fact that there is one thing in the way: "There is no question about the desirability of a change in the present Coroner system so far as it applies to many sections of the State, but the principal difficulty to the State Board of Health's proposition is that the office of Coroner in New Jersey is a Constitutional one, and can't be wiped out. His powers may be diminished, but he can't be effaced."

How To Wear Overcoats.

As the overcoat season is now thoroughly inaugurated, the question is again painfully apparent that many men do not know how to wear their overcoats. Nine men out of ten will go slouching along the streets with their outer coats slouching open. It is a common thing to see the over coat and under coats unbuttoned, and this will give say five thickness of clothing on the back, with the chest having only the protection of the outer and under shirts. How inconsistent, in this changeable and chilly weather, when the chest should have special care.

Then, it will be found that the man who goes with his overcoat flopping open generally wears his hands in his pockets, which further emphasizes his aspect of slouchiness. And a man who is careless in so far is generally careless about keeping his buttons sewed on and his shoes shined. And you will find it invariably the rule that the man who goes with his overcoat buttoned is the man who is neat in regard to other details of dress. Let the good wife see to it that the overcoat of the man she has sworn to love, honor and protect is carefully and securely buttoned before she sends him out into the cold, cold world. This advice applies to mothers for sons and sisters for fathers.—Ex.

How to Be a Nice Fellow.

[From the Philadelphia North American.]

Always try and adopt yourself to circumstances. When you go to a clambake, do as the clambakers do—eat, drink and be merry. A solemn man has no place at a clambake. When you go to a funeral, do as the mourners do—be quiet and unobtrusive—a jester has no place at a funeral. So in everything study the character of the company, and then accept their sentiments as your own. This is what makes a man "a nice fellow to have around."

A Victim of Liquor.

During Saturday evening the night operator at the main depot in this city was heard with piteous tremens and rushed into the baggage room and attempted to kill the baggagemaster. Policemen Lynch and Kiely were sent for and they succeeded in overcoming the unfortunate man, but not until he had broken one of the panes of glass in one of the windows.

Doubly Afflicted.

About 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. Fred. R. Haberle of West Fifth street received a telegram stating that her father, Mr. Robert H. Falls, residing in Brooklyn, was dying and hurried to his bedside, his death occurring about noon. Only a week ago she was called to Brooklyn to attend the funeral of her brother, Richard Falls.

Gov. Abbett to be Present.

The new rooms of the Catholic Young Men's Library will be formally opened on the evening of December sixteenth. Governor Abbett has accepted an invitation to be present, as has also the Rev. Chas. Kelley of Jersey City. Mayor Gilbert and the City Council have also been invited.

The Acorn Athletic Club's Thanksgiving Sport.

The members of the Acorn Athletic club will have a cross country run Thanksgiving morning. The prize is to be a solid silver medal. The runners will start at 10 o'clock from their rooms, No. 11 Somerset street. Mr. Frank Meeker, referee.

An Old man Injured.

During Saturday evening James McGinley of East Third street, while crossing that thoroughfare, was run over and painfully injured by a hacker wagon belonging to Michael Weber. He was assisted to his home but is unable to leave his bed.

Veterans and Their Wives and Children Meet Together.

Barry Post, G. A. R., held its annual camp fire in Washington hall at Elizabeth Friday evening, and entertained guests from Mansfield Post of Bayonne, Winfield Scott Post of this city and Berry Post of Woodbridge.

Past Department Commander Nevius of Red Bank was also among the guests.

President of Council Tufts, who was chairman of the committee of arrangements, led the Post and their guests from their armory to Washington Hall, and as they entered, the drum-fife band, led by J. C. Moore, struck up "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching." Here long and heavily laden tables awaited them, provided by wives and daughters of the Veterans.

After every one had indulged of the excellent things at hand the pipes of peace" were taken up. Addresses were made by the following, Commander Branson acting as toastmaster: Past Department Commander Nevius, Comrade John A. Goodwin, and Comrade William Hand of Winfield Scott Post.

Mrs. Lacy spoke of the Women's Relief Corps, and her remarks created both amusement and interest as she dwelt on her sister workers to stand by the Grand Army of the Republic, and also upon behalf of fancy table playing, which earned him great applause.

The Glee Club received a hearty vote of thanks for the excellent rendition of the good old song loved so much by the "Vets."

To Guess the Age of Quarters.

[From the Albany Argus.]

"Have you any quarters?" said one boy to a sitting party.

"Yes, four. Do you want to borrow them?"

"No. But what will you bet that I cannot guess the dates on them?"

"Done. I will name these dates: 1892, 1854, and two of 1876. Am I right?"

"Let me see. One is 1854; this is 1877; this is 1876; and this is 1854. You guessed three correctly and missed one, so you owe me a quarter and I owe you seventy-five cents. Now explain your trick.

"No trick. The fancy took me a few weeks ago to examine the dates on coins, and I found that almost every quarter bears one of these dates, with an occasional 1856, 1857, 1858 and 1878. I supplied myself with coins of these years. During the weeks I have been interested in the subject I have seen one 1891, but not a single other quarter bearing date in the sixties or the seventies, except as I have mentioned. If one wanted to bet as we have just done he could be sure winner in the long run."

I witnessed this transaction, and it interested me so that I looked the matter up. In the report of the Director of the Mint I found a full explanation. In that is a table giving the coinage in different denominations for each year since the organization of the Mints. The coinage of quarters has fluctuated in a most remarkable way. Beginning with 1850, for three years the coinage averaged about $640,000 a year. Then in 1853 it jumped up to $3,815,585. In 1854 it was almost as much, $3,095,000. Then it dropped to $774,360 in 1855. In 1856 it was $1,816,000; in 1857, $2,811,000, and in 1858, $1,845,000. Then it dropped again, never rising to $400,000, and in war times averaging only about $60,000, except in 1865, when it was $1,213,850. In 1875 it was $1,073,375; in 1876, $4,454,287.50; in 1877, $2,727,927.50. Then began the coinage of silver dollars by the millions, and the production of subsidiary coins dropped way off. For the past ten or fifteen years the coinage of quarters has averaged only $3,000 or $4,000.

Just examine the dates on the quarters that come into your possession and see how they bear out these statistics. For instance, in 1886 there were only $1,471.50 in quarters coined, and there are a thousand chances to one against a coin of this date coming into your hands.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Beware of the reminiscent rage. When one reaches that, farewell youth, farewell hope!

The Knights of Labor, in general convention assembled, got themselves on record for compulsory education by resolution declaring that in their judgment all children between the ages of seven and fifteen should attend school at least ten months in the year, or such part of the year as a school shall be open to them in their neighborhood.

In putting forward their claims for the next presidential nomination New York can't count cutting silly flings at Chicago. They say that their own magnificent new Madison Square garden will seat comfortably 12,000 persons, and in case of red hot politics excitement one-third of the glass roof can slide back and let the delegates and throngs beneath the open sky. As to Chicago, New York journals insist that a mild summer resort by comparison is the hottest place in the Union on a summer day.

Some years ago the last Presidential nomination in which strange and different species of opinion could have been predicted would have been the Presbyterian. Yet no denomination is more convulsed by the question of "once in grace always in grace," and if revision succeeds the church will really change its base theologically in some particulars in the estimation of the general public. Two of the strongest tenets of the Presbyterian faith have generally been thought to be infant damnation and foreordination. Yet in its report in favor of revision the New York presbytery earnestly asks that in whatever change may be made the doctrine of sovereign election may be interpreted in harmony with the truth that God is not willing any should perish. It asks also that all reference to eternal foreordination to everlasting death be omitted in the revised confession.

The Cause of It.

It sounded like a rattling of old iron when the stiff, shrunk up and starchy German nobility was for once shaken up by the panic in Berlin. Names of the old families that date their origin almost back to a generation or two before Adam suffered severely, and they are not able to understand to-day's what was the common and beastly thing that struck them.

We are in possession of information which would enlighten them if they could sufficiently recover from their dazed condition to appreciate it. It was the falling flat of the Baring syndicate that did it. Finance Minister Wyschnegradski wanted some firm to act as secret financial agents for Russia in Berlin. Because the openly accredited Russian agents, the Warschauers, could not do it, the old established banking house of Hirschfeld & Wolff undertook it. They failed because the Russian loan failed in Paris, and with them fell first Herr Lehmann and the Sommerfelds. That staggered even the rich nobilitesse. Count von Zedlitz-Trutschler, Baron von Kloeting, Count Pourtalesse and last of all, along with twenty or thirty more of Germany's gilt edged names, Count zur Lippe-Biesterfeld. After the crash reached him, all the rest of the consolidate tumbled over of their own accord. See?

The Garden of Padua.

Long ago, before the Christian era, before even the times of Roman domination, the little town of Patavium was founded in eastern Italy. It has survived all these centuries, and modern days have shortened the name to Padua. It was never a great town and it is now an impoverished place, like all the rest of Italy, yet Padua has one glory and beauty that not the whole United States can boast, with all its wealth and enterprise. That is a finely equipped botanical garden. In 1545—nearly three centuries and a half ago, when the Venetian republic ruled sea and land, and was rich besides—a learned man, Professor Bonarede, agitated the question of a botanical garden at Padua with such success that he got what so many modern statesmen are striving for, an appropriation. With this he founded the garden, bringing to it from the East the flowers and fruits of all the kinds that could be made to thrive in Italy, in doors and out.

A visit to this garden is an object lesson to every American. One entire group of foreign trees was planted in 1760, and still stands a monument to the Paduan gardener's care. Trees from China, Japan, Hungary, India and Australia grow side by side as though they had never been apart. Splendid trees, planted away back in the 1500's, still wave their stately arms in the soft wind. One of these is a magnificent palm, visited and described by Goethe. Flowers as well as trees from burning equatorial lands grow in hothouses, and the poorest barefoot child in Padua can see them and study botany in a way that is denied to the richest man's children in America. Yet Padua has only 70,000 inhabitants. Will not some rich man in America give a few of his millions to the founding of such a garden as this in at least one or two cities of this Union? It is worth this while. We will call the garden after him in all the coming ages of this republic. So if he will do so, no matter how bad a WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—The fight between New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Cincinnati, Pittsburg, Omaha, Detroit and Minneapolis for the honor of being the location of the next national Republican convention is in earnest to-day before members of the national Republican committee, who are in session here. Very few, if any, of the "conventions boomers" at the Arlington hotel attended church especially. In fact they were glad as they were Saturday, using persuasion, eloquence and all the appliances at hand in an endeavor to convince national committeemen of the advantages and beauties of their respective cities. Each one tried to hold the next Republican convention.

Facilities Will Not Figure.

All the claims that the competing cities are urging about facilities and their generous offers of Presidential hotel quarters will undoubtedly be considered in connection with the national committee and weigh little or nothing alongside of the important fact that the political exigencies of the Republican party demands a location that will be the most for the greatest interest of the party. The earnest, energetic men from the west from San Francisco, Omaha, Minneapolis and Detroit are here to-day and to-morrow to urge the holding of the national convention in the west is almost essential to the success of the party.

What Western Men Say.

"The Republican party," Mr. Coe, of the Omaha delegation says, "cannot afford now to be so independent as it once was. The experience of the past few years in the last two or three years very plainly indicates that it cannot afford to throw away a single electoral vote. Every vote counts now and will count for many years to come. We feel the very keenly out in Nebraska, and for the good of the party the convention ought to be held in the west. This section is the general battleground among western Republicans."

The Argument New York Uses.

On the other hand New Yorkers in urging the claims of their city point to the fact that New York is a close state and very close to New Jersey and Connecticut, both doubtful or the doubtfulest states, and argue that it would be politic to locate at the highest point for hold the convention in the metropolis. The Minnesota people are hard at work in the interest of their city, and they think they have a few points as to their ability to make any great success of the affair. Senators Washburne and Davis and ex-senator Pierce will present the claims and advantages of Minneapolis before the national committee. Chairman Senator Parker arrived and is quartered at the Arlington, and his apartments have a continuous overflow of callers. The governor has not had time to look over the list as yet, as he feels confident that Cincinnati will win the prize. He will make the address for Cincinnati invited of Major McKinley. The Cincinnati delegation are unable to say what vote they will get on the start, but think the votes will be pretty well scattered.

Omaha is to Stay.

John M. Thurston said to-day that Omaha was in the race to stay until the last, and her plans were well matured. Omaha, he said, is no combinations and was not in any second place deal. In the opinion of the Omaha people no city will have more at stake than they will at work and a number of ballots will be cast before any great change in the vote will be made.

The Omaha people say that they have secured pledges and will go into the contest well prepared, and will take the lead at the beginning and keep it throughout the contest. They say they have no fear of the result and will have the next national Republican convention at San Francisco.

The Metropolis Is Discouraged.

M. H. De Young, of the San Francisco Chronicle, says the question of distance has entirely disappeared in the minds of the delegates, and the offer made by San Francisco has received favorable notice from all points of the country make San Francisco a desirable city. The Detroit committee have assurance of several counties and think there is now no fear of a fight between New York, San Francisco and Cincinnati are out of the race. New York, which has always considered the convention hers as a matter of course, is not making any great effort for the convention, held a meeting last night. Senators Hiscock and Hawley and Hon. J. S. Fassett will represent the interests of New York. The impression prevails that New York is discouraged over the outlook.

The committee was called to order at 11 o'clock this morning by Secretary Clarkson, and one hour is being allowed each city for speeches in its behalf, but it is quite likely the hour allowed will not be consumed by some of the delegates.

A Reward for the Incendiaries.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The board of trustees of Homer offers $500 reward for the apprehension of the perpetrators of the recent incendiary fires at that place. The streets and suburbs are paroled from darkness until daylight by members of the recently organized vigilance committee.

A Boy Fatally Shoots Himself.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 23.—John Bowman, aged twelve years, accidentally shot himself in the abdomen Sunday afternoon, inflicting a fatal wound. Bowman, with a number of other boys, was shooting at a mark with a revolver.

Four Children Burned.

THIRTEEN PEOPLE BITTEN.

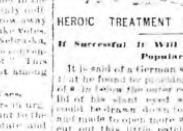
Terrible Work of a Mad Newfoundland Dog in Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 23.—Thirteen men, women and children were bitten by a big black Newfoundland dog which ran wildly through the eastern section of Newark for two hours Saturday evening. The animal was finally cornered and shot, but the wounds of all its victims were cauterized by drug gists and physicians. While most of them are only slightly hurt, one, Mrs. Lipkin, of Beech street, had her clothes nearly torn off and her thigh badly lacerated by the brute's fangs. She was attended by a physician, and all day yesterday had a slight fever.

The advisability of sending her to the Pasteur institute in this city was discussed, and it was decided to wait until today to look for further developments.

The dog was first seen in Bowery street, rushing along and snapping at everything in its way. Teams were many people in the thoroughfare, but they broke and ran in every direction when the animal approached. It first bit Michael O'Brien, an old man living on Bank street, in the left thigh, and when shaken off ran to Michael Brown, of 7 (right) street and lacerated his hand. By this time a crowd was chasing the animal, which ran into a shed, and on deavoring to kill it. By dodging and running through side streets it escaped until it Madison and Ferry streets, where it bit Mrs. Hilpin in the leg. Then it was stoned and clubbed to death by the excited crowd.

The list of those bitten follows: Following is the report just: Joseph Brown, fifteen street, bitten on the leg, unknown man bitten on the heel Philip Wright, of 7 (right) street, bitten on the hand; Frank Hood of 20 Plank road, bitten on the thigh; Mrs Lipkin, bitten on the thigh (severe); ——— Jerkin, bitten on the thigh (severe); ——— Jerkin, bitten on the thigh; Hilpin, bitten in the leg; Katie Kelsey, of Schuyler street bitten on the leg; Michael O'Brien, bitten on the leg; Hannah Boyd, bitten on the leg; Mrs. Boyd, bitten on the leg; Edward Brown, bitten on the hand; Mrs. Weiland, of Mott street, bitten on the thigh.



HEROIC TREATMENT OF WRINKLES.

If Successful It Will Likely Become Popular.

It is said of a German surgeon in Japan, that he found for plucking on a little plait of a in taking the outer corner of the eyelid of his wife and went out into the street could be drawn down to the proper level and made to open more widely. Then he cut out this little patch and joined the edges by a couple of stitches and covered the slight wound with sticking plaster. It healed, leaving no scar. Everything decided of the operation had been attained. If by pinching up the skin about a wrinkle and cutting out a little patch fifty years can be made to look like forty, and sixty years can be rolled back to fifty, there will be plenty of heroines ready to undergo the or eal.

Two Pretty Bats.

FOUR-IN-HAND. SYLVA.

The two charming hats above are types of the very latest styles, and show that trim small head dress is to be the rule. The lace in the Four-in-hand is quite an addition for its appearance though it is used without lace trimming. The Sylva style is becoming only to a very pronounced beauty.

BECOMING CAPES.

They Are Handy to Slip on and Cover a Multitude of Defects.

In spite of the popularity of the tight-fitting coats and jackets, the long capes with fur collars are favorites. They are so easy to slip on, and cover so many defects, that a woman clings to them as she clings to her old slippers. These capes may be made of any plaid goods—tweed is the favorite—and they should be supplied with several slits along the front and sides, so that a woman may put her hands forth at will or gather her garment about her, if she so desires. The fur cape is a matter of fancy. One may or may not wear it. Let the cape be long enough to cover up the basque, even though it have sleeves in the back, and let it be slightly puffed upon the shoulder, to give a graceful hang to the sides.

The Boys Created a Wreck.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 23.—Fifteen Mauff street boys were locked up in the police station on charges of malicious mischief yesterday damaged property belonging to the Erie Railroad to the extent of $1,000. A freight car of coal was standing on a siding, and the boys got on the top of the load and broke out all the hatches. The cars start, shaking the coal, and the boys got off the train and were out of sight before the police arrived.

Sentenced to Be Hanged.

PRINCETON, Ind., Nov. 23.—Elmer Maffitt, the murderer of Jacob Bullard, in the superior court, under bonds of $2,000, to stand trial for trifling with the affections of Miss Nellie Wolfe of East Killingly. Maffitt is a married man with two children, and has always stood high in the community.

A Chicago Minister's Suicide.

CHICAGO, Nov. 23.—The Rev. Kara Marsh Boring, while temporarily insane, committed suicide by hanging at the residence of his son, Charles J. Boring, 142 Maple avenue, Evanston. He was seventy-eight years old and a superannuated minister of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Shot by a New Haven Officer.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 23.—Thomas E. Havey, aged twenty-two, who is said to be a good family, was arrested Sunday while robbing the store of H. W. Leslie on Greenwood street, New Haven. Havey fired on the officer and then attempted to escape, and the officer shot him in the leg.

The Philadelphia in Danger of Topping Over.

WATER BALLAST KEEPS HER EREOT.

Naval Expert Minnegerode says That $375,000 Should Be Spent on Her at Once, or She May Do Grievous Injury When Her Big Guns Are Fired.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—The Times claims that the cruiser Philadelphia is only kept from turning bottom side up by carrying all the water she can stow in her double bottom spaces, and that, furthermore, the entrance of a slug in the vicinity of the water line will cause her to list to such an extent as to preclude the service of the battery, if indeed it does not cause her to turn completely over.

The Times says: Naval Constructor W. L. Mintonge has made a calculation showing that at least $375,000 would be necessary for repairs on the Philadelphia to secure alone the one feature of stability.

CRISP STOCK IS BOOMING.

The Georgia Man said to Be Quite Sure of the Speakership.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—Crisp and Mills, the two leading candidates for speaker, will meet with a boom. Crisp has another big jump upward in consequence of the New York visit. The Crisp men are confident that their man is now a sure winner. They do not seem to have a doubt that he will be elected on the first ballot. He has pledged to him, they say, 107 votes that can be counted on. Mr. Crisp's friends claim confidently that there is not a thing like a "cheat" in his interest in New York. They say that Tammany as an organization is for him. The Tammany congressmen are for him, but are most of the Democratic congressmen from the state outside of New York city.

Mr. Mills' friends, however, are not discouraged. They will stick to it that their man will show up at the caucus with enough votes to elect him. All the other candidates—Springer, Outhwaite and Bynum, are still in the race and there seems no reason to doubt that the two former at least will stay in to the end.

NO RETRACTION FROM BRIGGS.

The Presbyterian Divine Stands by Cardinal Newman's Teachings.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 23.—Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs lectured to the Church of the Messiah last night upon "The Bible and the Church as Exponents of Divine Authority."

Speaking of Newman, Dr. Briggs said: "The late Cardinal Newman was the representative churchman of our day—a man of high culture, of deep insight in many things, and a truly manly man if there ever was such. It is no heresy to take such a man at his word and say that he found divine certainty through the church, although above that he could rather follow him into the presence of my maker than risk the companionship of those uncharitable men who would exclude him from the kingdom of God.

"The church is plainly a great fountain of divine authority, and those who deny this take away from the Presbyterian church the only ground for its existence."

Doctors as Witnesses.

MIDDLETOWN, Ills., Nov. 23.—Doctors McAdam and Bryan, who were attacked in an attempt to blow open the safe of the National bank at Gardner are still in jail here. McAdam's arm is broken near the elbow, where the charge of shot from the detective struck it.

The Ravages of Influenza.

HAMILTON, Nov. 23.—Great destruction exists in this city over the prevalence of influenza, which is fatal in many instances. The number of deaths in the past week was 150, about 50 above the average, and there is no present sign of an abatement of the epidemic.

DOWN TO SUDDEN DEATH

McCarey Leaps to His Doom from Brooklyn Bridge.

HE WANTED TO BEAT STEVE BRODIE

Futile Attempt of the Police to Prevent the Intoxicated Notoriety Seeker from Jumping from the Great Aerial Highway—Struck the Water Like a Board.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Francis McCarey, a Coxhardy fellow who had been boasting about this city and Brooklyn for several days that he would soon let all the people know he was around there, plunged off the East river bridge at 2:30 yesterday afternoon and was drowned. He was half drunk when he made the leap. McCarey, who had been an iron molder in the Lewis & Fowler car shops on Walworth street, Williamsburg, but who was discharged for his work, was famous for his drinking and his "nerve." Brodie had bet $2,500 on the result of the election, and was informed that Brodie got his start by jumping off the bridge. That set McCarey a thinking.

He Would Jump, Too.

"I will jump off the bridge myself," he said to Brodie, "and show the world that I am the jumper of America."

Brodie chaffed him and he went away. On Saturday he again called on Brodie and talked incessantly of his nerve. He said he would jump on Sunday. Among the sporting notes in The News on Friday was this:

Francis McCarey, whose headquarters are at Pete Reis' s. 50 Walworth street, Brooklyn, writes to The Daily News that he will jump from the Brooklyn bridge on Sunday, in the forenoon. McCarey challenged Brodie, who calls him a crank, and he is going to jump the bridge to be on hand, just to show that Brodie did not accomplish anything wonderful.

On the Bridge at Last.

McCarey drank a great deal of whisky Saturday night and Sunday morning. His appearance at the bridge was at 2:30 o'clock. He stood at the New York entrance to the south roadway until a wagon turned in from the street. He climbed on the back and the driver ordered him off. He walked back muttering.

McCarey next tried the Brooklyn end of the bridge, and asked James Ross, a young peddler who lives on York street, Brooklyn, for a ride across the great aerial highway. Ross very good naturedly agreed.

The old gray horse pulled the load slowly up the incline toward the pier. Sudden starts made it difficult for McCarey to keep his balance. In the shadow of the arch he sat down and pulled his trousers down over his shoe tops. He took pieces of twine from his pocket and tied his trousers tightly around his ankles.

When the wagon was approaching the center of the span McCarey said something in an undertone.

"What are you going to do?" said Ross, turning in his seat.

Going to Beat Brodie.

"I am going to beat that fellow Steve Brodie," returned the man as he stood up and gave his head a boastful toss. "I'm going to jump off the bridge."

Ross is used to meeting boastful men about the navy yard. He thought the man was bluffing.

"If you jump," said Ross, "I'll jump afterward." His companions laughed.

McCarey didn't reply. He slipped out of his coat and vest in a jiffy, threw his old cap off and slid over the end of the wagon.

The old gray was reined up and Ross and the others shouted to the police and waved their arms. The guard on the front platform of a train from the east half a dozen sharp blasts on his whistle to alarm the police. Officer James Dooley, who was on the promenade, heard the conductor's whistle and hurried up the plank from the promenade to the roadway and jumped down. McCarey was climbing over the railing. Dooley ran as fast as he could. He had about one foot to go. McCarey slipped down on the outer side of the railing and stood on the big cable, which at that point is just a little more than the roadway. One hand grasped the small guard rail that runs along the cable. Perhaps fifty people were massed on the promenade opposite the point by this time.

In the crowd were half a dozen youths. They shouted to McCarey. He turned half about and looked up.

"Let him go, old boy!" yelled one.

"Now's your time!" cried another.

Heading Down to Death.

McCarey, with an air of bravado, swung his arm to the crowd and yelled out, "Here I go!" He lowered his head, loosened his grasp on the cable, and with both arms extended spread out with a shout of exultation. He went down head first and made two complete somersaults before he struck in the frothy wake of the tugboat flat on his back. Dooley got to the railing of the span in time to see McCarey strike the water. The concussion made a report that sounded as if a plank had been dropped.

McCarey's body disappeared. It came to the surface in a second. The arms were still outstretched. The head was submerged. Not the slightest movement was noticeable. Blood tinged the foam on the surface. The tide carried the body under the bridge. Then it disappeared.

This Week means the News.

Mrs. Mary McCarey went to the bridge police station last night and asked if any one had jumped off the bridge. The sergeant told her a man had jumped and been drowned. He showed her the clothing.

"That's him—Francis, my husband!" cried the woman. When her excitement had subsided she said her husband had been a hard drinker, and that all his trouble was the result of it.

McCarey left a note addressed to his wife. It said that he was to get $1,000 from "Steve" Brodie if he was successful in making the jump. If he was drowned the Brooklyn union would pay her $200 insurance. Brodie says he did not offer McCarey any money.

The Record of the Bridge.

Since May, 1886, six men have jumped from the bridge. Professor Odlum, the first, killed himself. Brodie was the next. After him was Larry Donovan. A painter fell from the bridge and was injured so badly that he died. A German named Pesch jumped successfully, and some time afterward shot himself. A lovesick Staten Islander took a rough ride months for jumping, and McCarey lost his life.

The Milkman Celebrated Also.

NORTH HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 23.—A North Haven milkman had lots of sport with a crowd of students last night who had been celebrating the football victory and hitched the countryman's horse by the tail. The milkman stoled in for about one minute and then literally wiped up the street with the students.

"THE MAN WHO WAS KING."

Romantic Story of the Ex-Ruler of the Samoan Islands.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—On Broadway yesterday there was a man who was "The Man Who Was King" in reality. He came to town a few days ago, and although his clothes are seedy and he hasn't a cent in his pocket and never thinks how he's going to get a meal, he is a picturesque figure as he goes in the corridors, he is a discrowned king nevertheless, and the history of his rise and fall as wild a story as that which Kipling conjured up through the witchery of his pen.

Colonel Albert B. Steinberger is "the man who was" in reality. He is the man who ruled the Samoan islands, who called them the name "Samoan," and who was lion hearted enough to have given battle with his one hundred and fifty Americans to the British man-of-war Barrancouta if the English had only showed him a chance. Proud as Lucifer, courteous as Chesterfield, interesting as Walter Raleigh he must have been, when he spun stories of adventures "Westward Ho," the marches of this soldier of fortune have been through perilous fields and ills.

Colonel Steinberger is probably the only American citizen who ever became a king. He went to the Islands in the United States man of war Tennessee. Those islanders, unprotected and a prey to every nation on the earth, welcomed him as their guide, and he led them, "said Colonel Steinberger, "the only government they ever had. I was the absolute head. I organized the parliament which exists to-day. I left them happy and I have been the sufferer."

Turmoil over religion, which has cost many a king his crown, and his head as well, brought about the downfall of the American king. He was captured by the British and taken away from the islands.

Robbed by Heir Stratton, He Says.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 23.—E. Smith Hubbell, a well known real estate dealer of this city, was robbed of valuable deeds by three burglars men. Two of them held Hubbell while the other ransacked the apartments. Hubbell says that he recognized one of the men as John B. Stratton, of New York city, one of the heirs to the Stratton estate, of which Mr. Hubbell has charge.

Each boat had a crew of nine men on it, which the tug was unable to get off, and it is feared that all are lost.

Oliver Presbyterian Church Damaged.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 23.—Oliver Presbyterian church, at Twenty-second and Mount Vernon streets, was damaged to the extent of $5,000 Sunday by fire which originated from a defective heater.

JUDGE LIVINGSTON DEFEATED.

His Futile Attempt to Keep the Alliance Out of the Speakership Fight.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 23.—The supreme council of the Farmers' Alliance has adjourned after an eventful meeting. It was determined to establish a legislative council or lobbying council of three at Washington, each member to draw a salary of $2,000 per year. The most important action was a resolution pledging the Alliance to stand by the decision of the February conference of the federated unions. As it is a foregone conclusion that that conference will declare for independent political action, this resolution practically pledges the support of the Alliance to the People's party. This measure was bitterly fought by Livingston and other southern leaders, but they were outvoted.

The supreme council turned over the charges against C. W. Macune to the Texas delegation, which adopted a resolution condemning the charges as infamous falsehoods which had before been investigated and found unsubstantiated. A vote of confidence in Macune was carried unanimously.

The resolution demanding separate caucus action for the speakership on the part of the Alliance members in congress was modified after a hard fight and reported in the following form:

"Realizing that the action of the members of the Fifty-second congress who were elected by aid of Alliance constituencies will have an important influence upon the welfare of our people called order, we respectfully request all representatives in said congress so stated to decline to enter into any party caucus so called to designate a candidate for the office of speaker unless adherence to the principles of the Ocala platform is made a test of admission to said caucuses."

Judge Livingston made a vehement speech of protest. He plainly told the convention that he would withdraw from the Alliance before he would be bound to political action. His position in this matter is based upon his desire to see Crisp, of Georgia, elected speaker. All the thirty-two congressmen elected by the Alliance vote some twelve or sixteen are for Crisp, and the resolution will place them all in a position to support Crisp. Judge Livingston was defeated and the resolution in its modified form was carried in the supreme council. It was a defeat for the Democratic delegates of the south.

NEW JERSEY AT THE FAIR.

The Site for Her Building Selected by Her Commissioners.

TRENTON, Nov. 23.—The site for the New Jersey building at the Chicago fair has been selected by Governor Abbett, General W. J. Sewell and Assemblyman Thomas Smith of the national commission, after visiting the grounds.

The delegation was met at Chicago by Colonel Davis, director general of the fair, and in his company they visited the location selected by the state. It is adjacent to the ground upon which the United States building will stand. In its rear will be the buildings to contain the Massachusetts and Rhode Island exhibits. Governor Abbett said:

"It is our object to make it a distinctively New Jersey building. It is proposed to set it up here and so build it that it can be taken apart, shipped to Chicago and there set up on the spot we have chosen. Nothing will be in it, so far as possible, that was not made in New Jersey, and we think we can have it built distinctively of New Jersey materials and manufactures and by New Jersey workmen.

After the fair it is proposed to take it apart, bring it back to this state and put it up on the capitol grounds, or some equally public place, where it can be examined by our people. "We found the fair much further advanced than we expected," continued the governor, "the skeletons of many buildings were complete and some were roofed in. We found acres upon acres of flooring ready to be placed in the large buildings and the buildings are being projected are on an enormous scale. We also ascertained that Edison would be allowed all the space he would need in the electric building for the display of his wonderful inventions and in all probability his display would be worth $100,000. I regret that the fair will not be located in New York, but congress has decided otherwise, I think every state should do all in its power to make it a grand success."

MR. SHEPHERD ARRESTED.

Mr. Sutton Charges Him with Having Destroyed His Home.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 23.—W. B. Shepherd, a well known contractor of this city, whose mysterious disappearance from home last January created a sensation throughout the whole country, arrived here Saturday night. His coming was awaited, but in some manner he eluded those who were watching for him and went quietly to his home. At 5 o'clock Sunday morning he was aroused from his slumbers by three detectives. He was placed under arrest and taken to the office of Justice Darlington, where he was charged with alienating the affections of Mayor Sutton's wife. The prisoner refused to make any statement, and was held in $10,000 bail for trial. The arrest has caused a decided sensation. For five months after Shepherd's disappearance it was thought he was dead, and had been the victim of foul play.

One day in May last he startled the whole community by sending a telegram to a friend here, stating that he was alive and living in New York. He also wrote to that city, and found Shepherd living ill at one of the hotels. Then it began to be whispered that there was a woman in the case, which fact, as well as the cause of his long absence, has just been made apparent.

O'Brien Wants Unity.

DUBLIN, Nov. 23.—Mr. John Dillon and Mr. O'Brien addressed a large audience Sunday at Mitchelstown. Dillon declared that 1,400 evicted families were still dependent upon the contributions of the friends of the Irish cause for support this winter, and they were shut out from the benefit of the Paris fund by the shameless treaty which John Redmond had entered into. O'Brien declared that those who were honest among the opponents of the federation were longing for unity in the common cause.

High Jumper Rosebery Killed.

CHICAGO, Ills., Nov. 23.—While Rosebery, the famous jumper of the equine world, was trying to break his record of 7 ½ in. at the Big Bat Stock show Saturday night, he fell, receiving injuries from which he died. The horse was valued at $25,000.

To Contest Hawley's Will.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 23.—It is probable that there will be a contest over the will of ex-Mayor Monson Hawley, of this city, who was president of the Bridgeport Savings bank, by his aunt, Miss Wilson, of Long Island. Miss Wilson claims that she was Jennie Chamberlain, and is the proprietress of a rather well known resort in Hamden.

HE BESTED THE BEAR.

But He Lost Some Fingers in Doing It.

Oscar Bailey, of Bale Hill, Pa., has more head than he had a few days ago, but he hasn't as many fingers. Oscar is one of the five Bailey brothers, of much local fame as hunters, but he was not hunting when the latest bear incident, of which he is the hero, occurred. He was engaged in the peaceful pursuit of corn cutting on the Gemien farm. While at work he was attracted by an agitated movement of the standing corn near one side of the field, and he made his way leisurely to the spot to see what was causing the movement. He wasn't prepared for what he did see, so when he came upon two of those at times frisky animals having a jolly time smashing pumpkins among the corn, it is putting it mildly to say that Mr. Bailey was amazed. But the true woodsman spirit quickly succeeded to astonishment, and Bailey having carried his unarmed-ness knife with him, he made a rush upon the two bears, which were apparently more amazed at the sudden appearance of Bailey upon the scene of their sport than Bailey was at seeing them. One of the bears recovered itself in time to turn tail and run when Bailey made his rush and made straight for the woods. The other bear was either too much surprised to beat a retreat in time or determined to resent Bailey's interruption of its pastime, for it stood its ground, and when its assailant gave it by no means a gentle jab with his corn knife the bear jumped fiercely at Bailey, and a very pretty fight was on. A corn cutter is rather an ugly weapon, and only in the hands of a woodsman can the bear as they wrestled and rolled about in the corn. He used the knife with skill as a dagger and a battle axe, and it was while doing duty with it in the latter capacity that he inflicted a very serious injury on himself. He grasped the knife longer with his left at the bear's breast after that, and the blade went in almost to the handle. Bailey did not wait to draw the knife out, but turned and hurried with his mutilated hand for home, winding his handkerchief about the bleeding stubs of his lost fingers as he ran. While he was being taken to town, to the doctor's, his brother took his gun and went back to see what had become of the bear. He found it dead, with Oscar's knife still in its breast. Satisfied with that, he followed the trail of the other bear and jumped it out of the laurels, a mile from the corn field, where bullets ended its career. When Oscar got home from the doctor's, the two bears lay on the back stoop, but he showed no enthusiasm over the trophies.

Foxes Carry Off a Trap.

Mark Fletcher of Root Hollow, Pa., has lost more than forty fowls since September. He laid their disappearance to foxes, and one day recently he fixed up a little surprise for the thieves. He got a lot of fine shavings in a hollow at the back of his farm, concealed two steel traps in the mass, and sprinkled lard scraps over the top. Then he set out half a dozen horseshoes here and there on the shavings, his idea being that the foxes would play with the horseshoes after they had gobbled the scraps, and fool around until nabbed by the hidden traps.

When Mr. Fletcher visited his fox surprise on the following morning the horseshoes and scraps were gone, but the traps were just as he had left them. He passed over to the shavings, thinking that the horseshoes had been covered up by the foxes, but he didn't find them, and he concluded that one of his neighbors had carried them away. On his way home Mr. Fletcher spied a pair of foxes capering back and forth near the edge of the woods. They headed off at his approach, and when he reached the spot he found the six horseshoes lying among the stumps, fifteen rods from the shavings.

Mr. Fletcher could see nothing else to do but go home, and at night he passed some chicken livers on the shavings directly over the traps. In the morning the bait was gone, the traps were sprung, and in the jaws were the toes of a fox. Mr. Fletcher said he was so angry that he set the shavings on fire and took the traps away.

A Skunk Clears Out a Jail.

Recently, while the short-term prisoners in the county jail at Cortland, N. Y., were going through their morning ablutions, Sheriff Borthwick, who was seated in the jail office, was startled by the shouts and cries of the prisoners. Thinking a fight was in progress, he hurried to the jail to part the contestants, but as soon as he flung open the iron door he saw a skunk crouching in a corner, where it had been driven by the prisoners. The skunk was as anxious to get out as were the prisoners to get him out. The Sheriff called his son Duke, who, accompanied by Curley, a red spaniel, rushed to the cage. The men were formed in line and marched into the grand jury room, while Sheriff Borthwick stood guard over them. Duke, as soon as the prisoners were removed, introduced Curley, who has made for himself a reputation as a rat killer. Curley eyed the intruder for a second, and then with a bark tackled it. He missed it, however, and the skunk, using its only weapon of defence, made a bee line for the open door, with Curley in hot pursuit. Through the corridors and out into Court street they raced. On the sidewalk Curley caught the skunk and shook it to death, but Curley is a ruined dog for some time to come. He is tied to a horse post while the chilly winds fan his red coat. The cells were fumigated and chloride of lime was liberally sprinkled throughout before the prisoners were returned.

He Died With His Boots On.

Paris Brumfield, one of the most notorious desperadoes of the southwestern part of West Virginia, has died in his boots, as was to be expected, but not by the hands of an outraged community. Brumfield was shot by one of his own men. He had been on a drunken spree, and was abusing his wife and family, it is reported, when one of his sons shot him through the body and killed him instantly. Brumfield had the reputation of being the slayer of not less than twelve men, and his list of murders may have been still greater, as his name has been associated with a great many foul and murderous deeds for many years. Nobody regrets his sudden taking off.

PRETTY MADGE YORKE.

A Clever Young Woman Who Came to the Front by an Accident.

It sometimes happens that a young and ambitious actress, who has been kept in the background of the chorus, makes herself known by an accident. An incident of this kind happened at the Casino, New York, recently, when the injury to Miss Marie Tempest, who plays the principal role in "The Tyroleans," gave her understudy, Miss Madge Yorke, an opportunity to distinguish herself. When Mr. Conried, the stage director, and the Aronsons were informed that Miss Tempest's injury was so severe as to prevent her appearing in the part for several nights, they were at a loss as to what to do. Mr. Aronson, however, finally decided to see how far Miss Yorke could go through with the part and she was telegraped for. This was at noon, two hours before the curtain was to be run up. Miss Yorke managed to go through her lines tolerably well, and rather than disappoint the audience it was decided to go on with the performance. She went through the evening production without a break, and did so well that few of the people in the audience knew it was other than Tempest herself they were listening to. The next night Miss Yorke did so cleverly in the part as to merit several encores from the audience and the thanks of both Mr. Aronson and Mr. Conried.

MISS MADGE YORKE.

Miss Yorke is about twenty-one years of age and has only been on the stage three years. During the past two seasons she has been the understudy of Marie Jansen in "Polly," Fanny Rice in "Poor Jonathan," and Louise Beaudett in "Apollo."

How the Bucks Died.

The gentlemen comprising the surveying party now working for the Bear Valley Company up Millard's cañon, were on Monday treated to a sight which seldom comes to men in this centre of civilization.

The men were working up the cañon about a mile above the Millard house when they heard a peculiar crashing noise. Looking up they saw on the cliffs high above the stream, and about a quarter of a mile from them, two noble bucks standing with heads lowered about ten feet from each other. Thus they stood eyeing each other and pawing the dirt for fully a minute. Then they made a simultaneous spring, and came together with a noise like a falling tree. So violent was the concussion that the animals were thrown back until a distance of ten or fifteen feet again intervened between them. The men, fascinated with the sight, watched the deer go through the same performance again and again.

Finally, after a more than usually violent rush, the bucks did not separate, but struggled as if apparently trying to push each other back. It soon became plain to the men, however, that instead of pushing they were pulling away from each other. In other words their horns had become locked, and the more raging combatants the bucks became frightened animals, and were only bent on securing their liberty. The party then conceived the idea of taking advantage of the helpless condition of the bucks and capturing them. They made a great rush for the scene, but before they reached it the deer in their struggles approached too near the edge of the cliff and both of them fell to their death in the pool below. When the party reached the water the deer were found locked in each other's horns, quit dead.

Winans' Marvelous Shots.

Mr. Walter Winans, the crack young American pistol shot, has been doing some revolver shooting in England that has set experts on both sides of the water talking. He has plunked lead into a target with unerring accuracy in a competition for the South London Rifle Club championship gold medal, winning it handily.

Mr. Winans made exactly the same total at five targets in the competition for the medal. They were:

First score	7	6	7	7	7	7—41
Second score	7	7	7	7	7	6—41
Third score	7	7	7	7	7	7—41
Fourth score	7	7	7	7	7	7—41
Fifth score	6	7	7	7	7	7—41

This is a total of 205 out of a possible 210. The targets were made on a 20-yard range, 8 yards longer than those usually used in this country. He used a 44-calibre duelling pistol, and shot standing, under rules which rigidly prescribe: No rest of any kind, natural or artificial, will be allowed. Nor will the competitor be permitted to support himself on any part of the gallery or table from which the firing takes place. The target was a bull's-eye of 3 inches diameter, scoring 8 points with a central carton, 2 inches in diameter, scoring 7 points.

After Thirteen Years

After thirteen years' separation and search, Archer M. Wilson, a wealthy citizen of Morris, Minn., recently discovered his lost wife in Wichita, Kan. Fourteen years ago Archer Wilson and Miss Mollie Andrews were married in Sioux City. After a year of wedlock Wilson disappeared, and the young wife never heard of him again till recently.

Reduced to want, she sought employment, and finally drifted to Omaha, where she in 1889 procured a divorce and married a young businessman named Fleming, whom she soon discovered to be a dissipated good for nothing.

Four years ago the couple moved suddenly to Missouri, but they had hardly reached there before Fleming was arrested for forgery, and he is now serving a term in the Nebraska penitentiary. A couple of years ago Mrs. Fleming came to Wichita, and was recognized by a former acquaintance, who communicated with Wilson, her first husband. Wilson explains his disappearance from home in a way satisfactory to his former wife, and Mrs. Fleming has agreed to procure a divorce and remarry Wilson.

Fish in the Sea.

Ethel—I should advise you to try still fishing.

LOVERS.

Oh, what does the night wind say to the rose?
Alas, there is never an ear that knows—
And what does the nightingale, there in the brake,
Sing to his love, when he sings for her sake?

Alas, and alas, we can never discover—
Oh, sweet wind lover, and sweet bird lover,
Your secret is safe; so safe shall ours be
When some one I love whispers love words to me.

—Philip Bourke Marston in New York Truth.

THE OLD WOMANISH YOUNGSTER.

The Kind of a Girl That Some Mothers' Pride and Training Makes.

There are mother's girls—sweet little dears brought up at mother's knee, and taking in, with the extraordinary quickness of a sharp witted child, everything they hear mentioned. Such children become little replicas of their elders, copy their conversation, their gestures, their tones, ideas, faults and foolish idiosyncrasies. The parents think it so cute, so cunning, and, proud of dear Mary Jane's old womanish ways and complacent affectations, drag her about with them wherever they go, and force her upon their friends and their visitors till Mary Jane becomes inflated to bursting point with the consciousness of her own charms, and the family acquaintances feel that they would like to incarcerate the "dear, clever little woman" in some far distant spot, where the babies cease from troubling and the listener is at rest.

Mary Jane's mamma is always foisting her brilliant daughter upon afternoon visitors, who come at untoward times when mamma is up stairs in the comfortable neglige of a loose white wrapper and a short white skirt. When she receives the cards she becomes extremely flurried, after the manner of women, excoriates her guests with the true feminine hospitality, and finally tells Mary Jane, who is standing about and silently enjoying the breeze, to smooth her hair, pull up her stockings, and go down and entertain the ladies until "mamma comes."

Nothing is dearer to the heart of Mary Jane. Plastering down her bangs with a wet brush and donning a clean pinafore, she trips down stairs and enters the parlor, imparting to her back draperies a gently pendulous swing, as she has seen her Aunt Fanny do when dressed up to meet her young man. Mary Jane has a perfectly self possessed and complacent manner, copied from mamma's and Aunt Fanny's. She greets the guests with gracious patronage, then, sitting on the edge of her chair, smooths her pinafore, crosses her ankles and proceeds to direct the conversation into interesting channels.

First, she calls their attention to the new draperies over the mantel. They were papa's taste. "He went off one day and bought them secondhand; cheap, you know. And mamma was furious. She says any one can see they've been bought secondhand. Do you think you would have guessed it if I hadn't told you? No; perhaps not."

Then her eyes lighted on a silk sofa pillow, she designates it with a languid wave of the hand and continues:

"That is new too. Mamma's friend, Miss O'Neil, made it. Miss O'Neil, you know, was at school with mamma, but afterward she didn't get married, you see, so mamma says her offers were so poor, and so now she's an old maid and teaches music. She's worn very badly, mamma says, and is getting a little short in her temper. She gives me lessons—it's really out of charity, for she is not at all a good teacher. She also comes to dinner once a week, and sometimes twice. We're beginning to think that she comes a little too often, because we have to have three courses and dessert when she comes, and it does make the bills run up so!"

After this she falls back on the photographs on the table, and points them out with appropriate descriptions:

"That man there with the big mustache is Aunt Fanny's beau. He's been coming here for three years, and papa calls him 'the forlorn hope.' I don't know why he does that. Aunt Fanny sits in the parlor when he comes, and we all sit here in the library and listen to Aunt Fanny laugh. Mamma says it's a pity he's not so entertaining when he talks to us. He never makes us laugh at all.

"The next man, in the enamel frame, is Mr. Smith. He's a friend of papa's. Last winter he lent papa some money, and it isn't paid yet. As soon as it's paid mamma's going to get her a set of cut glass, but papa says she can't have one piece until then. Mamma got awful mad when he tells her so, but papa says honesty is the best policy, and when papa says a thing, it's just like the Medes and the Prussians."

Here mamma, nicely dressed up, but somewhat out of breath, enters rustling. "I am afraid this little chatterbox has been boring you," she says, with beaming maternal pride. The guests politely disclaim such a possibility. In truth, they have been enormously entertained.—San Francisco Argonaut.

The Nineteenth Century Woman.

There is an old belief of the masculine Anglo-Saxon mind that a woman, to be lovable, should have no mind of her own. Individuality. But with this world's rapid advance through the Victorian age, woman has become more than ever perplexing to the male atom who poises himself for a moment to make a study of her. She no longer needs man's apparel to practice a profession or to journey from foot under the green leaves of Arden. She has grown self reliant and cosmopolitan—equally at home in the White House or on the banks of the Nevis. She never plucks daisies and buttercups nowadays to test her lover's affection by pulling apart their petals. You find her, instead, arranging orchids in a glass and making cynical reflections upon the worthlessness of the entire race. Individual love or hate in the opposite sex is apparently all one to her.—Scribner's.

Black Silk Always Elegant.

Black silk is among the most popular fabric for dinner gowns that are not pretentious but rather inclined to quiet elegance, and has English authority. The somber effect of black is quite obviated by the decorations of the dress, the gloves, chiffon, flowers and jewels. But there are often occasions when a beautiful woman accentuates her beauty by a dead black toilet, which is only relieved by her hand masses of red and pink roses. Such a gown gives a dazzling prominence to a fair skin and beautiful hair. One stylish dinner gown of rich black silk had a demi-train skirt bordered with cut jet passementerie, and the bodice most tastefully trimmed with black chiffon, black velvet and jet.

'Tis Ever Thus.

In the somber glow of autumn,
Now the champion baseball nine,
With the prestige of the pennant,
Feeling wondrous great and fine,

Hies it forth unto the suburbs
In the effort of all its fame;
And 'tis then great crowds assemble
For an exhibition game.

And they see the lofty champions,
Though they play with skill and spunk,
Beaten 17 to 7
By the Eagles of Podunk.

—R. K. M. in New York Sun.

An Excellent Reason.

Papa and his guest sat at table together,
And talked of the tariff, the reign and the weather,
The Indian outlook, the woman's convention,
And other such matters, too many to mention.
While poor little Dot, who distinctly preferred,
Like most of her sex, to be seen and be heard—
Whose patience, in fact, neared the end of its tether—
Was waiting a chance for her own little word.

A pause came at last; at the very first knocking
She seized opportunity—wasn't it shoe king?
And chattered so fast that her father, astonished,
Concluded his Dot must be sternly admonished.

"My dear little girl," was his terrible way,
"What makes you so noisy, I wonder, today?
A bit of your tongue, or I shall have to be docking."
But Dot answered back, with no sign of distress,
"I'm talking because I'm not simplin to say."

BREVITIES.

—The Plainfield Reform Club will hold its regular mid-week meeting next Thursday evening.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the Monroe avenue chapel are arranging for a fair for early next month.

—A horse belonging to a farmer named Barkins ran away on East Second street this morning and wrecked the wagon to which it was attached.

—The aggregate of the election bills already ordered paid by the Auditing Committee of the Somerset County Board of Freeholders is $3,070.45.

—Sheriff Codington of Somerset county will draw the petit jury for the December term of court Tuesday. Court will meet on Tuesday, December 22d.

—A number of Plainfielders went to Association Hall, New York, last evening to hear Marechale Booth who is in command of the Salvation Army in France.

—The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Warren Mission chapel will hold a meeting in the parlors of the chapel this evening at eight o'clock.

—A short devotional meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. will be held this evening. Important business in connection with the boys' conference will be transacted.

—The game of foot ball to be played on the Crescent grounds Thanksgiving Day, as elsewhere advertised, is what is known as the Association style, which does not permit handling the ball, or slugging as in the Rugby game.

—Policeman Fredrickson last night arrested a colored man for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. When he got the fellow to the station house he commenced to fight the officer and it was with difficulty that he (the colored man) was locked up in a cell. When arraigned before Police Collector Webster this morning the prisoner pleaded guilty and was sentenced to sixty days in the county jail.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield has extended an invitation to representatives of the Boys' Department of the State, to members of committees having charge of Boys' work and to Christian boys from Associations that have no organized work for boys, to meet in conference, at Plainfield, on Saturday, November 28, and Sunday, November 29. It is desirable that ladies and gentlemen interested in boys' work should be present at this conference, as well as members of the Plainfield Department. Sessions will be held at 10 a. m. and 2.30 and 7.30 p. m. On Sunday a meeting for delegates and members of the Plainfield Auxiliary will be held from 9 until 10.15 a. m. A mass meeting for boys will also be held at 4 p. m. All the sessions on Saturday will be held in the Association Rooms. The most interesting programme has been arranged. All who can entertain one or more Christian boys during the conference are requested to send their names to the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

—The tests of the American armor at Indian Head, down the Potomac, last Saturday would seem to show that this country has profited greatly by the work of the other nations in the line of making shotresisting sides for naval vessels. A year ago the navy was without a standard in this manufacture, and it bought three forei'gn plates, representing the best products of Europe, which it tested severely at Annapolis. Taking the best plate it has improved upon it and added to it the best-known American process of hardening armor plating, and thus it has evolved, though the competing efforts of private manufacturers a series of plates that are pronounced even by foreigners to be superior to anything ever made abroad. There is a meaning hidden in this experience that cannot fail of strength when noted in connection with the history of the American navy in times when the country has needed a fighting force for either offensive or defensive warfare. Lagging a little behind the rest of the world in apparent progress, this country has been able the profit by the experiences of other powers, and, developing a national trait of adaptation and improvement, the United States to-day stands ready to compete with Europe in any line of the manufacture of war material.

COLONIZING.

TRYING TO ELECT HETFIELD BY ILLEGAL METHODS.

Frederick S Moore, a Bartender, Caught in the Act.—He Registered at the City Hotel this Afternoon at Two o'Clock.—His Arrest Will Follow.

Saturday's News stated that the combine were colonizing the First Ward. Mr. George W. Moore to-day caught one of the colonizers in the person of Frederick S. Moore, who resides with his mother on West Second street between Park and Madison avenues.

Young Moore registered at the City Hotel at about two o'clock this afternoon. He is a bartender by occupation.

The object of the illegal registration is to try elect Hetfield.

Mr. George W. Moore, the registration officer, will have a warrant issued for young Moore's arrest.

A BIG CAVE-IN AT SMALLEY'S.

About 100 Tons of Rock Tumbled Last Night—The Rain the Cause

Last night, about dark, Mr. Newton Smalley, who was in his home on Regent street, North Plainfield, heard a heavy rumble from the direction of the mountain. The stone-crusher, which is owned by Messrs. Smalley Brothers, being located in the direction of the sound, Mr. Smalley investigated and found that a ledge containing about 100 tons of stone had tumbled down the steep cut above the crusher, without, however, doing any damage. The heavy rains probably caused the fall.

The history of how Messrs. Smalley came to start the stone crusher is interesting.

About a year ago Mr. Al. Smalley, while hunting over the mountain, started a rabbit. It entered a hole in the rocks on the mountain side almost above Codington's ice house. In attempting to get it out, Mr. Smalley discovered that there was a great quantity, about five feet thick, of good road or surface stone there, and later he and his brother started the crusher using the small stones and boulders. These surface stones were cleared away for about fifty feet when the quarry of loose rock, now being worked, was discovered, from which about 5000 tons of stone have been taken.

The view from the crusher is superb.

Devoe Predicts a Hard Winter.

The Hackensack weather prophet, under date of November 10th, indulges in "I-told-you-so" sentences in regard to the lack of rain, and blames the rainmakers in the West. He further says:

"An extremely cold winter will prevail in Europe, France and Germany will be snowed up by the last week of November. In this section the Winter will be colder than last year, and ice 18 inches thick will be cut on the Hudson by Jan. 1st. The ground will freeze without sufficient rain to raise the streams.

In New England plenty of snow, but little rain will fall for the next two months. The prevailing winds along the Atlantic coast will be northeasterly, with blinding snow-storms. A storm will begin on November 24th, with heavy thunder showers followed by snow and a cold wave in the Northern States. Excellent sleighing will be had for Thanksgiving, and the ice will be fit for skating before Dec. 1st. Heavy rains will occur in this section in February.

Pen Sketches from Life.

Now that your attention is called to it, see how many men you will observe doing the following:

A driver of a coal wagon stopped his team on the corner of Park avenue and Front street this morning. He dismounted with the whip. One horse, a little restive moved and immediately the driver caught it by the bit and struck it over the legs violently with the whip, yelling "whoa" at the same time. Naturally it didn't "whoa" and he struck it again and again. The mate also moved nervously and got some of the same medicine and advice—whack and whoa.

For Charity's Sake.

The New Jersey Training School for Feeble-minded Children will make a Thanksgiving Day a donation day, and asks contributions of money, provisions, groceries, vegetables, clothing, crockery, supplies of all kinds, yearly subscriptions for magazines or newspapers, books, toys and games for the children. Money is preferred, but almost anything can be used in the institution, which now has 140 inmates, from six different States. Donations will be received at any time, and should be sent to S. O. Garrison, the Superintendent at Vineland.

Practical Religion.

At the methodist prayer meeting in Vincent chapel to-morrow evening, there will be a praise and Thanksgiving service. Each member has been requested by the pastor to bring to the meeting some article of food or clothing, which will be received by a committee in charge and carefully distributed to the worthy poor of the church on Thanksgiving morning.

Fined for Illegal Selling.

P. A. Miller, the proprietor of the South Second street drug store, who was arrested by Policeman Giese a few days ago for selling liquor without a license, this morning fined twenty-five dollars by City Judge Codington.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE THIRTY-FOURTH SESSION HELD LAST EVENING.

Commissioners Appointed to Assess Benefits and Damages for Opening and Widening Peace Street.—Other Business.

The City Common Council met in regular session last evening. In the absence of the President, City Clerk Coward called the meeting to order.

On motion Councilman Ginns was selected as chairman.

Mr. See offered a resolution to the effect that Westervelt avenue extension be repaired. It was referred to the Committee on Streets.

Councilman Moffett moved to adjourn.

Councilman Ackerman called for the ayes and nays. A vote was taken and the motion was lost.

On motion the Council took a recess of ten minutes.

Upon re-assembling Mr. Rushmore offered a resolution to the effect that the application of the property owners in reference to the opening and widening of Peace street be adopted. It was so ordered.

Messrs. W. C. Ayres, W. M. Sandford and Jeremiah Manning were then named as commissioners.

The meeting then adjourned.

When the names of the commissioners selected was learned on the streets after the meeting it was remarked, "Well, the combine have done one good thing in selecting such good men." But, as will be seen the combine this time were in the minority and had nothing at all to do with the selection.

Seymour G.'s Logic.

Because the friends of a certain honorable citizen of Plainfield elected him a director in several corporations, among them the Plainfield Electric Light Company, the Plainfield Water Company, and the Dime Savings Institution, and because said citizen is the Postmaster, therefore the citizens of Plainfield ought to elect the combine that they may continue to increase taxes, and do mean, treacherous and illegal acts, grant franchises in such a way as to give every opportunity for a steal, and generally run things in a manner sure to eventually bankrupt and ruin the city.

Because this citizen, after long years of faithful service to the people, has been found worthy of further honors, while on the contrary the courts of New York found it necessary to take charge of the private business of Seymour G. and to investigate his peculiar methods, and because the courts of New Jersey have found it necessary to enjoin him in illegal official acts, him and his pals, therefore, good people of Plainfield, you are to vote for them, all good men and true in their own estimation, of which they expect us to take them—we who from brief but bitter experience know them so well that we can read them like a book, them and their schemes, and will remember them long after they have passed from their Fools Paradise, which for the next few days they will be) to the quietude of innocuous dissuetude. Yes, we will remember them long, very long, after, they, perhaps, will wish they were forgotten.

Verily, hath thee, Seymour G., (we had almost written it Schemer G.), a big head.

The Sportive Winds.

The Clinton Democrat says that while Billy Butler was crossing the Main street bridge in that town last Wednesday after dinner, on his way to the store, with his arms full of store fixtures, a sassy gust of wind, which had been lying behind Gulick's mill, waiting for just such an opportunity, swept down upon him, and after slapping him about in a rough manner for a little while, grabbed his hat and fired it into the river. Billy did not relish the rude treatment he received but but was soon in the store telling his friends about the outrageous assault and of his narrow escape.

The Rail Hit the Flagman.

Flagman Murphy had a peculiar accident on Monday night at the Union Depot crossing. Elizabeth There had been repairs made to the crossing during the day and a rail had been left upon a heap of material beside the track.

A fast train on the Pennsylvania came in sight, struck the rail and sent it flying through the air. It hit Flagman Murphy, knocking him down. He was picked up insensible and carried into the flag shanty. He soon recovered, however, and is not badly hurt.

DR. DILL LEAVES STIRLING.

Often Without Money, Though he Wore a Dress Coat Three Times a Week.

There is much speculation as to what transpired at Summit Saturday at the secret investigation made by a committee of the Presbytery in regard to charges made against Rev. Arthur C. Dill, formerly pastor of the Stirling Presbyterian church. The feeling now against Parson Dill is more bitter than ever. The affidavits of the Torreys, father and son; the Moffatt brothers, Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Caroline Halliday and others, submitted at the secret investigation, it is said, are chiefly of such a character that their contents cannot be published. These affidavits will be presented to the Presbytery.

Rev. Mr. Dill left Stirling yesterday morning and went to the Union Theological Seminary, No. 710 Park avenue, New York City, where he says he intends taking an extra course of lectures. Mr. Dill talked to a reporter on various subjects, but refused to speak of his troubles in Stirling. He said: "I beg to be excused from speaking of this matter. I have already lost over $1,000 through the persecutions of these people in Stirling. Since I have been in the ministry my life has not been an easy one. I was reared in luxury and refinement, and then started on my career as a minister without a dollar. I had spent nearly $4,000 in preparing myself for the ministry. I had friends among the wealthiest people of New York, but they never knew that I was often without money and the necessaries of life, though I wore a dress coat three times a week."

Mr. Dill refused to say anything about his future plans.

An Accident Drawer.

The accident drawer or shelf, ought to be an institution in every family, for the articles belonging to it are frequently needed, often instantly, and are rarely to be found quickly when an accident happens. Then there is a place for them; and accidents in a family of children are the unexpected things that always happen. Keep all the old handkerchiefs, both linen and silk; rolls of soft old linen; several old gloves of various sizes; a box of glass fingers; a spool of strong cotton, or one of silk which is even better, and a small needle book with several needles of large size. Have also two rolls of bandages, one wide and the other narrow; a sheet of adhesive plaster, and a paper of arnica plaster; bottles of Pond's extract; a pair of sharp scissors, and your accident shelf is complete for all home needs, or will furnish what is needed until the arrival of the doctor. In case of a burn where the skin is broken, cover the spot as soon as possible with a thick coating of flour, preferably wheat flour; if the skin is not broken, put on time water and wrap in soft linen dipped in it.—American Agriculturist.

The Growth of the Knights of Honor.

[From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

Mr. C. B. Ludwig of Louisiana, arrived in the Lindell hotel last night. Ludwig is Commander-in-Chief of the Uniformed Rank of the Knights of Honor. The order, which is a secret one, has jurisdiction of the corps of the order all over the country. "I have been all over the South," he said, "and never saw our order in a more prosperous condition. Louisiana, like other sections which have achieved great results, ours had a very small beginning. Its foundation was brought about in this way. One night, nineteen years ago, seven young men were engaged in conversation somewhere in Louisville, and in the, at the time, little town of Louisville. All the seven men were young, but each one studied, and one of them was so juvenile in appearance and in reality that he was known by the name of 'Baby.' These seven said to themselves that each would agree to subscribe so much to a common fund, and, in the course of time, when a sufficient allowance would be made out of that fund to be worth while, the man was agreed to, the fund was started, and so began the organization of the Knights of Honor. The growth of that fund is now a fine gentleman, and holds one of the first positions in the Society. When I say that not a single death has been paid out of $37,000,000, you will see the rapid growth of the organization.

Owing to throat trouble, it is feared that Captain McIver of the Salvation Army may have to relinquish her duties for some time.

Mrs. Annie Harris, wife of Frank Harris, of South Plainfield, and eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Veit, of Flemington, died at the home of her parents on Saturday morning last, after a brief though painful illness from catarrh of stomach. Her age was only 25 years. She leaves one child, a little girl aged about three years. Mrs. Harris was a woman of much natural brightness of mind, an intelligent and pleasing conversationalist, and of an affectionate disposition.

LONDON, Nov. 24, (Special.)—Lord Bulwer Lytton, the famous author, died today.

Some New Jersey Wonders.

Mrs. Rachel Smith, of Blairstown, was ninety-five years old last Wednesday. She comes of a long-lived family. Her father, George F. Snover, Sr., lived to be seventy years old, and her mother was ninety-three when she died. She had three brothers, George F., Samuel and John, all of whom lived many years, and nearly all of her eight sisters, including "Aunt Peggy" Lanterman, died at a ripe old age. Mrs. Smith is the last of her family living. Of her early hard-working life Mrs. Smith says: "We girls used to spin hundreds of pounds of wool and weave lots of cloth. Many a night, after husking corn all day in the field, have I taken a tallow dip and gone up to the wagon house and wove till midnight and many a sheaf have I raked and bound behind the cradles. I used to drive a four-horse team as good as any man. And many a day have I gone and made stone fence all day with my man, and at night threshed buckwheat in the barn. At home we had to be boys and girls both."

John C. Perdoe, superintendent of the Phillipsburg cemetery, had his suspicions aroused by a German woman's frequent visits to the cemetery, especially as she always carried something in her apron when she left the grounds. At first he supposed she was moving decayed bouquets from the graves of her friends. A few days ago he asked her what she had rolled up in her apron, informing her that it was against the rules to carry anything out of the cemetery without the consent of the superintendent. The woman promptly opened her apron and displayed a lot of very large ripe tomatoes. She took him to the plot where she raised them, at the foot of the graves in the plot where her departed friends are buried. She said the soil was very good for raising tomatoes, but she will be compelled to do her gardening outside the cemetery in the future.

Last Saturday afternoon Philip Philhower, of near Middle Valley, a young man of eighteen years, went out to set traps to catch skunks. While bending over one of his traps he felt something strike his back very heavily, and that something into his flesh. He put his hand behind him and caught hold of the legs of something. He jerked it loose and dashed it to the ground. It proved to be a hen hawk of the largest kind. As soon as the hawk struck the ground it turned and made battle and caught Philip by one of his fingers. He could not get loose until he caught it by the neck and broke it.

Pastime for Winter Evenings.

Take sixteen apples or washed potatoes, place them on the floor in two long rows. At the head of each row have a plate and spoon. Choose two captains, then let them choose an equal number of persons for their sides. The captains play first. Each takes a spoon and, kneeling, begins spooning up an apple on the plate. The one who gets his row of apples on the plate first, without touching them against anything but the spoons is the victor. After each pair have taken their turn, the side that has the greatest number of victories one wins the game.

Township Committee Meeting.

The North Plainfield Township Committee held a meeting last evening. The question of the opening of Peace street was thoroughly discussed, all present favoring the proposed opening. The appointing of Commissioners was deferred until Nov. 27th. A bill amounting to $311.70 from Smalley Bros., was ordered paid and the meeting adjourned.

—Girls, we want to tell you something that ought to have the effect of loosening your corset strings. There was a card party in the Jersey city of Camden one night last week, and while everybody present was enjoying themselves, a bright and pretty young lady fell over dead. Her death is said to have been caused by tight lacing. Our story is a short one, you see, but the moral of it ought to be long reaching.—Hunterdon County Democrat.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Portraits of various centenarians bob up every little while in the newspaper Illustrations. But if all persons who are to arrive at the age of a hundred are bound to look like that, then the average citizen may well pray to be taken out of the world about the time he comes of age.

That is a fearful row about nothing which Amelie Rives Chanler makes in her new novel, "According to St. John." The heroine commits suicide because she thinks the hero wants to be rid of her, and she loves him so much that she wants to set him free. Why didn't the foolish creature get a divorce?

What can be thought of men calling themselves civilized and decent, and living in an enlightened eastern state, who will tear out feather from a girl of seven and turn her out on a cold night in a public highway without clothing? There are reform schools, there are prison reformatories, there is law enough in any county of the Union to properly punish a girl of that age, no matter what her crimes may be. The day may come when these men will not be proud of their exploit.

A remarkable machine for cutting lumber has been invented by Dr. Bradley, of New York city, and Thomas Crane, of Newark, N. J. The two have experimented five years, with the result of perfecting a machine that will cut forty boards a minute from a sawlog and drop them as smooth as if they had been planed in the most careful manner. The saw is thin and places the work at one operation, with no loss of either sawdust or shavings. It will revolutionize lumber cutting. The cutting is done by a powerful knife that works with a draw motion. The invention was tried in presence of a practical lumberman from New York, another from Canada and another from Pennsylvania. All pronounced it a success. If it comes into common use the human ear will be in more narrowed with the sound of the buzz saw.

In Memoriam—Comanche.

He was the only surviving creature from the Custer massacre on Little Big Horn in 1876. He was wounded in seven places, robbed of all his valuables and left for dead. Yet he was not dead, but managed to crawl away from the field of blood, where he was found some days after the battle. He was tenderly cared for and recovered. He belonged to the United States army, but was never required to do any service from that eventful day till not long since, at Fort Riley, Kan., he died of old age, honored and regretted by all who knew him.

Comanche was a horse. He belonged to the United States cavalry service and was 29 years old when he died. He was ridden into the fatal fight by his gallant master, Captain Keogh, a relative of General Custer. Comanche came out, but he was riderless, and no man ever rode him again. At military reviews he appeared on parade with empty saddle, a reminder of the bloodiest battle tragedy of this generation, the massacre of Little Big Horn. At cavalry drills the old fellow was occasionally bridled and saddled and led out with the rest, responding to the familiar bugle signal for fifteen years, till he heard and answered the final trumpet call. Brave old Comanche! It is hard to believe you have no soul.

The Millennium, Perhaps.

It would be agreeable to live in the time when the hopes of a writer in Far and Near are realized. Far and Near is the organ of the working girls' clubs of America, and it was left for one of these working girls herself to establish an ideal of conduct between woman and woman which has escaped the notice of her richer and more favored sisters. But if the sex would all hold before them the ideal of this poor working girl, something like the millennium would dawn.

It has been said so long it has become a commonplace that women all dislike one another at heart and are jealous of one another. It will certainly be not before if all women, rich and poor, take to heart the words of the working girl who writes in Far and Near. She tells us that a new force will begin to move the world when women hang together and help one another and have only good will toward one another, each rejoicing in a sister's success, no matter what one's own failures and disappointments are. These are things to keep still about. If each does the best she knows how to do, there is success worth having for all in one line or another without grudging or picking flaws in the work of another. The working girl's definition of love is interesting:

Much has been written of the love between man and woman, and so much of the love of women for one another. When this latter is fully recognized, there will be a new force in the world. I know only one satisfactory, all around definition of love in existence. It is a command. It says to the lower fellow: Love me or else will suffer long for her; she is kind to her. She neither envies her nor looks down upon her. She is not easily provoked with her, and thinks no evil of her. She bears and believes and hopes and endures all things for her sake; and forgives unfailingly. This is not a mere sentimental feeling; it is a controlling life principle, the motive power which keeps the engine at work. In a working girl's club or elsewhere it will walk straight through difficulties and accomplish anything. It is the great wheel of what we call charity—the giving to those that need, and the thinking myself but a part.

WRECKED BY THE WINDS

Pennsylvania and Other States Swept by a Storm.

THE WHITE HOUSE WAS DAMAGED

The Cyclone Frightened the President and His Family, but No One at the Executive Mansion Was Hurt—Several Persons Killed and Others Injured.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—A terrific storm, disastrous alike to life and property, passed over this city yesterday. A hurricane unroofed many houses and demolished Metzerott's new Music hall, on F street, killing one person and inflicting probably fatal injuries upon another. The velocity of the wind was estimated at sixty miles an hour, and brick walls went down before it like cardboard houses. The new Music hall was unfinished, and a number of workmen were engaged in hastening its completion so that it might be ready for a concert which was to have been given in it Dec. 1 under the leadership of Walter Damrosch.

Four Persons Buried.

In the rear of the hall was the shop of George Wall, a tailor. At work in the room were Mr. White and three sewing women. When the storm broke it became unusually dark in the room. A few minutes after 12:30 there came a sudden crash and the great 80-foot wall on the north side of the Music hall toppled over upon the smaller buildings that face on F street. Under tons of brick, mortar, beams, iron and woodwork lay the four people. A force of policemen and firemen were promptly on hand, and they started in like heroes to clear away the wreck. The work was horrible.

All the three buildings of the F street stores, from Metzerott's to Twelfth street, were beneath the ruins of the fallen building, and more than half a dozen buildings were wrecked.

Taking Out the Victims.

The first victim found was Clara Greenberg, one of the sewing girls, who was taken out quite unhurt, though terribly frightened. Later the rescuers came upon the dead body of George Wall. It was mutilated and battered almost beyond recognition. A few minutes afterward Ida White, a daughter of the tailor, was rescued badly injured. The third girl is believed to have escaped.

Accident at the White House.

A section of the stone balustrade around the roof of the White House was blown down in the storm, and it crushed through the roof of the portico at the eastern entrance of the basement.

The section described was about twenty feet long, composed of freestone in balusters and pilars. In falling it carried with it a large portion of the cornice.

The noise caused quite a commotion in the president's household for a few minutes, but a speedy investigation showed that no one had been injured.

The flag on the top of the building was cut in half as neatly as though done with a knife. The president was receiving the Minnesota delegation and was apprised of the storm by a rush of water under the south windows and the crash of the balustrade. He hastened to the private part of the house and reassured the ladies of his family.

During the progress of the storm lightning struck the large gas reservoir at the corner of Fourteenth and G streets, and 500,000 feet of gas spent itself in illuminating the sky.

Six Victims at Binghamton.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 24.—During the storm here a terrific explosion occurred and from the Parlor City boiler works came a cloud of smoke and the odor of burning flesh filled the air.

The cupola of the foundry consisted of a huge cylinder containing ten tons of molten iron.

The bottom of the cupola was fastened by braces from the ground, and underneath was the fire used in heating the metal. The terrific downpour of rain had created a stream of water to wash out the earth around the braces supporting the door of the cupola. Six workmen were in the furnace. They stood in a circle around the cupola waiting for the release of the molten metal. Without the slightest warning the braces gave way, allowing ten tons of the fluid metal to fall into a large pond of water. Instantly there was a fearful explosion, and the heated metal was thrown through the sides of the building a distance of 400 feet, and the rear of the structure was wrecked. Not one of the employees escaped.

They Were Fearfully Roasted.

John McMahon was literally roasted. The molten metal struck the top of the body, and when picked up the flesh dropped off, exposing the intestines and portions of the thigh bone, while he was otherwise fearfully mangled. John Gorley was found lying near the door moaning in pain, the iron having completely destroyed the sight of both eyes. Martin King was badly burned about the face and upper portions of his body, the flesh being literally roasted. John Nolan, Sr., and John Nolan, Jr., were terribly burned about the head and face. In each case the laceration had been fearful, the clothing being torn from the bodies of the victims.

Killed in a Demolished Factory.

YONK, Pa., Nov. 24.—The works of the Ketterer Wagon company, of New York, one mile from Hanover, were destroyed by the high wind. The building was a two story brick structure 75 by 200 feet, and was leveled to the ground. Thirty employees were at work in the building at the time. Harvey Carbaugh, aged twenty-three, was buried beneath the doors and every timber in the body of the building. His body was recovered two hours later.

Joseph Nebby and a man named Lansinger were pinned fast by falling timbers and were extricated some time after. Their legs were broken and they were otherwise badly injured and may die. Of the thirty men in the works all were more or less hurt except two or three. The loss to the Ketterer company will be $20,000.

The storm came from the south, and there was not a moment's warning before the crash came. Much damage was done on the farm of Latimer Hoke. There were eight buildings on the place, and all but one were blown down.

Two Schoolhouses Wrecked.

CARLISLE, Pa., Nov. 24.—A terrific rain, wind and thunder storm passed over this section of the Cumberland valley Monday afternoon, doing considerable damage to property and probably causing loss of life. Many buildings are blown down.

While school was in session at the Graham schoolhouse the roof was blown a distance of eighty feet and the walls fell in. The following are the injured as far as can be ascertained:

Sallie Fisher, pupil; left side of face cut by falling glass.

James Gilla, pupil; face cut.

Lewis Wilson, pupil; nose broken by falling timber.

Another pupil, name unknown; arm badly injured.

About seven or eight others were slightly injured. Miss Rudy was hurt while assisting her scholars to escape. The Sunnyside schoolhouse, two miles west of town, was partially blown down, and a number of the pupils were more or less injured.

Exciting Scenes in Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 24.—The storm struck Baltimore, demolishing barns, farm outhouses and other frame buildings. Telegraph wires were prostrated. In the south western part of this city a number of houses were unroofed. A tremendous rain and thunder and lightning accompany the gale. In the harbor several small craft were capsized. The most serious damage here was the destruction of a portion of C. S. Maltby's large oyster packing house on Westfall avenue.

Howard Yearly was buried from the fourth story into the water of the dock below, but was promptly rescued by the crew of a steam tug. He was picked up unconscious with a severe gash in his head. Frederick Lambert and S. C. Mitchell, on the same floor with Yearly, were injured by the falling walls. On the lower floor over twenty men were at work, but they all got out in safety.

Destruction at Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 24.—The hurricane did great damage by the unroofing of houses. Many persons had narrow escapes from being struck by flying roofs, and a seventeen-year-old boy was blown off a trestle-work eighty-two twenty feet high. His scalp was lacerated and both wrists dislocated. He is the only injured person reported. The police patrol, telephone and fire alarm telegraph services are in bad shape.

The high wind was accompanied by rain and lightning and the Pennsylvania depot was scorched by the latter. Two spans of the bridge crossing the Susquehanna two miles above Duncannon were blown completely off their foundations.

The Wires in Bade Shape.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24. The blow the storm dealt the telegraph service of the country wasn't as bad as that dealt by the blizzard, but it was sufficiently severe to make the operators think of blizzard comparisons. Wire Chief Mitchell, in the Western Union building, said that the worst lines to be touch, Augusta, New York, New Orleans and Florida were all prostrated. The most serious troubles are west of Buffalo, between Baltimore and Washington, between New York and Pittsburg and west of the latter city. At the office of the Postal Telegraph company the service was reported to be in a bad way.

Many Houses Unroofed.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 24.—The severe wind and rain storm has leveled fences, trees, signs, telegraph and telephone poles and wires. Many houses are unroofed in the country districts along the Lehigh and Lackawanna railroad and the damage is very heavy. Telegraphic communication is almost entirely cut off in the valley.

Sunk in the Hudson.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 24.—A terrific rainstorm and gale along the lower Hudson river has caused much damage to property. J. O. Davidson's steam yacht Princess and many smaller vessels were sunk.

The City Hall Suffered.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 24.—The cyclone struck here last night and ripped the tin roof off the city hall in Newark avenue.

A House Dress.

FROM PARIS.

From Paris the birthplace of fashions comes the pretty dress shown here. It is a pretty frock of havana cloth, embroidered round the skirt in a design of golden honeysuckle. A cuirasse of similar trimming covers the cloth corsage, while a rogue sash of moss-green velvet encircles the waist, and forms a kind of valet fraise or upstanding ruffle around the throat.

The Keynote of a Costume.

A competent authority on dress declares that the keynote of a gown should always harmonize with the hair, that the latter is always the keynote of the whole arrangement, and whatever blends agreeably with its tints is sure to be becoming.

As to Furs.

There is not much change in the size of astrachan or seal muffs, but those made of long-haired fur are large. Ermine has been introduced for evening wear, but it is not popular.

The girl who has not a mink boa or some other fur to swathe her delicate throat for sharp autumn days is not to be counted among the swells.

Charged in the Bill.

A suicide was perpetrated in a certain lodging house that shall be nameless. A few days after the landlady sent the family of the deceased a bill containing the following item:

"To coffin caused to the waiter when he discovered the corpse, nineteen francs ninety-five centimes."—Petit Parisien.

SHOT BY A MALE NURSE

Pretty Mrs. Chapman Fatally Wounded in Brooklyn.

THE DEED OF A JEALOUS FIEND.

Herbert Scearvount, Employed to Attend Hawley Chapman, an Imbecile, Discovers Amour Between Mrs. Chapman and on Being Repulsed Shoots Her.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 24.—Mrs. G. Hawley Chapman, the beautiful wife of one of Brooklyn's well known society men, was twice shot yesterday and probably fatally injured by Herbert Scearvount, a professional nurse. The shooting took place at her home, 36 St. Mark's avenue. Shortly after 11 o'clock two loud pistol shots were heard in the Chapman residence. Detective Sergeant Reynolds, of the Tenth police precinct, heard the reports and investigated. On the second floor in the front room Mrs. Chapman was found lying in a pool of blood. Her right arm was bent under her, and from her left breast the blood streamed across her body.

Shot by the Male Nurse.

In a voice scarce above a whisper Mrs. Chapman told the detective that she had been shot by the male nurse who was in attendance upon Mr. Chapman. Detective Reynolds left Mrs. Chapman to look for Scearvount. The bathroom door was locked, and this the detective burst open. In the bathtub and undressed lay the nurse, evidently in agony from a dose of poison which he had taken with suicidal intent. The detective dragged the man from the bathtub and into the room where Mrs. Chapman still lay.

"Is this the man?" asked the detective asked Mrs. Chapman, who faintly replied:

"That's the man. He shot me." Then she fainted.

During the shooting Mr. Chapman, who is an imbecile, lay in the back parlor of the floor below. He cried pitifully to learn the cause of the agreement. Detective Reynolds took charge of Scearvount, who was still suffering from an overdose of opium. He was dressed, and in his trousers' pocket was found a 32-calibered revolver, fully loaded. While still too stupefied to talk, he was taken to the Seney hospital.

The Stories of the Shooting.

There are two versions of the tragedy—Mrs. Chapman's and that of the assassin. Mrs. Chapman's version is generally believed. Scearvount, who is about twenty-nine and rather handsome, has been living at the Chapman residence several weeks. He was employed last summer. He had not been in Chapman's residence very long before he began to worry Mrs. Chapman with his attentions. He presumed on her youth and her husband's invalid condition. Mrs. Chapman went to her room to prepare for a trip down town. She had about finished dressing when Scearvount entered her room. Without apology for his unmannerly intrusion, he attempted to subject the woman to a gross indignity. She pushed him away and started to run from the room. Enraged now beyond measure, the man drew a revolver and in an instant fired two shots at Mrs. Chapman.

Scearvount was questioned about the tragedy and he admitted the shooting. He plainly declared that he was jealous of the woman. He said that she had encouraged his attentions. He was locked up to await the result of Mrs. Chapman's injuries.

Mrs. Chapman is about twenty-three. She was married to Chapman five years ago and the wedding was a notable social event.

Young Mr. Chapman in his time has been one of the most popular young men in Brooklyn. As a professional actor he was known as Joseph Langham's leading juvenile and assumed the role of Captain Absolute in "The Rivals." He also supported Minnie Maddern. Mrs. Chapman will die.

GOVERNOR ALVIN P. HOVEY DEAD.

Grant Credited Him with the Key Battle in the Vicksburg Campaign.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 24.—Governor Alvin P. Hovey died at 1:30 o'clock in his room at the Denison hotel. His last moments were peaceful and conscious and his last words were an inquiry for his favorite granddaughter, Mary Menzies. All immediate members of his family were present. The direct cause of his death was heart failure.

Alvin Peterson Hovey was born in Posey county, Ind., on Sept. 6, 1821. He was educated in the Mount Vernon common schools, studied law and was admitted to the bar of Mount Vernon in 1845. He was a good lawyer and had more than fair success. He was a delegate to the constitutional convention of Indiana in 1850. In 1853 he was elected judge of the 3rd judicial circuit of Indiana, and held the office until 1854, when he was made a judge of the state supreme court. From 1856 to 1858 he was United States district attorney for Indiana.

During the civil war he entered the Union service as colonel of the Twenty-fourth Indiana volunteers in July, 1861. April 28, 1862, he was commissioned a general of brigade, and July, 1864, he was brevetted a major general for meritorious and distinguished services to the country. He was in command of the eastern district of Arkansas in 1863, and of the district of Indiana in 1864 and 65. General Grant in his official report awards to General Hovey the honor of the key battle of the Vicksburg campaign, that of Champion's Hill.

General Hovey resigned in October, 1865, and was appointed United States minister to Peru, which office he resigned in 1870. He was elected governor in 1886, served one term and might have been elected to a second term had not the Republicans nominated him for governor in 1888. It was the greatest political fight and after a gallant campaign he was elected. He has been a wise and temperate executive officer. His term would have expired in January, 1893.

To Consider a Common Ratio.

PARIS, Nov. 24.—Jesse Seligman, who came to Europe semi-officially to arrange for an international conference to discuss the establishment of a common ratio of value between gold and silver, was presented by Minister Reid to M. Rouvier, the French minister of finance. The latter was compelled to say that France could not take the initiative in the matter. But he added that he hoped England and Germany might be induced to co-operate with France in arranging for a conference on the basis suggested.

Horrible Murder at Wilmington.

FONSECA FORCED OUT.

Compelled to Resign Brazil's Presidency by a Popular Uprising.

LONDON, Nov. 24.—Floriano Peixoto, in whose favor President da Fonseca, of Brazil, has retired, has been vice president of Brazil in the Fonseca government. He is an old and prominent general and politician and served in the Paraguayan war. Fonseca was forced out by pressure he could not resist. The officers of the fleet now at Rio proclaimed a revolt, demanding that Fonseca should resign and give place to the vice president, Floriano Peixotto. The army remained quiet, neither moving to the help of Fonseca nor against him, although it was understood that some of the leading officers were in sympathy with the navy.

Meantime a riot broke out in the city, and a multitude, all the time growing in numbers, *went about demanding Fonse*ca's retirement and attacking the newspaper offices that supported him. The police were powerless, and the mob effectually demolished the obnoxious newspaper offices, the editors narrowly making their escape. Fonseca's associates urged him to resign as the only possible way to avert the worst calamities.

Had Fonseca held out, he might possibly have taken with him a large portion of the army, but he consulted his friends and avert civil war. The news of Fonseca's resignation was received with great rejoicing, and the riotous demodstrations ceased. All is now quiet.

Signing the Preston Petition.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The trustees of the insolvent Ulster County Savings institution have decided to ask Hon. William F. Russell, of Saugerties; Judge William Lawton, Mayor-elect David Kennedy, Benjamin J. Winne, John Maxwell, Frederick W. Cross, Captain John Brodhead and George J. Smith, of this city; ex-Assemblymen Davis Winne and John L. Mc-Grath, of Shenenkeen, and Peter C. Black, of Eddyville, to become trustees. The petitions for the resumption of the bank under State Superintendent Preston's plan are being extensively signed.

Forger Gerhard in Jail.

NORRISTOWN, Pa., Nov. 24.—Jonathan H. Gerhard, cigar manufacturer of Douglass township, being short of money to pay his bonds, forged indorsements to $675 worth of notes on the Farmers' National bank of Pennsburg. He was arrested and is now in jail.

MINNEAPOLIS MEN WIN.

That City Gets the National Republican Convention.

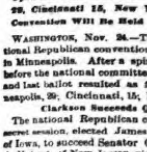
CLARKSON IS QUAY'S SUCCESSOR.

When the Site Question Was Balloted Upon the Final Vote Stood: Minneapolis 29, Cincinnati 15, New York 3—The Convention Will Be Held on June 7.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—The next National Republican convention will be held in Minneapolis. After a spirited contest before the national committee the seventh and last ballot resulted as follows: Minneapolis, 29; Cincinnati, 15; New York, 3.

Clarkson Succeeds Quay.

The national Republican committee, in secret session, elected James S. Clarkson, of Iowa, to succeed Senator Quay, and P. A. Hoisted, of New Jersey, vice Gallinger, to succeed Mr. Clarkson; William Barbour, of New York, treasurer, to succeed W. W. Dudley. The elections were by acclamation. The committee also admitted Dennis T. Flynn as the delegate from Oklahoma.



JAMES S. CLARKSON

The secret session then closed, and M. H. De Young, of San Francisco, introduced Congressman McKenna, who began his speech in favor of San Francisco. He spoke to nearly a full committee, as only one delegate out of forty-nine, W. L. Rynerson, of Arizona, was absent. McKenna denied that San Francisco was too far distant.

If miles of travel were to be the prevailing consideration other cities besides San Francisco were done for. To simplify this argument the convention had only to find the center of population and stick the convention right there. The superintendent of the census had announced that the center of population was a little east by west of Greensburg, in Decatur county, twenty miles from Columbus, Ind., in latitude 39 19 degs. 44 sec.; longitude 85 26 degs. 6 sec. Mr. De Young, speaking as delegate, said he appeared as the representative of the citizens of San Francisco who had authorized him to make these public offers, and before doing so desired to file with the chairman a bond of $50,000 guaranteeing the carrying out of the offers he was about to make.

San Francisco's Offer.

The people of San Francisco offered to furnish each member of the convention his railroad fare to San Francisco, his Pullman car fare and to pay all his hotel bills during his stay while holding the convention. They also offered to the delegates to the convention at the close of their labors a trip to the Yosemite valley for one week at the cost of the city of San Francisco. In addition to that they authorized him to say that they purposed to furnish every delegate with a railroad ticket to San Francisco and back.

This offer was not made as a bribe, but to overcome the objection that the expense was too great. San Francisco also proposed to give to everybody not a delegate desiring to attend the convention through rates to San Francisco and back for twenty-five dollars. "If any delegate desires to take his wife or some other fellow's wife could do so for twenty-five dollars and she wouldn't need any credentials when she got there. This sally was received with much laughter and applause.

Chicago Out of It.

Chicago's turn came next and Mr. W. J. Campbell said in behalf of Chicago he simply desired to read the resolutions passed by the business men of that city stating that in grateful appreciation of Chicago having been awarded the World's fair they did not ask for the convention, but should it come to Chicago, it would be properly treated.

Detroit made her claim through Senator Palmer. He presented the claims of Detroit from a historical, a practical and a sentimental standpoint, and claimed, first, as all of these grounds Detroit was entitled to the convention. He admitted that he feared he was leading a "forlorn hope." The Republican party, he said, was born at Jackson, seventy miles from Detroit. Political consideration demanded that the convention should go to Detroit. The Democrats had stolen the state while the Republicans were out corn husking, and it would take hard work to get it back. The people needed the stimulation of the convention.

The Claims of Minneapolis.

Then came the turn of Minneapolis, soon to be declared winner of the contest. Committeeman Robert G. Evans headed in the guarantee entered into by the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and then yielded to Senator Washburn, who in plain, businesslike phrases set forth the terms of the phenomenal cities with their 200,000 inhabitants. While Minneapolis was not quite as central as Chicago, it was equally convenient from some of the most populous sections of the country.

Governor Merriam, of Minnesota, cordially supported the claims of the Sister city. Minneapolis and St. Paul might not be at all times harmonious in their business competition, but when it came to the interests of the Republican party they always stood together. He asked for this convention for its effect upon the northwest. "We have lost Wisconsin," he said; "we have lost Iowa; we have lost Nebraska; the two Dakotas are tinctured with disaffection, and you cannot elect your president unless you redeem the northwest."

The East Out of Touch.

Senator Casey, of North Dakota, added his plea on behalf of Minneapolis. He believed one consideration overlooked was the fact that the east was out of touch with the west. He believed if the east would come out to the west and recognize the fact of its development and its strength and importance to the Republican party the victory in 1892 might be considered half won already.

Missouri being next called upon, Mr. Chauncey I. Filley made a ringing and amusing speech on behalf of St. Louis. He came not to make an appeal, but to ask justice; not to plead for a moss back state to the hope of changing a moss back vote, but to claim the convention for what St. Louis had done in the past, in electing Republican congressmen and making possible the organization of a Republican house without a postage stamp of help from the party chieftains or from Wall street. When Nebraska was reached John M. Thurston, holding the proxy for that state, introduced Judge Scott as the spokesman on behalf of Omaha. He was followed by Senator Manderson, and Hon. John M. Thurston closed the argument for Omaha. He had no prophecies of disaster to make. So long as the Republican party stood for American manhood, American muscle and American citizenship, the west would be with the Republican party, no matter where the convention might be held.

New York Tells Her Story.

New York being next in order, Colonel Elliott F. Shepard said that behind the claims of the seven cities there stood the claims of the candidates. It would hardly be denied that should Cincinnati be the choice the distinguished gentleman who filled the chair at the White House would find it exceedingly convenient. If a dark horse were necessary, the distinguished governor of Ohio might be selected. In Chicago he had heard the name of Judge Gresham mentioned as a candidate. At Omaha who could be better than the gentleman who last addressed the committee (Judge Thurston) or Senator Manderson! In San Francisco we had the name of Senator Stanford. In Detroit there was the gallant ex-commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, General Alger. To whatever city the convention went, except to the metropolis, it would find a candidate. New York had positively no candidate. There alone was an arena where all the candidates would have an equal and unbiased chance. Mr. Bryce followed with a forcible presentation of the claims of New York. General Hawley urged the committee to take the convention to New York, where the centennial would be in 1892—in New York and Connecticut.

Cheers for Fassett.

The enthusiasm which had been gradually growing during the speeches of Senators Hiscock and Hawley culminated when the Republican standard bearer of the last campaign, Hon. J. Sloat Fassett, was presented as the next speaker. The convention rose at his coming and cheered him to the echo. It became evident that New York had the sympathies of the crowd, though other cities might get the votes. As Mr. Fassett warmed up he carried his audience with him, and when he declared that an attempt had once been made to elect a Republican without New York and that the result of those misguided councils, "aided by Burchard, had been to lose the victory to the standard Republican of us all," the applause was loud and long. He did not believe the holding of the convention in New York would make Harrison carry that city, but he did believe it would make it 15,000 easier to carry New York state. While Republicans might perhaps believe they could carry the election without New York, they must remember that the Democratic party could not possibly carry the election with New York Republican.

Foraker Praises Hanna.

Senator Edmunds also spoke, but for no particular city. He urged good feeling and unanimity. Ohio was called, and ex-Governor Foraker spoke for Cincinnati. He said the people of Cincinnati would despise him if it were possible for him to utter a word of disparagement against any other city. He complimented Mr. Fassett for his eloquent defense of the Republicans of New York.

"You, Mr. Fassett," said Foraker, "are exactly the kind of Republican Ohio likes. You are a fighting Republican, full of vim and vigor, and sooner or later you will be crowned with victory." Then after a significant pause he added: "Great men have been defeated before." This was apparently the signal waited for by the packed assembly and cheer after cheer arose.

"Grand Old John Sherman."

Foraker said they had got away with the Farmers' Alliance in Ohio. When the Knickerbocker Democrats and the whiskered Parker came boasting that they were going to down "Grand Old John Sherman" they went away discomfited. This was greeted with vigorous cheering. This sally was received with much laughter and applause.

Chicago Out of It.

Chicago's turn came next and Mr. W. J. Campbell said in behalf of Chicago he simply desired to read the resolutions passed by the business men of that city stating that in grateful appreciation of Chicago having been awarded the World's fair they did not ask for the convention, but should it come to Chicago, it would be properly treated.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS.

Flower and Osborne Declared Elected in Dutchess County.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The action of the board of county canvassers in Dutchess county in adopting a tabular statement giving Flower 75 majority and Osborne, for secretary, 194 majority, has been the cause of general talk. It foreshadows an action by which Russell may be declared elected assemblyman from the First district, and all the Democratic county officers will be elected. The action of the board is severely commented upon by Republicans, while Democrats are reticent. The adoption of the table was done without debate. Mr. Vail, the leader of the Democrats, informed Mr. Williams, the leader of the Republicans, that the table would be made by a committee appointed on Friday to tabulate the vote. It had every appearance of a table arbitrarily made. The Democrats were unanimously in favor of its adoption. The power of the courts will be invoked to have the proceeding nullified.

Charges Against County Clerk Cotton.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 24.—A sensation was created in political circles by the serving upon County Clerk George J. Cotton of a notification from Governor Hill that he had been charged with malfeasance in office and that he would be accorded a hearing at Albany on Wednesday next at 2 p. m. These charges are the outcome of the recent situation, in which the board of county canvassers became involved over the returns from the First assembly district of this county. The board of canvassers is Democratic by a majority of one, and they voted a certificate of election to P. J. Ryan, the Democratic candidate, though the Republicans claim that their candidate, David J. Munro, Jr., had a plurality of 69. The court has issued an order restraining the county clerk from issuing the certificate to Ryan. The charges are sworn to by William B. Kirk, the Democratic state committeeman from this district.

Democrats May Control the Legislature.

ALBANY, Nov. 24.—With Mr. Osborne in the senate there will be sixteen Republicans and fifteen Democrats, without counting Senator Edwards (Ind. Rep.) on either side. If the latter should vote with the Democrats they would have control of the senate on organization and on points of order, as the lieutenant governor would have the deciding vote.

If the Osborne election is allowed to stand Wheeler (Rep.), for assembly, will also be deprived of his seat, giving the Democrats undoubted control of the house.

BYNUM IS OUT OF IT.

He Withdraws from the Speakership Fight and Will Help Mills.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Congressman Bynum, of Indiana, has announced his withdrawing from the speakership race. He says: "Yes, I am out of it. I have been contemplating the step for some days. I never pressed my candidacy, and consented only to the use of my name until it became evident that the contest was narrowed down between Mills and Crisp."

When asked who the Indiana delegation would now support Mr. Bynum said: "In Indiana there is no boss rule; every representative speaks and votes for himself, and you will have to see the representatives to ascertain preferences. As for myself I shall heartily support Mr. Mills. While many of the candidates are strong tariff reformers, none so prominently represents the position of the party on this question as Mr. Mills. He is known to the people as the prominent figure in the house on the question, and his defeat would in a great measure be accepted as an abandonment of the issue.

A PRETTY ROMANCE.

BERTHA RICCI, THE BEAUTIFUL PRIMA DONNA BECOMES AN HEIRESS.

She Befriends a Young Lady Taken Sick in Paris—Receives the Thanks of Her Father—For Years an Unknown Admirer Has Made Her Presents.

Bertha Ricci, the prima donna, has unexpectedly fallen heir to a fortune variously estimated at from $75,000 to $100,000.

The news of this windfall came to Miss Ricci in a letter from Lawyer Israel P. Pitman, of Wilmington, Del., and the liberal testator was the late General Frederick Dubois, of that town.

She, herself tells the following romantic story of the reasons that led General Dubois to bequeath her his fortune. The prima donna said: "While I was learning music in Paris, under Mme. La Grance, I had a fair fellow-student in a beautiful American girl, the daughter of General Dubois.

"Mme. Dubois," she went on, "did not intend going on the stage, but having a magnificent voice, her father was having it cultivated.

"This young woman," Miss Ricci added, "was taken sick under sad and peculiarly distressing circumstances, and I nursed and did all I could to alleviate her suffering.

"Circumstances over which Miss Dubois had no control," continued the singer "made it necessary for the singer to depend on the tenderness of others rather than her relatives.

"She was very grateful to me for the attendance I gave her," she said, "but she was past human assistance and died. Her body was brought to America and buried in Wilmington."

Bertha Ricci infers that it was gratitude for the kindness to his daughter that made General Dubois leave the prima donna his entire fortune.

BERTHA RICCI.

A pretty thread of romance is woven in the story. It is that through years Miss Ricci had some unknown admirer who almost nightly sent her flowers while she sang with the McCaull and Casino companies.

She was never able to learn the identity of her admirer. Often, she says, an expensive jewel nestled in the bouquets sent to her by the mysterious unknown.

Two years ago the gifts ceased with a present of a magnificent horseshoe studded with diamonds and rubies. Those presents amounted in value to many thousand dollars.

A day or so ago she got the news of her good fortune, and she now believes that I was General Dubois who invited the presents on her.

In the lawyer's letter to Miss Ricci he quotes these words from the general's will: "I leave this to Miss Ricci as a kind of recompense for services rendered to one of mine in hours of trouble."

Bertha Ricci was born in St. Louis taught school there and sang in the Cathedral. She was an ardent student of music and finally went to Vienna, where she remained sixteen months studying.

Then she was polished by La Grange, of Paris, and joined the forces of Max Strakosch, bringing prima donna contralto roles. Later she was with Mapleson and then became a member of McCaull's company starring in "Grand Duchess," "Nanon," "Queen's Lace Handkerchief," "Falka," and other light operas. She was also for a time at the Casino.

Started to Tramp Around the World.

Lillian Otwell a pretty girl of sixteen years, who had been raised by her aunt in the village of Bordentown, Accomac county, Va., disappeared from her home some time ago. Her relatives searched the country for her without finding the slightest clue to her whereabouts until her aunt who had given her up as dead, received a letter from the section master on the Philadelphia and Norfolk Railroad at Delmar, the dividing line station between Delaware and Maryland, describing the girl and stating that she was safe at his home.

For several months before her disappearance she had been afflicted with melancholia, and her aunt feared she had committed suicide. The girl, after leaving home, had cut off her long brown hair and procured a man's clothing. Attired in a flannel suit, tin-fitting pantaloons, a slouch hat, and big boots, she started out to walk to Philadelphia, best upon travelling around the world.

She had walked the railroad ties for thirty miles, and was sick and in an exhausted condition when found by the kind-hearted railroad man. He took her to be a poor, homeless boy, and sent her to his wife to get some food. His wife, upon learning the sex of the little tramp, made her change her clothing and wanted to send her home, but the girl refused to tell where she lived, and begged so hard to remain with her new-found friends that they finally consented.

In the mean time the railroad man had inquiries made along the railroad and finally located her home. The girl said she had been kindly treated by her aunt and had no cause to leave home other than that she wanted to see the world. She was returned to her aunt.

Another Billiard Match.

Billiardists Jacob Schaefer and Geo. I. Slosson have agreed upon another match at the fourteen inch balk line. This will be for $500 a side, the championship and the emblem representing the same, which is now held by Schaefer.

The game will consist of 800 points, and will be played in New York city, Slosson allowing the latter $250 for his expenses in consideration of his waiving the right to name Chicago as the place of contest. The evening of Tuesday, December 22, has been fixed to play the game, provided a suitable hall can be secured, if not the match will take place as near this time as possible.

As Slosson defeated Schaefer in their independent match, same conditions as the above, on the 26th ult., with a particularly one sided score, and to add insult to injury at the same time the best fourteen inch balk line average on record, 22, the coming battle will arouse the deepest interest in the billiard world.

A CRACK BOWLER.

John J. Mitchell, Jr., Captain of the M. A. C. Bowling Team.

John J. Mitchell, Jr., captain of the Manhattan Athletic Club's Bowling Team, is one of the most popular as well as one of the most accurate bowlers in the ranks. He is always cool, and very steady, and is a very valuable man to have to "wind up" in a close game. His first experience with a regular organized club was in 1884. At that time he was a member of the Comus Bowling Club of New York city. In 1887 he joined the Hopeful Bowling Club and made the best average score of any man on the team in the big Pomeroy tournament. The following year he joined the famous Atalanta Boat Club bowling team and rolled crimson in the game, making an average of 172 for nine games. The very night the Atalantas defeated the Manhattan A. C.'s team four of the five men who made up the former's team—W. C. Doscher, H. A. MacLean, H. B. Wesselman and Mr. Mitchell—were elected members of the M. A. C. Since then Mr. Mitchell has bowled for the Manhattans, both in the tournament and Athletic Bowling League. In the tournament of last season he averaged for nine games 161 and in the Athletic League 167 for twenty-eight games, which was fifth in the general average. He bowls what is known as an accurate and steady side ball.

CAPTAIN JOHN J. MITCHELL, JR.

American Cups in England.

It is now nearly seven years since the Genesta won the Cape May and Breton's Reef cups, and since then no sign of a challenge has appeared. The facts are that American yachtsmen took but little interest in the contest, and they were won by the Genesta in a sort of default way. There is some informal talk of a race on the other side for them the coming spring, and the question arises: Are the cups now subject to contest?

The conditions regarding them are loose, indirect and uncertain—in fact, the conditions are drawn in a very bungling way. Clause 2 of the Cape May Cup rules says: "Should any yacht succeed in holding the cup in two consecutive races during one season, it will not be again liable to challenge until the commencement of the following season. The cup will become the bonafide property of any yacht holding it successively through three consecutive contests. On event of the cup being held by a foreign yacht, the owner thereof will be liable to challenge during the season of the next year over the Cherbourg course."

Many people are of the opinion that the cups will have to be won by the same yachts three years in succession; but this is not so, for there is nothing in the terms to prevent it if the challenger sailed in one year. A long time has elapsed since the cups were won, and as no challenge was sent the following year, the Englishmen can claim that the cups have become theirs by default.

Regattas for Collegians.

Commodore T. J. D. Fuller, of Cornell W. B. Post, Captain McKee and Professor Goodwin of the University of Pennsylvania, and Messrs. Hunter and Beaumont of Cornell met at the Fifth Avenue Hotel in New York city recently, and organized an Inter-Collegiate Rowing Association W. B. Post was elected President and Commodore Fuller Secretary pro tem. A constitution and by-laws were framed and a committee appointed to select a course where the regattas are to be held. It is proposed to have a week's regatta, in which crews from all the colleges in the Association can take part and similar to the Henley week on the Thames in England. One course suggested is at Newburg, and the Committee will pay particular attention to this one. Several of the other colleges are expected to join the Association.

Mr. Post said Harvard and Yale monopolized things at New London and would like to be looked upon as the only colleges in the country. The new Association would show them that they were in error.

The Queen of St. Bernards.

Perhaps the most distinguished, at all events the most courted and universally admired passenger on the Aurania during a recent trip from Liverpool, was the phenomenal St. Bernard, Princess Florence.

To give some idea of the immensity of this animal it is sufficient to say that she weighs 200 pounds when in good condition. But her excellence does not rest here for her body is in proportion to her height which is 33 inches at the shoulder. She is a most beautiful color, being a deep rich orange, with the orthodox white markings, and for bone and substance and sweetness of expression she has not a peer. When only a year old she measured 27½ inches round the skull, 39 inches in girth of chest, 13 inches round the fore arm, 31½ inches from the ground to the top of her shoulders and weighed 182 pounds. Since then she has developed considerably in every way, though she is a few months over three years, she has not attained her highest stage of perfection.

Will Sullivan and Slavin Fight!

The closing months of the year may be made luminous by some understandings between Sullivan and Slavin. They have talked much up to this time, and that's all. Charley Johnson is likely to back John L. if he can be assured that he will train. He knows that it would be the battle of Sullivan's life, and all would depend upon his physical condition. How ever fortunate he was, he could not compete with Slavin's scientific and deadly dogfight disposition would call him nothing if his condition was indifferent. Slavin, on the contrary, would be fit as a fiddle. Johnson knows all this, and like the business man he is will want some guarantee that his money will not be lost by the time it is posted. He is sure to; wouldn't be if John L. faithfully trained for such an encounter, but if he didn't his enthusiasm would quickly fall far below zero.

The persons who are always looking after other people's business generally owe a large board bill.—Dammit (Tex.) Signal.

PRINCETON'S NEW CLUB HOUSE.

Expected to be Ready for Occupancy at the Beginning of the Year.

Princeton's athletic interests are going to have just what they have been in need of for many years, and that is a general athletic club house.

The small club house on the university field has always well supplied the need for which it was intended and will be still utilized as a sort of room for all the athletic teams and a place for storing their wearing apparel.

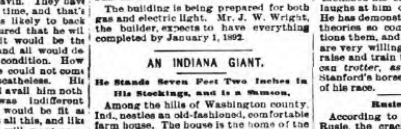
The architectural style of the new athletic club building will be colonial, and its dimensions 80x38 feet. It is to be built, both without and within, of the very best material, and at an expense of $10,000. Its exterior walls will be of brick, with brown stone trimmings; the interior of the building will be finished in oak and Georgia pine.

On the north and east sides of the structure will be a handsome porch and a spacious piazza. In the front above the long piazza will be a terra cotta panel, which will have handsomely carved upon it "University Athletic Club House."

The interior arrangements will be as follows:—In the basement will be kitchen, pantries, store rooms, a cold cellar, &c. On the first floor will be a mess room, a club room and a trophy hall. The mess room and the club room will be finished in Georgia pine, the trophy hall in quartered oak. The front door will open into the trophy hall. This room will be fitted with wainscoting seats and handsome cabinets in which will be placed the trophies of athletic battles.

The want of a place where the safe keeping of these trophies will be assured has been the cause in the past of many highly prized mementos of Princeton's hard fought battles being lost.

On the second floor will be a large committee room, two rooms for coachers who may wish to spend their nights in Princeton, rooms for the trainer and steward and toilet rooms. The trainer will make his home here. All the rooms are provided with large open fireplaces and will be heated by a hot air furnace.



PRINCETON'S NEW ATHLETIC CLUB HOUSE.

The building is being prepared for both gas and electric light. Mr. J. W. Wright, the builder, expects to have everything completed by January 1, 1892.

AN INDIANA GIANT.

He Stands Seven Feet Two Inches in His Stockings, and is a Samson.

Among the hills of Washington county, Ind., nestles an old-fashioned, comfortable farm house. The house is the home of the tallest man in the West, perhaps in the United States.

Jacob Williams, the giant, is a fine specimen of physical manhood, and a picture of perfect health, standing in his stocking feet, 7 feet 2 inches, and weighing in fighting trim 257 pounds. He was born in Posey township, Washington county, September 24, 1858; is thirty-two years old, and single. While a boy he was not abnormally tall, shooting up to his great height during the last years of his teens. In complexion he is rather fair, with auburn locks. Strangely enough, no other member of the family is extremely tall, the father measuring 6 feet 10 inches, and he is the tallest of the family, including two daughters, one of whom is some paler but long ago parted as a giantess, and to the great lady's annoyance. Jacob Williams, in addition to being quite good looking, is also good-natured, a lucky thing, for if he were ill-tempered he could make it decidedly lively in his bailiwick.

Wisely enough, no one desires to tackle a man who sleeps in an 8-foot 6 inches bed, and has to stoop to get through the door into the house.

He has had offers to travel with Barnum, both without and within, of the very best material, and at an expense of $10,000. Its exterior walls will be of brick, with brown stone trimmings; the interior of the building will be finished in oak and Georgia pine.

Why Anson and Pfeffer Fell out.

The true story of the disagreeable encounter between Anson and Pfeffer over the Brotherhood in the Cleveland Hotel is as follows:—O'Connor, the noted contest jumper and catcher, was booked to play in the game with Cleveland that day. Pfeffer observed the announcement in the paper at the table that morning, and turning to Anson, entered an objection against playing on the same field with the man because he was a dishonorable fellow. "Your League is supposed to be a high-toned organization," said Pfeffer to the captain, "and if it is such why doesn't it expel or blacklist such men as this? He is not desirable," Anson replied that the League certainly would like to expel O'Connor and all other contract breakers, but that it was the force of public opinion that restrained it. To this Pfeffer made answer that that was no answer, and again demanded the reason why. His persistence and insistence nettled the captain, who effectually ended the controversy by saying that the league could not think of expelling O'Connor and others of his like for the same causes that withheld it from expelling and pursuing the leaders of the brotherhood. This remark struck Pfeffer evidently as an attempt to put him in the O'Connor category, and he arose from the table without further comment and walked away, leaving his breakfast untouched.

Senator Stanford's Ideas.

Senator Leland Stanford, with his Palo Alto bred animals, has been a revelation to the breeders of trotting horses. There was a very strong disposition to make light of him and his ideas as to thoroughbred blood in the trotter when he first established his breeding farm, but nobody laughs at him or Palo Alto trotters now. He has demonstrated the wisdom of his theories so completely that no one questions them, and other breeders of trotters are very willing to learn from him how to raise and train their horses. The American trotter, as exemplified by Senator Stanford's horses, is the very perfection of his race.

Rusie Offered $6,000.

According to a letter written by Amos Rusie, the crack pitcher of the New York League Base Ball Club, he has been offered $6,000 for next year by the Chicago Club of the American Association. Having no inclination to jump without giving due notice, he informed President Day of the New York Club of the fact, and told him that he would remain in New York City during the season of 1892 if the management of the club would give him $5,000, which is $200 less than his Chicago offer.

Encouragement.

She posed before the camera,
In all her calliope grace.
Each curl was at its curliest,
Each frill was in its place.
She feasted on delight
A miracle of ease.
Said the fiend behind the camera,
"Now, look intelligent, please."

The Song of the Horse.

Hurrah for electricity, that saves my tired feet
And whenever I feel fleet lubricity, the caraboing of the street!
What wonderful complicity of fate and human brain
Have brought me this felicity of rest from toil and pain?
Ere long that grim monstrosity, the horse car, but in song
Will live, nor animosity provoke in waiting throng;
No more will domesticity be marred by meals delayed,
For with swift electricity there'll be no car blockaded.
Then whoop for electricity, the era's drawing nigh
That equine infelicity may heave a cosmic sigh—
That man's uncurbed ferocity Electra's flash may goad,
And she, in reciprocity, will rank him o'er the road!
With all my lung's capacity, I'd neigh my joy equine,
For verbal perplexity is hardly in my line.
Then give the news publicity, the marvel's come to pass;
Whoop-la for electricity, the horse may go to grass.

Postmaster Pope and Councilman Smith.

After the city election of 1889, it was supposed the Council stood seven Republic us to four Democrats. Messrs. Leonard, Dunham and Coward were candidates for the office of City Clerk. Postmaster Pope asked the Republicans to vote for his friend, Mr. Coward, remarking that he was not interested as to who of the seven Republicans was made president.

The Sunday evening before the new Council met, Councilman Smith met Mr. Pope as the latter was leaving his home, and said "Well, we've fixed the slate. Coward for Clerk, Moffett, for President. How do you like it?"

Mr. Pope was astonished, and said, "Well, if you have fixed it, my opinion will not change it. I supposed you had agreed upon Mr. Newhall, when all were together, and don't see with such a Republican majority the necessity of taking a Democrat."

But the wily Smith wanted some plausible reason to give for this bit of treachery, and said we changed things afterward, as Mr. Newhall wished to select committees (as all previous presidents had been permitted to do), and we wanted to do that ourselves. Ourselves meant the four Democrats and another then supposed Republican whom Smith got to go into the deal with him, which act of treachery deprived a majority of the voters of the representation they had overwhelmingly declared for at the polls.

Smith, with his usual cunning, distorts the meeting on the street between him and Mr. Pope, to make it appear that he made the treacherous deal at Mr. Pope's request, as if that would be any justification for his conduct.

Mr. Pope has been an honored citizen of Plainfield for a quarter of a century, Smith but a few years. They both have records. On their records whose word would you take, Mr. Pope, whom everybody who knows him trusts, or Smith, whom judgment creditors showed in New York, to the evident satisfaction of the court to be utterly untrustworthy, and granted their petition in supplementary proceedings for a receiver of his business.

FIRST WARD "EXTRAS."

LIST OF EXTRA NAMES REGISTERED YESTERDAY.

A Rather Significant Increase.—One of the Number Disappears After a Warrant is Issued for His Arrest. The Doubtful Extras to be Closely Watched for Future Prosecution, After they Vote.

At the State election held three weeks ago, at which every honest vote in the ward it was supposed was got out so far as possible, the total number of votes registered was 599. Yesterday for the city election next week the number registered was 672.

For a week past it has been known that an attempt was being made to colonize the ward in the interest of Hetfield, and much of the increase is considered to be due to this. One warrant was issued yesterday, as we reported for the arrest of Fred. S. Moore, bartender, one of the "extras," claimed to be illegally registered, not being a resident, but he managed to escape to New York. Constable Moffett was watching for him to return last night, and his arrest was to follow upon his return.

Special arrangements were being made to-day for the arrest of any others among the "extras" registered, whom an investigation shall prove are not bona fide residents of the ward, which means something more than visiting the ward twenty-four hours before registration day, it being the intention to prosecute to the full extent of the law not only those imported for fraudulent voting, but also those assisting and abetting them.

In the interest of pure elections honest men of both parties should unite in a determined effort to see that all those guilty of fraudulent voting are punished, just as the fraudulent voters of Jersey City have been finally punished with heavy fines and two and three year terms in the State Prison. Here is the list of the "extras," but few of which are considered residents in the legal acceptance of the term, which as stated does not mean a twenty-four-hour visit to the ward just before registration day, for the purpose of voting, as the victims of the combine schemers will learn to their sorrow when it is too late to get out of the scrape.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mr Erickson Declares Smith a Falsifier

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Reference to me in a communication, appearing in yesterday's issue of the Press over name of Seymour G. Smith, President Council, 1891, is absolutely false.

If what refers to me is a criticism for judgment of the rest. Should say "false in one thing false in all."

Foot Ball To-morrow.

An interesting game of foot-ball is looked for when the two teams advertised, meet on the Crescent field Thanksgiving Day.

One worthy and new feature of the game is that only the feet can be used in play. That means no "slugging" or "roughing" with the hands. It's a good rule—but may prove of the pie crust order.

—Frederick S. Moore, the young man, who, it is alleged, registered illegally in the First Ward yesterday, has not as yet been arrested although a warrant has been issued for his arrest.

—Langhorne's Gallery will be open until one o'clock Thanksgiving Day. ,

Give Thanks Every Day.

While presidential proclamations fix Thanksgiving day as an annual festival for us, it does not only, the last Thursday in November, but on every day in the year, or as frequently as the heart attuned to gratitude and a sensitive conscience will dictate it.

MR. LINDABURY'S SHOT.

IT GOES TRUE TO THE MARK, AND IS UNANSWERABLE.

How the Combine Wish to Pay $6,200 Per Year in Fraud of the Rights of the Inhabitants of Plainfield.

Read the comment of the leading Democratic lawyer of Union County on the Combine's action in giving to Low the Water and Sewerage franchise. We take it from the records of the supreme court. Mr. Lindabury assigns seven reasons why the Combine's action is illegal. The fourth and seventh are herewith given. The last of all as will be seen sums up the case in a nutshell:

* * * *

"FOURTH:—That said ordinance and resolution attempt to bind the said Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield to contract to pay the sum of six thousand two hundred dollars per year or some part thereof to a corporation to the formation of which consent is hereby given, to flush sewers which the city does not own and does not propose to acquire, and which if built as contemplated will be private property.

* * * *

"SEVENTH:—Because the said ordinance and resolution were passed by the said Common Council of the City of Plainfield not in the fair exercise of the discretion vested in them by the City Charter, but in fraud of the rights of the said inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, and in total disregard of the duty imposed upon the said Common Council by law.

(signed) "H. V. LINDABURY, Attorney of Prosecutor."

MR. MARSH'S LETTER.

Shows the Combine Wrong Again as Usual.

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—In my formal report of Nov. 3d, inst., there occurs the following sentence respecting the case pending in the Supreme Court to review the street railway ordinance, namely: "The taking of testimony has been begun and has been temporarily suspended in view of a proposition of settlement under the consideration of a committee of the Common Council." The City Clerk informs me that the Common Council desire explanation of the sentence quoted. The facts upon which my report was based are the following:

Thirty pages of testimony were taken in the case on the 21st day of October last. At the conclusion of that day's work I reported to Mr Walter L. Hetfield that the city's principal witness on the principal witness made it appear that his testimony was based almost exclusively upon hearsay, and accordingly that it would be necessary for the prosecutor to procure certified copies of deeds, leases, records of sales, etc., all of which would involve much labor and great expense; that if the prosecutor should succeed in large part in the expense incurred would be taxable in the costs against the city; that upon further cross-examination by the counsel for the Company developed that the prosecution would be dropped and the suit discontinued if the routes of the railroad in question, as laid down on the map through Park avenue; that the attorney of the prosecutor, the prosecutor himself, and the attorney of the street railway company, all stated before the Supreme Court commission that as such a change of route would settle the difficulty below all the settlement would unquestionably be brought about. The prosecutor declared that his proposition was still open.

On making this report to Mr. Hetfield, who I understood represented the Committee of the Common Council having charge of the matter, I inquired of him whether it would be to his wishes, having regard to the position of expense to the city, to defer the further taking of testimony until it should definitely appear if the case would be settled. Mr. Hetfield agreed with me that it would be wise to wait, especially in view of the fact that he was expecting soon to have a conference with Mr. Nevius and Mr. Riker, his attorney, and members of the committee of the Council, and he thought it probable that the settlement suggested or some other settlement would then be reached. On Mr. Hetfield's approving of my suggestions, I notified opposing counsel (if my conclusion and requested him to agree that the argument of the cause should not be delayed by reason of our waiting for the conferences referred to by Mr. Hetfield. He so agreed.

Such are the facts upon which my report was based. Respectfully submitted,

CHAS. A. MARSH,
Corporation Counsel.

CATHOLIC LEGION MEETS

THE STATE LEAGUE'S SESSION HELD AT PATERSON YESTERDAY.

President Gallacher's Address to the Delegates.—Urging Unity of Action and Observance of Church Laws.—Tribute to Newark's Dead Freeholders.—Some Interesting Statistics.

The State Convention of the Catholic Benevolent Legion was held yesterday at Institute Hall in Paterson, delegates from fifty out of the sixty-seven councils in the State being in the attendance. An address by State President Thomas Gallacher of Newark was the main feature of the forenoon session. After referring to the progress of the Legion during the past year, he said:

"At our last convention the State President called the attention of the delegates to the fact that a number of councils were continually violating the law of the church by holding picnics, excursions, balls and other entertainments at which intoxicating drinks were sold. My attention has been called to the fact that many of the councils' reports are unfinished when the Deputy makes his semi-annual visit. This not only necessitates another visit of the Deputy, but delays the State Secretary in making his report to the Supreme Council. It has been suggested that the law be altered in reference the collection of the per capita tax. If the secretaries of councils were required, at the last meeting of each term, to immediately forward to the State Secretary the amount due, the reports to the Supreme Council could be made more promptly.

"During the past year death has claimed sixty-four of our members in this State. Among those deaths none were more sad than the loss of two loyal soldiers in the cause in the persons of Peter M. Mullen and Francis McGinnis, of Newark. They were in the prime of manhood, and honored by the people, beloved in the domestic circle and cherished in the hearts of countless thousands. The death of our late comrades caused great sorrow to fall upon the community in which they lived. In the work during the past year they were active, zealous members of our organization, and their untimely death creates a void hard to fill.

"The question is often asked, 'How can we increase our membership?' This query is as old as our parent organization. In answer it might be suggested that non-meetings be frequently held, at which well-informed comrades would explain the merits, methods and blessings of the Legion. To have each member as often as possible speak to his Catholic friends and show the advantages of joining a local council; to enlist the co-operation of the clergy in our behalf by proving to them that it is of mutual benefit to pastor and layman that all should be enrolled under our banner."

It was reported that five councils have been instituted in New Jersey since the last State Convention and the membership has increased to 4,300. The total number of councils in the United States is 365, with a membership of 28,000.

The Supreme President, John C. McGuire and Supreme Medical Examiner, Dr. Kuhn, on reaching Paterson were escorted to the hall by a committee.

At the afternoon session a long debate took place over the question as to what action should be taken regarding the charges against St. Antonius's Council, of Newark, of having sold beer at a picnic last Summer. Some of the members were in favor of extreme measures, but the will of the conservative ones prevailed and a committee was appointed to take action accordingly. It is believed that an apology to the Bishop for violating the rules of the Church and the laws of the Legion will serve to compensate for the offense.

The election of State officers resulted follows: Spiritual Adviser, Right Rev. Bishop O'Farrell, of Trenton; President, Thomas Gallacher, Council 61, of Newark; Vice-President, James H. Fallon, Council 26, of Trenton; Secretary, John J. Grogan, Council 57, of Newark; Treasurer, John J. Matthews, Council 62, of Newark; Orator, James J. Mullen, Council 23, of Newark; Guard, M. Blewitt, Council 38, of Newark; Finance Committee, P. Hoey, James McAvoy and John F. Lee; Trustees, Jacob Mayer, John Hughes, James Dunn, M. J. Brudes and F. A. Bluber.

The Council concluded its session at 8 o'clock and adjourned to Turn Hall, where a banquet was given by the local councils in honor of the visitors.

—Let us be thankful that we won't have the combine next year.

—There will be a meeting in the W. C. T. U. rooms Thanksgiving Day at half-past three.

HON. JOHN ULRICH, PRESIDENT. J. HERVEY DOANE, SECRETARY.

City Republican Association—Smith's Statements Denounced by Mr. Erickson as Utter Falsehoods.

The Republican Association met at Republican Headquarters last evening and organized by unanimously electing ex-City Judge John Ulrich president, and J. Hervey Doane secretary.

Mr. Erickson, one of the candidates for Councilman-at-Large, was given the privilege of the floor to denounce as utterly false statements published in the Press of last night over the the signature of one Seymour G. Smith, who adds to his name the statement that he is president of Common Council, lest people should be permitted to forget that deplorable fact or the manner in which he secured that hitherto high and honorable office.

Mr. Smith stated that Mr. Erickson was a large stockholder in the Plainfield Water Supply Co., and would thereby be likely to be influenced in his action if elected to Council in matters in which the interests of the city and those of the company would be opposed.

Mr. Erickson said he did not now own, never has owned, and never expects to own a dollar's worth of the company's stock, thus showing Smith's statement to be out of the whole cloth, which we do not think will surprise anyone who knows him.

A THANKSGIVING INCIDENT.

Right up to the market stall strode he,
And bought a bird that was ten pounds three.
Then quickly home to his wife he sped,
And told her all that the man had said
Of how to pick and stuff and cook.
And so with loving hand she took
That tough old bird that was hard and gray,
And into the oven she stowed him away.

And then—for their married life was young—
With joyous hearts they sat and sung
Each to around the clock hands spun,
She said with a smile that the bird was done.
And he laughed aloud, and his joy was great,
For his stomach told that the hour was late,
And he kissed his wife and he cried in glee
At the fine old bird that was ten pounds three,
And said, "I will cut him now in two."
And took his knife that was bright and new
And hacked away for an hour or so,
But his blade got dull and his movements slow;

And then, with prayer and a moment's rest,
He took off his coat and then his vest,
And hacked away till twilight came,
His arms were sore and his back was lame.
And the hours wore on and the weeks sped by,
But still, with a sunken cheek and eye,
He worked away, and his wife sat there,
With patient face, in the same old chair,
Until one day, as his knife blade broke,
And his wife uttered a frenzied shriek, she spoke,
And said, with a smile that was half a sneer,
"I should think you would learn to carve, my dear."

Cannot Be Permanently Fooled.

The New York Times draws its own lessons and its own consolations from the late elections. One of these is that it thinks it sees signs in the western states that what Post Tennyson calls "the common sense of most" is uppermost after all. The Times remarks:

It shows that politicians who give way to delusions instead of adhering firmly to sound principles make a serious mistake. They assume that the people are incapable of understanding sound principles, whereas if they are boldly discussed and made clear they are pretty sure to bring conviction to the majority. A delusion may spring up and carry the people away in some restricted area for a limited time, but its sway cannot last or become general in a country where intelligence and education prevail as they do in the United States. As Lincoln remarked, "You may fool all the people some of the time, or some of the people all the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time." In fact, you cannot fool the great number for any length of time, and they will not fool themselves very long at a time. There is too much sound sense among them to make delusion a permanent working force in politics.

The Russian loan failed to be taken in France, after all the French protestations of regard for the czar. What was the reason? Public rumor at once attributed it to the Rothschilds, in revenge for persecutions of the Jews in Russia. But those sphinxlike operators who pull the wires of the Punch and Judy shows that go on upon the thrones of Europe gave no sign. Then the Russian minister at Paris asked the French government to bring to bear its influence on the Rothschilds and induce them to cease their opposition to the Russian loan, for the czar's country was in extremities. The great money baron was visited with the message. It was not the Rothschild opposition that made the Russian loan fail to go, he answered politely. It was the bad crops in Russia, the great risks and the small profits offered by the loan that made it fail. He said nothing more, but who knows?

An English author says that the fatal defect in the American international copyright law is that it requires all foreign books to be reprinted in America before they can be copyrighted. The publisher is thus put to double expense, and the public must necessarily pay more for their books. He declares the law was made in this shape to give work to the 10,000 printers who would thus be enabled to find employment. For the sake of helping the 10,000, 80,000,000 people must thus pay a higher price for international literature.

The New York Herald says that Joan of Arc can never be made a success as a stage character. "She never sins or loves. She prays and dreams."

The police of Philadelphia evidently need a few lessons in political economy. They recently broke up a single tax society meeting because they said it was in favor of anarchy. Single tax and anarchy are one and the same to the police intellect in Philadelphia.

CITIES TO FIGHT AGAIN.

The National Democratic Convention Is the Prize.

THE NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.

It Seems to Be Conceded at Albany That the Democracy Has Control of Both the Senate and Assembly—Arguing the Famous Bulkeley-Morris Case.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Much interest is felt in the approaching meeting of the executive committee of the National Democratic committee, which is called to convene in Washington Dec. 8. This committee will issue a call for a meeting of the National Democratic committee in this city, and it is thought that the date fixed will be Jan. 8, 1892—the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans. Already interest centers in where the Democratic convention will be held.

The Cities in the Race.

The following cities are already in the field and have, through soliciting support of members of the committee, formally announced themselves: Washington, New York, Detroit, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Chicago and Minneapolis.

It is understood here that Detroit and New York intend to put forward the most strenuous exertions to secure the convention.

The Republicans Adjourn.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—The National Republican committee adjourned sine die at 6:30 o'clock last evening. The committee met in the morning and listened to the executive, with power to act, the preparation of all matters connected with the Minneapolis convention. It was announced that the executive committee would assume personal charge of this work. The call for the national convention of next year was submitted by the subcommittee in charge of its preparation and approved, as follows:

The Call.

To the Republican Electors of the United States:

In accordance with usage and the instructions of the Republican National convention of 1888 a convention of delegates, representatives of the Republican party, will be held in Minneapolis on Tuesday, June 7, 1892, at 12 o'clock n on, for the purpose of nominating candidates for president and vice president to be supported at the next national election, and for the transaction of such other business as may be brought before it. The Republican electors in the several states and territories and voters without regard to past political affiliations, who believe in Republican principles and indorse the Republican policy are cordially invited to unite under this call in the formation of a national ticket. Each state will be entitled to four delegates at large and for each representative in congress at large two delegates, and each congressional district, each territory and the District of Columbia to two delegates. The delegates at large shall be chosen by popular state convention called not less than twenty days published notice and not less than thirty days before the meeting of the national convention.

The congressional district delegates shall be chosen at conventions called by the congressional committee of each such district in the same manner as the nomination for a representative in congress is made in said district, provided that in any district or territory where there is no Republican congressional committee owing to redistricting the state under the last congressional apportionment, the Republican state committee shall appoint from the district in the same manner as the nomination of a delegate in congress is made. An alternate delegate for each delegate in the national convention, to act in case of the absence of the delegate, shall also be elected. All notices of contests must be filed with the national committee within thirty days after printed statements of the grounds of contest, which shall be made public.

JAMES S. CLARKSON, Chairman.
JACOB SLOAT FASSETT, Secretary.

The Negro Voter in the South.

Representatives of the National League of Republican Clubs, which held a meeting in this city last night, were present by invitation. The meeting was devoted to an interchange of views on the situation in different states. Ex-Governor Pinchback, of Louisiana, one of the colored members of the committee, said that the oppression of the negroes in the south was largely due to the bearing of the white Republicans there, who kept their party men to the white faction, thus leaving an active part in politics and from asserting their right of suffrage. Mr. Pinchback advocated fostering of a more independent spirit on the part of the southern negro voters, and he claimed that the assertion of independence in casting their ballots would give southern states to the Republicans.

A meeting of the executive committee will be called in two or three weeks by Chairman Clarkson to begin preliminary work in regard to the convention. The committee elected Channing F. Meeks, of Colorado, sergeant-at-arms of the national convention.

The Bulkeley-Morris Case.

HARTFORD, Nov. 25.—The arguments in the case of Morris vs. Bulkeley were continued in the supreme court of errors. The argument for the Republican side was submitted by William C. Case. He said the people were principally interested in finding out if there was any power in the state to settle disputed elections. Judge Case was not so much concerned as to who was the governor as to the principle involved. This power, he said, had been vested in the assembly by the framers of the constitution. He argued that if the certificate of a presiding officer at the counting of the returns was final it might disfranchise half of the voters of the district. He denied that the moderator is the autocrat of Connecticut elections. He ridiculed the claims of the other side to the election. Votes were not so much concerned as to who was the governor as to the principle involved. This power, he said, had been vested in the assembly by the framers of the constitution. He argued that if the certificate of a presiding officer at the counting of the returns was final it might disfranchise half of the voters of the district. He denied that the moderator is the autocrat of Connecticut elections. He ridiculed the claims of the other side to the election by the general assembly was necessary.

Argument of Judge Morris' Attorney.

He was followed by ex-Governor Ingersoll for Judge Morris. He dwelt upon the importance of the question involved, and insisted upon the claim of the Democrats that the election is consummated in the declaration of the returns. He was followed by Hon. H. C. Robinson, who closed for the Republican side. He answered the main points of the Democratic argument, and held that it was competent for the legislature to go behind the returns. It was agreed to submit supplemental briefs, and the court then adjourned sine die.

Democrats in Control at Albany.

ALBANY, Nov. 25.—Upon the question of organization of the legislature it is conceded here that the election of Osborne being ascertained, there will certainly be fifteen Democratic senators, and if the state board of canvassers decide, in accordance with the attorney general's opinion, that Sherwood, of the Twenty-seventh district, is ineligible and seat his Democratic opponent, the next senate will stand: Democrats, 16; Republicans, 15; Independent (Edwards), 1. Even though Edwards should vote steadily with the Republicans, the Democrats would still have control, as Lieutenant Governor Jones can would give the casting vote. The seating of Sherwood would give the Republicans 16 and the Democrats 15, with Edwards as an unknown quantity.

In the assembly the seating of Ryan and Beakes gave the Democrats 65 members and the Republicans 62. The death of Assemblyman Murphy will reduce the Democratic vote in the assembly to 65, which will give them a majority of three and secure the organization.

The Republican Clubs.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—The subexecutive committee of the National Republican league appointed to decide upon a place and date for the next convention of the league decided to refer the matter to a special committee consisting of General Clarkson, of Iowa; Mr. Allen, of Michigan; W. M. Tracy, of Illinois; E. C. Little, of Kansas, and W. E. Bigg, of Kentucky, and thus give every city that wants the convention an opportunity to present its claims.

What Mr. Platt Says.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—"The Democrats haven't got the legislature," said ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt last night. "They haven't got it, I tell you, but it is their scheme now to claim everything. They are playing a game of bluff." At the same time Mr. Platt was very careful not to claim the legislature for the Republicans.

St. Paul After the Persimmons.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 25.—St. Paul will make a formal and formidable bid for the Democratic national convention and confidently expects to get it. This city will in three days raised a guarantee fund of $50,000, exclusive of a fund of $15,000 nucleus for the erection of a gigantic wigwam for the purpose.

Alger Is for Blaine.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—General Russell A. Alger, of Michigan, who was at the Fifth Avenue hotel yesterday, said that he was for Blaine as the next Republican candidate for president. He thinks that Michigan will not present the name of her favorite son in the national convention of 1892.

Minneapolis Wants the Earth.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 25.—A joint meeting of the Democratic city and county committees has been called for next Friday evening to take action toward securing the meeting of the Democratic national convention in this city next year.

Milwaukee to Make a Bid.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 25.—This city will put in a bid for the Democratic national convention next year. This action was decided upon last night at an informal meeting of prominent Democrats.

M'MILLIN TO STEP DOWN.

A Report That He, Too, Will Desire the Speakership Fight.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Byron retired from the speakership fight. McMillin will be the next to go out. He may not go out till after the balloting has begun, but when he does it will be to declare for Mr. Mills and as far as possible throw his influence and the votes of his followers to the latter's support. It is said that Michigan will not present the name of her favorite son in the national convention of 1892.

GRAVES BEFORE A JURY.

The Alleged Poisoner of Mrs. Barnaby on Trial.

PROBING A MURDER MYSTERY.

The Doctor's Attempt to Have the Case Postponed Proves a Dismal Failure. Strange Story of the Deadly Whisky That the Woman Drank at Denver.

DENVER, Nov. 25.—The trial of Dr. Graves, who is charged with having poisoned the late Mrs. Barnaby, commenced today. Through his attorneys the Providence physician filed a long petition, requesting a continuance for three months, upon the grounds of not having received a list of all the witnessed subpœnaed by the prosecution. Had the request been granted the term of District Attorney Stevens would have expired, and a new man would have been entered. Judge Rising in his decision said:

Judge Rising's Decision.

"In the matter of the motion for a continuance in the case of the People against Graves the first question presented is one of law. Did the defendant's attorneys at the time this case was set for trial have a right to assume that the state would produce no witnesses upon the trial except such as had been indorsed upon indictment?

"They had no right to assume that no other witnesses would be produced at the trial than those whose names were indorsed upon the indictment. I must come to the conclusion that upon the question of law and upon the question of fact the grounds of the motion are not well taken, and the motion must be denied."

Dr. Graves Looked Worried.

Dr. Graves' worried face blanched at these words. He looked appealingly to his attorneys. There was no hope in them, and the doctor realized that his trial must go on. Judge Furman arose and had an exception to the decision noted.

The jury is being selected today. The trial promises to be one of great interest. Public sentiment is against Graves, and the prosecution say they have convicting evidence. The defense is weak.

The Poisoning of Mrs. Barnaby.

The murder with which Dr. Graves is charged occurred in April last, but the history of the case dates much further back. Dr. Graves was Mrs. Barnaby's physician and general adviser for many years. He looked after her property and her money affairs. Mrs. Barnaby, who was the widow of J. R. Barnaby, the millionaire merchant of Providence, had been cut off with the allowance of $2,500 a year, but had in her own right a fortune of $100,000. Her relatives had alarmed themselves about this unexpected action of McMillan alarmed them still more.

While they were holding this council of war another messenger arrived at the Metropolitan hotel. He came from the New England. He told them it had been decided that the New England delegation would vote solidly for Blaine. This was anything but reassuring for the Cri-p faction. It was evident that something had to be done. After a somewhat lengthy conference it was decided to, if possible, effect an alliance offensive and defensive with Representative Springer.

The Illinois gentleman was approached and readily agreed to the proposition. The understanding is that if after the second or third ballot either candidate shows such strength as to clearly demonstrate one can win and the other cannot there will be a combination made.

BLAINE AND HARRISON AGREE.

Both Will Not Be Candidates for President in 1892.

PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., Nov. 25.—Blaine and Harrison will not oppose each other, says Judge John C. Scott, brother-in-law to President Harrison, who returned from a visit to the White House. Judge Scott dined with Blaine, and says the country looks well, but has lost much of his brightness and enthusiasm.

President Harr son refuses to talk on the subject of renomination, but Scott says the thing is certain—Harrison and Blaine will not both go before the convention. There is an understanding between them to that effect. They are in perfect accord and will pull together.

No More Chicago High Buildings.

CHICAGO, Nov. 25.—The big building mania in Chicago has been given its quietus. Building Commissioner O'Neill has refused to grant the application of the Hartford Deposit company for a permit to erect a fifteen-story building. Mr. O'Neil said that his refusal was due to instructions contained in Alderman Kent's order, passed by the council.

Hallinger Must Hang.

TRENTON, Nov. 25.—The United States supreme court has dismissed the appeal of Edward W. Hallinger, a negro now in the Hudson County penitentiary under sentence of death for murdering his mistress, Bridget Sullivan. Judge Lamar says the decision affects Hallinger's case, and he said, "As I understand it, he will now have to hang."

Selling Emma Abbott's Effects.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The sale of the costumes, jewelry and household effects of the late Emma Abbott, the famous prima donna, took place today. The sale was thronged with society ladies, actresses and bric-a-brac hunters. The receipts yesterday amounted to over $4,000.

Dying of Starvation.

PATERSON, Nov. 25.—Dennis Quigley, aged thirty-three, of Scranton, Pa., is dying in the almshouse here of starvation. He is suffering from an attack of paralysis of the muscles of the stomach, and for three months has not been able to retain any food.

Ryland versus Pinkerman.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 25.—The hearing in the case of John Ryland who brings action against Captain J. S. Pinkerman to compel the latter to show cause why he usurps the functions of the chief of police, has been continued to a later date.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

President Phelps Says There Will Be No Baseball League Here.

LOUISVILLE, Nov. 25.—President Zach Phelps has returned from Chicago, and in an interview gave it as his opinion that there will be no clubs in the league association next season. The single club required would be placed in either Brooklyn or New York. There was no chance, he said, for peace or a great twelve club league despite the league's reports.

Free From Beats Bell Bird's Record.

STOCKTON, Cal., Nov. 25.—The yearling filly Free Freu broke the world's record by trotting a mile easy in 2:26, beating Bell Bird's time a quarter of a second. Free Fren finished the last quarter in 38 seconds. She was driven by Millard Sanders, and is by Sidney. Fausta, a yearling filly by Sidney, paced a mile in 2:34½, beating her world's record of 2:35¼, made on Saturday. She finished the last quarter in 35 seconds.

A STORY OF A WARD.

How He Passed One Thanksgiving in London.

[Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]

E HAD been but a few days in London and were living at Mayfair. Our cousin, Artemus Ward, occupied apartments in Piccadilly, and though in the height of his success he was in low spirits, ill, and breaking down painfully fast. We had dined with him that day, and as we bade him good night he said, with something of a sigh, "Tomorrow will be Thanksgiving day at home." "Yes," I replied; "some dine with us and celebrate the day." With a hungry twinkle in his eyes he asked, "Is it to be pork and beans?"

And so it came about. I had ordered from the housekeeper of our lodgings an American dinner. I was not permitted to superintend the cooking personally, and, denied the mysteries of the spits and pans of an English kitchen, I trusted to the luck of my instructions and the comprehension of the cook and awaited developments.

At the appointed time Arty came, pale and anxious looking, and wearily threw himself on the sofa with the restful content of anticipation. It had occurred to me, as we were to make a day of it, to provide a little luncheon, and as I was passing a pastry shop sign, "Makers of tops and bottoms to her majesty the queen, her royal highness Princess of Wales," etc., I noticed on a card in the window, "Sandwiches made to order." Nice for a Yankee lunch, I thought, and so I ordered a "plate" sent to our apartments. Soon after Arty came, in order to refresh him I rang for the maid to bring the "sandwiches," also a bottle of sherry and bitters. The sherry in London is good, but the sandwiches I quite taken interlarded with a sticky jelly of a sick-sweetish oriental flavor. I had thought sandwiches, ham or otherwise, were the same everywhere. So much for my beginning in London. With a look "more of sorrow than anger," as he politely nibbled sideways at the "sandwich," Arty remarked, "It's nawsty, you know," yet he solaced himself with the sherry, and we talked of our home beyond the great sea.

I was so happy by the surprise I had prepared for him that I rested content until dinner was announced. When we were seated at the table Arty, as the privileged guest, lifted the American flag, a treasure I always carried with me in foreign lands, and with which I had draped the table, and with a wish of good will for our dear ones on the "other side," we began the feast. At first all went promising. The soup was passable; the fish, a sole I think, was served with shrimp sauce; the potatoes, cauliflower and boiled onions were good. Then appeared the mysterious covered dish, at which Arty glanced askance. I proceeded to uncover it. "Hold on a moment, Harriet," he said, "it's beans—this is solemn and to be drunk standing—hereby I toast our 'American Republic,' long may she wave!" As a response to the toast, with a flourish I removed the cover of the aforesaid dish and—what! pork and beans! Yes, but the pork was floating round and round in the dish, complacent in about a quart of hot grease as a few lonely beans manfully struggled to hide under it! Forlorn hopes of my anticipations boiled down in fat! I dared not look at Arty. It was a serious moment; words were inadequate, and as silence prevailed poor Arty hugged the decanter which stood beside his plate. Yet I did not utterly despair.

The national dish was summarily removed and I uncovered the tomatoes (Arty's favorite). Lo and behold! to my discomfiture the red beauties, instead of being stewed and thickened with bread crumbs, had been boiled with skins on whole, like potatoes, and there they were, slumped down in quivering heaps, half drowned in water. I was homesick. There were no remarks, yet a threatening hush ensued—I was thinking of the pumpkin pie and the possibilities of its failure. Soon it appeared, flanked by the regulation crackers and cheese. To my dismay I noticed it had an upper crust, and, thinking the maid had stupidly made a mistake, I said to her, "Bring the American pie." "There it is, marm," she answered, with a look of dignity. I had not the courage to look at Arty as in my desperation I stabbed the crust and sawed through the pie. In curiosity I lifted a bit of the crust, and to be sure there was the pumpkin, cut in slices, sugared and cinnamoned, blanketed and steam smothered between two crusts! What an ending of my Thanksgiving dinner! Chagrined and disconsolate, I turned my face to the window and mused on the ugly London fog. Arty walked up and down the room waving the American flag as he screamed: "Hurrah for the parvel from Aberdeen doodle! I wish my dear old Yankee mother could have seen this Thanksgiving dinner;" then, seriously to me, "Harriet, you might have been born smart, but you've lost it." To this my husband answered not a word.

We were compelled to go "outside" and take an English dinner that day. As we were leaving the room poor Arty reversed my flag, and, bowing down, he laid it above the dish of beans still standing on the "well" table. With this sign of distress sealed our American dinner that day.

"We will go to the Princess theater tonight," said Arty; "a black and tan darky barber from Philadelphia will play Othello; I will be funny and I'll write it up for Punch." On our way to the theater, as we drove through the Haymarket, Arty, in a spirit of fun, would occasionally take off his hat bowing to the people, a la the "conquering hero." It is well enough to add that it was night and we were unobserved. As we left the carriage, near the door of the theater, an "imported organ grinder" —so Arty expressed it—with a vicious looking monkey, was grinding out "Home, Sweet Home." At the sound of this plaintive tune, that is the same every-where, there were signs of tears in Arty's eyes, and I noticed the gleam of a gold piece as he put his hand in the organ grinder's hat. Alas! it was our farewell Thanksgiving! Our beloved cousin, the genial, kind hearted "Arty," died a few months afterward.

All the surface railroad companies of Brooklyn have united in an application to the state railroad commission to change their motive power from horses to the overhead electric motive system.

Water runs abundantly in Brooklyn mains, but economy in its use is earnestly recommended. Two more bodies have been dug out of the debris near the broken conduit.

The steamer Bellaura, from Santos, Brazil, reports that yellow fever was raging at that port and carrying off a great many saniors.

Turkeys are dearer this Thanksgiving than usual, and poultrymen claim they are also scarce, but the markets are well stocked with good sized birds.

SEARVANT TELLS HIS STORY.

He Defames Mrs. Chapman's Good Name and Causes a Sensation.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 25.—The most uncanny of family skeletons has been uncloseted by the shooting of Mrs. Cora Chapman, wife of Geoffrey Hawley Chapman, erstwhile Geoffrey Hawley, the actor, by her husband's nurse, Herbert Searvant. Mrs. Chapman, until she came of age, was the ward of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. Her husband is the acknowledged natural son of the late George M. Chapman, who was at one time a New York millionaire.

Nurse Searvant has been arraigned to the police that the relations existing between him and Mrs. Chapman were not those which should have existed between a wife and the caretaker of a demented husband, and there is a deep veil of mystery over the occurrences in the Chapman house on the forenoon of Monday when the shooting occurred.

Mrs. Chapman is still in a critical condition. Her ante-mortem statement, in which she details Searvant's attempt upon her honor and life, has been taken by Coroner Rooney.

Searvant told the police that he had been engaged four months ago to take charge of Mr. Chapman and that about two months ago he became intimate with the wife, that the intimate relations had continued until last Saturday. He noticed her dressing with great care and asked her where she was going. She refused at first to tell, and then said that she loved another man. He then requested her not to meet the other man. She refused and he shot her.

Brazil's New Cabinet.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 25.—Acting President Peixotto has appointed the following cabinet: Minister of war, General Jose Semeao; minister of marine, Admiral Custodio de Mello; finance, Dr. Francisco Alves; justice and the interior, Jose Pereira; agriculture, Antao de Faria; foreign affairs, Constantino Polita. Senhor Figueride is in prison on the charge of having issued the notorious circular in connection with Brazilian finances. No sympathy is expressed for him.

Says the Alliance Is Dead.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—"The Farmers' Alliance party, as a political organization, has nearly gone to pieces," said Henry Sanford, a prominent citizen of Topeka, Kan., who is stopping at the Metropolitan hotel, "at least in Kansas. The Democratic party will gain a large number of the disgusted Alliance men who were formerly Republicans."

Will Grant Succeed Proctor?

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—General Grant, assistant secretary of war, when told of the report that the president had decided to appoint him secretary of war to succeed Secretary Proctor, declared that he had not been officially informed of the fact. He feared some of his enthusiastic friends were responsible for the report.

Buried in the Ruins of a Church.

BELLEFONTE, Pa., Nov. 25.—A new church at Hecla was blown down during the storm last night. A number of school children had sought shelter within the church, and they were all buried in the ruins. John Parker and Elias Dunkle were mortally injured, while five others were seriously hurt.

President Palmer Wants $5,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—President Palmer says the board of control of the World's fair has completed their report and it will probably be sent to President Harrison today. He thinks it fair to suppose that congress, after due consideration, will appropriate the $5,000,000 yet needed.

Uncle Sam to Get Hawaii.

CHICAGO, Nov. 25.—In an interview Hon. Lawrence McCully, supreme justice of the supreme court of Hawaii, said that when the present government of Hawaii collapses the United States will assume control. That is practically settled in the Hawaiian foreign office.

Russia Must Buy Our Goods.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—A dispatch to The Times from Vienna says that Russian cereals are overestimated and Russia will be compelled to buy grain from America.

THE WRONG THANKSGIVING.

[Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]

WHEN Abner Farmer enlisted in the army the people of his village on the Litchfield hills as with one voice declared that he should have staid at home. "Farmer he is by name and farmer he is by nature," that was what they said of him. And the old men said to one another that some of the young fellows should remain to till the fields, for the soldiers must eat and the old men could not raise the crops that would be surely needed to feed them.

They looked upon Abner as a marvel. They did not wholly understand him, and they thought the minister had spoken with the truth when he once said that "when Abner smiles upon the growing grain he passes by the meadows, it is worth more to the crops even than sunshine and showers."

This Abner Farmer was up the fields, what the greatness of commerce are to the markets, and even when he was a child they said of him, "He will do wonderful things with the soil, and will teach the world lessons about the fruits of the earth some day."

After Abner had said his goodby to all his friends, one summer day in 1861, as he was leaving to join his regiment, he went to say farewell to his betrothed, sweet Anna Williams. He had not wooed her, as the other youth of that vicinity had been used to do. He went with her here and there among his crops and through his fields, and he taught her to love the soil and to feel the majestic mystery which hides the secret which from the seed brings forth the harvest.

Once when he was walking with Anna, and was looking at the field of growing grain just touched with the first golden promise of the harvest, he said to her:

"Anna, sometimes I think even if I had no Bible I should know God, for I seem to realize his power in the life that is hidden in the seed until the earth gives birth to it, and I am very sure I sometimes hear the music of its growth, and it is a sweet music, Anna, but there are no words to describe it."

The gentle maid heard these strange utterances, which were not like the common conversation of the other youth, and they gave her joy, for she said to herself: "My betrothed has a great soul, that sees some things the rest of us cannot see. So he will love me with a greater love than even I can understand."

Abner led Anna by the fields on the day of parting wherever his grain and fruits were growing, and he bade her not to be sad while he was away, but ever to have hope of his return. And if she would think of him he said that she might go where he had planted shrubs and flowers, and to the fields where it sometimes seemed to him that the earth recognized and greeted him, for he thought these things might make him seem nearer to her.

"As for me, Anna, wherever I am, whether in battle or in camp, it is of you that I shall always think, and it will be my delight to call up all the hours we have passed together—to see you in my mind's eye, to say over the things we have said and to look for the day when I can come back to you."

The maiden by his side smiled as he said these words, though tears gathered in her eyes, and it seemed to him that never than that sweet mysterious music of which he once spoke, dearer than all other joys he ever knew was that smile, and he said, "There is one better revelation of God's kindness to us even than he gives us in the harvest, and that is the love which brings you and me together."

Then with a tender embrace Abner parted from his betrothed, and two weeks later was with General McClellan's army by the Potomac.

It had always been Abner's purpose to make Thanksgiving day his wedding day. It was the day of the year for him. Perhaps it was his fondness for the cultivation of the fruits of the earth, the inspiration he always received from contemplation of the mystery of the seed time and harvest that made this festival to him the day of days for him. It was his yearly milestone. To birthdays he was indifferent. Christmas was a grand time, New Year's an almanac day, and the Fourth of July a bubble, but Thanksgiving was the recognition of the glory of God, as manifested in the kindly fruits of the earth.

Moreover, Thanksgiving had been a day of note in Abner's family. It was his mother's birthday, and on that day she became the bride of Abner's father. So he said that on that day he, too, would make his sweetheart his bride.

On the morning of Thanksgiving day, in 1862, there was a sharp skirmish near the Rappahannock. A dash of cavalry, a score or more of shots, a sound of the drum summoning the brigade and then quiet; but there were a dozen soldiers dead on the hillside had Abner Farmer lay there, too, a mutilated hero. His bravery had saved the camp but had cost him his right arm.

His fighting days were over. He was a crippled man, yet he esteemed it an honor and not a misfortune that he had been thus decorated with blood and carried a badge of bravery and service to his country that would go with him to his grave.

Abner of course received an honorable discharge and returned to his home among the Litchfield hills, and Anna, though she could love him no more than when he left her for the front, could love him more tenderly because of his wound.

Abner perceived that the rough Litchfield hills were no place for a farmer with one arm, and when he heard from one who had ventured that way of the glory of the western country, of soil untouched for ages and black with the rich juices of the earth, of "oceans of land" smooth as a barn floor and yearning for seed and the touch of man—then Abner said to Anna, "I will go there, for the country is as good as one arm and I can do there with one arm better things than I can do here with two."

The maiden fixed a tender, sad glance upon him, and her lip trembled and her chin quivered as she tried to smile. Yet if he thought well of anything she thought well of it, and though she was heartsick to think again of separation.

She bore the parting nobly, and she even waved her hand quite merrily at him just as he turned the bend in the road on his way to the distant railway station.

One day nearly three years later Anna received a letter from her lover that gave her much joy to receive, only by the most glorious manifestation of joy, which is tears.

Her father saw only the tears, and he exclaimed:

"What is it, Anna? Has anything happened to Abner? He hasn't changed his mind about you, has he?"

But the mother read another story beneath the tears, for she said: "Be still, father. Can't you see she's heard good news?"

The girl could not speak, but gave the letter to her mother, who with much patience and frequent rubbing of her spectacles and following of the writing with her knitting needle at last deciphered it.

"What is it?" asked the impatient father. "It's the only thing that could make a girl like Anna cry. Abner has got a whole section of land and he's coming to marry Anna next Thanksgiving day. Dear me. It's dreadful short notice. It's only six weeks off."

Deacon Williams could only crack his finger joints. That was his way of giving vent to strong emotion.

On Thanksgiving morning there were great goings on in Deacon Williams' house. The fragrance of the kitchen was in the air, and Anna's fair face, flushed with expectation, seemed never so handsome as in these early morning hours. A merry throng gathered even before the church bells rang for the Thanksgiving service. Abner, they said, would drive from the railway station a dozen miles away, and reach the house so as to sit down to dinner with them, and the wedding hour was fixed for 6 in the evening, so as to leave time for a fine frolic afterward.

At 1 o'clock the turkeys were cooked to a turn and hunger smote the guests, but they delayed, for Abner had not come. Two o'clock passed and still the turkey waited. Three o'clock; they had eaten the dinner, but there was no merriment, for still Abner had not come. Anna, with pale face and heavy eyes, and with such countenance as was piteous to see, sat waiting, watching in her bridal garments by the parlor window. Four o'clock, 5, 6 passed. The throng departed. They could not endure the agony of Anna, for instead of a bride she seemed like one who is widowed.

Whether Anna would live or die; would be bereft of reason or would be conscious of her torture, that was a more important matter for her parents even than Abner's breach of promise. The old deacon displayed wrath when Abner's name was mentioned, for he was conscious that he had jilted Anna, but the girl and her mother mourned for Abner, saying to one another:

"He is dead. He has been killed, else we should have heard from him."

Just one week from that sad Thanksgiving day Anna fell in a faint, and then sought it was the beginning of the end. As her father and mother bended over her, of a sudden she uttered a scream such as never had pierced their ears.

"Abner! Abner! He has come," she said.

"Father, father! she is deranged at last," the mother cried.

There was a rush of feet, Anna rose from the sofa where they placed her when she fell in a faint. She stretched out her arms and tottered forward with a moan, as though speech was beyond her, and when her father and her mother turned to see whither she went, behold! she was in Abner's embrace.

"My darling; is she sick like this?" were Abner's words.

The girl clung to her betrothed and fondled his face, that she might be sure it was he in the flesh and no vision of delusion.

"What does it mean? I do not understand." Thus Abner spoke.

"It means you almost killed her because you did not keep you- promise and marry her upon Thanksgiving day."

"Are you mad? I am keeping my promise. I am here to marry her this day. This is Thanksgiving day," said Abner.

"ABNER! HE HAS COME."

"'Tis you who are beside yourself. Thanksgiving was a week ago."

Thus in strange confusion they agreed, but Anna cared not for these words, for Abner was by her side.

The minister by chance came in and to him they appealed, and when he had heard them, then with quiet of confusion in his manner he cleared away the mystery.

"My fault, my fault," he said. "The governor of this state appointed, after immemorial custom, the last Thursday of November Thanksgiving, but President Johnson I now remember appointed the first Thursday of December for Thanksgiving. Here in his quiet village we thought only of the governor's proclamation, but Abner in the faraway west knew only of the president's proclamation. I should have remembered it. Forgive me."

In an hour all the people were notified that Abner had come, and grief changed to joy. The kindness came to Anna's cheeks. The neighbors sent baked meats and there was great rejoicing, and at 6 o'clock on the wrong Thanksgiving day Anna became Abner's bride.

You have heard of the great wheat farm of the Missouri valley, where thousands of acres yield their goodly fruit; where are scores of reapers and hundreds of laborers and miles of granaries. It is the noble place of Abner Farmer's husbandry, and of all his possessions, they say, none compares in worth or beauty with her who became Abner's bride on the wrong Thanksgiving day.

E. J. EDWARDS.

A WAR TIME THANKSGIVING.

How the Day Was Celebrated Under Great Difficulties.

It was most natural for the minds of the soldiers to turn toward the good things at home when Thanksgiving approached. If the army was lying in camp and communications with the north were convenient the matter could be arranged with some satisfaction by having "goodies" sent on in boxes, and the boys sharing and dividing up so as to give a variety at the feast.

Thanksgiving of 1862, however, found the Army of the Potomac campaigning toward Fredericksburg, on the Rappahannock. Nearly every mess among the eastern troops especially, to whom Thanksgiving is the festival of all the year, had requested boxes to be shipped as far as Washington, there to take their chances of transportation to the front.

The last Thursday in November found them in Washington still, the contents spoiling if they were perishable, and for the most part perishable they were. The next resource for something extra with which to celebrate the occasion was the sutler's store. Our regimental sutler having received a good share somewhere on the peninsula some months before had not returned to camp. Still another thing was to fall back on the supplies of the country. Then, however, were within indescribable to meet the wants of a hundred thousand men, for the range of territory where it was safe to forage was limited.

At the time drew near a knot of men in our company decided that a Thanksgiving feast for them was going to be out of the question, and in order to equalize things it was decided to form a company of regulators and see that none of the other boys had anything beyond the customary rations of the government. Boxes could not come to camp, and the men had no money with which to patronize strange sutlers. There was only one other chance for a mess to get the best of the vegetables and that was by foraging. This work, now that it had got to be so dangerous, was confined to a small gang of men headed by a fellow known as Devil Dan.

In addition to foraging, which they did both for their own comfort and for profit, Devil Dan and his pals did the laundry work of the company. This was of sufficient importance to get them excused from some of the ordinary duties of the camp, and this increased their opportunities for foraging. A parley began some days before Thanksgiving, but the bummers declared that the forage of the region was completely exhausted, and that they would not supply so much as a potato either for love or money. But the reputation of the gang for saying things that sometimes came quite equal to this they bore for appropriating other people's goods, and the vigilantes set a sharp watch around the laundry quarters.

Near Jean the bummers could anticipate the day, pickets were placed on duty some days before. Every kettle on the fire was turned after to see that its contained cloth ing. Devil Dan was serene and answered all questions, acting as though he pitied the incredulity of the regulators and would save them all their trouble if they would but take him at his word.

The regulators were brimming with happiness of the "dog in the manger" kind. There were six of them and they fattened themselves that they could raid any mess that violated their prohibition. Thanksgiving came and Devil Dan ' an immense washing on hand. All day his kettles sputtered and sent up clouds of steam that kept his quarters in an impenetrable mist, while the fumes of the soda filled the air. The vigilantes grew ashamed of their auspicions, for they were known to all the company.

Finally dress parade came. Devil Dan's kettles were still steaming, and he and his men were excused from parade. After the parade, to the astonishment of the vigilantes, the orderly sergeant marched all of the men to the laundry quarters instead of to the cook's tent. Devil Dan and his helpers were reclining on the ground before a lovely spread of pot pie, their eye bright with merry twinkles. When the company drew up before them the gang sprang to their feet, took two kettles from the fire, and served out a lavish plate full to every one of their comrades excepting the vigilantes.

"Now boys," said Devil Dan, "enjoy yourselves. This is for your kind patronage of my laundry."

The pot pie had been boiled in cloths that swelled at the top, thus hoodwinking the vigilantes, who didn't hear the last of that Thanksgiving for a long time.

THE HEARING OF THE CASE OF BARTENDER MOORE.

The Scheme to Fraudulently Elect Hetfield Laid Bare by a Clever Cross-Examination.—Too Late, the Witness Declines to Answer Further Because the "Answers Might Criminate Him," And He Is Held Under $150 Bonds.—Query:—Don't Answers also Criminate Others.

The rumors concerning the alleged attempt to colonize the First Ward by tools of the "Combine" from the Fourth Ward received considerable support from the case of the State vs. Fred. S. Moore, which was begun before City Judge Codington on Wednesday at five p. m.

Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh was engaged to represent the State a few minutes before the case was called. The defendant Moore was represented by his Counsel Justice Louis F. Wadsworth. Mr. Marsh announced that the principal witness for the State was absent and would require to be subpoenaed. A postponement would therefore be necessary to secure her attendance. Justice Wadsworth offered to have the defendant himself go on the stand at once and prove that he had a legal right to register. Mr. Marsh said that he would have no objection to that course provided it was agreed that if, after the examination and cross-examination of the defendant, it appeared that the interests of justice required it a postponement should then be taken in order to produce his witness for the State. This was agreed to and Justice Wadsworth put the defendant on the stand and asked him two questions, viz. "Did you change your residence from the Fourth Ward to the First Ward?" "Did you register and take a room in the City Hotel before you registered as a voter in the First Ward?" To both questions the defendant answered in the affirmative and Justice Wadsworth turned the witness over to Mr. Marsh for cross-examination.

The cross-examination exhibited the scheme of defendant in sharp outlines. Mr. Marsh's request that the court first informed defendant as to his rights. The cross-examination then proceeded. Moore was made to admit that up to the very hour of registering in the First Ward he had been a regular and voter in the Fourth Ward where he lived with his parents. He was only 23 and had always lived at home except when he was bar-tender for John Schorb for a short time. He admits that the object in going to the City Hotel for the express purpose of voting in the First Ward at the coming city election. He took his room in the City Hotel on Tuesday last in the afternoon. Neither the Hotel proprietor nor the clerk of the Hotel was present. Mr. Pike, the clerk, was there but Mr. Joseph W. Pike, who happened to be in the Reading Room at the time. Moore then went to a cigar store and then to Robert's livery stable where he met Mr. W. S. Chase. When he left the store he met Mr. S. T. Wilson who showed him where to register. He registered at the polls before he saw his room in the Hotel, and before he even got his key for the room. When he wrote his name in the hotel register, he did not note and did not know how much he would have to pay for his board or his room. He did not know the rates per day in the Hotel, and he did not know whether he would keep his room after election or not. He thought that he might stay on after election, but hadn't decided that yet. The same day and shortly before he registered he had a colored man bring his clothes in a valise from his father's house to the hotel. He could think of no person who had not previously told of his intended change of residence—one was Mr. W. S. Chase whom he met at Roberts' stable. The name of the other person given was Sam Hall, who is himself one of those suspected as elsewhere shown. Moore declined to answer the question whether he had informed any of his family of his intention to leave home. He declined to answer who asked him to go to the First Ward to vote or whether it was arranged that some body else should pay his hotel bill or whether his wages as bartender for Joseph B. Miller (which he had admitted were his only means of livelihood were enough to pay for his room at the City Hotel. All these questions and others he declined to answer on the ground that "his answers might tend to criminate himself." Later, he said that he boarded at the Elkwood in the Fourth Ward, and only had his room in the City Hotel where he had slept one night so far. He had told his mother that he intended to leave home and board at the City Hotel. He did not know that after he had registered as a voter in the First Ward, his mother had said that he was living home with her and had not moved any or thought of moving away from home. The following question he also declined to answer on the ground that "it might criminate him." "If, as you have said, your only object in going to the City Hotel was to vote in the First Ward at the next city election, is it not true that at the time that you registered, your intention was to go back home to live as soon as the election was over.

Justice Wadsworth on redirect examination asked if witness did not intend to change his residence when he went to the City Hotel and the answer was "yes" The same answer was given to the question whether he had not so informed others.

This closed the examination of the defendant. Mr. Marsh then stated that the damaging admissions of the defendant on cross examination, and his refusal to answer relevant questions on the plea that his answers might tend to criminate himself not to speak of the evidence in possession of the State made the case a very serious one deserving thorough examination. He moved that further hearing be postponed according to agreement, and that in the mean time defendant be held to bail. The motion was granted and the time fixed was Monday next at 10 a. m. Judge Codington held defendant in $150 bail to appear at that time for further examination.

"ESMERALDA" TO BE REPEATED.

Benefits for the Muhlenberg Hospital, December 12th.

The recent successful performance of "Esmeralda" at the Casino is to be supplemented by a second representation of the play at the same place on Dec. 12th, the proceeds of the sale of tickets to be devoted to the pressing needs of the Muhlenberg Hospital, a most worthy charity which certainly deserves the heartiest support from our citizens. The announcement that the Committee has enjoyable production of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett will be welcome news to the many persons who were unsuccessful in obtaining seats for the first performance, when the auditorium of the Casino was crowded to its utmost capacity long before the opening of the entertainment, to the great disappointment of those who were thereby prevented from witnessing the most enjoyable amateur performance that has ever been given in Plainfield.

The performance on the 12th of December will be in the respect precisely similar to the original presentation, though it is likely that the practice obtained by the performers on the former occasion will be beneficial to them in acquiring the ease and smoothness which come from repetition. It will be duly advertised.

IN THE COURT.

Young Philip Meisell Sent to the Reform School.

There was a brief session of the Court of Special Sessions in Union county Wednesday morning. On motion of Prosecutor Marsh, Philip Meisel, the youth who pleaded not guilty to a charge of stealing $60 from his employer, was arraigned, and the boy retracted his plea, admitting that he stole the money.

County Judge Kerr then stated that the parents of the boy were over 70 years of age. The money represented their savings during a life of long years. The boy took it from a trunk and with a companion went to the seashore and spent it.

The court made an order sending the prisoner to the State Reform School.

Otto Weir, who was last week sentenced to State prison for one year for the larceny of $20 from Bockover, requested an opportunity to speak to the court, which was granted, and through Interpreter Newbigging he told the story in plea for a change of the sentence. He said he was born in Prussia. He never committed crime before. He had been to Amboy looking for work. Returning he lodged in a barn near Hetfield, and was tempted to take the laprobe. After a consultation, the court announced that the sentence could not be changed.

SHOT AT A GIRL.

When An Attempt to Criminally Assault Her Failed.

Councilman Leonard Spangenberg on Tuesday evening informed Policeman Kiely that an unknown man had attempted to criminally assault a girl in North Plainfield, but when the girl succeeded in escaping from him the fellow fired two shots at her. The names of neither of the participants can be ascertained.

Significant Questions Suggested.

Where does all the money for this colonizing come from?

An investigation by a Common Council of honest men two months hence may show if it has not been stolen from the taxpayers.

What is the object of colonizing but to defeat the expressed will of the honest sentiment of the community?

Why is the combine so anxious to get back Bartender Moore?

Does it look reasonable that such men would strive so hard to serve the people with nothing to gain for themselves?

The Firemen's Thanksgiving.

The members of Engine Company No 2 took their apparatus out for a "wash" yesterday afternoon. The company at two o'clock paraded down Front street headed by the Plainfield Cornet Band. At the conclusion of the "wash" the members and their friends proceeded to the Sheehan building to banquet which had been prepared. Several speeches followed the banquet. The mayor of Clinton had been invited to be present but was unable to attend.

Insulted a Woman.

A man named Lynch was arrested last night by Policeman Kiely on the charge of insulting a colored woman. Lynch was drunk at the time. When arraigned before City Judge Codington this morning he pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to pay a fine of ten dollars and to spend thirty days in the county jail.

—To-morrow Roger Bros. will cut the price on Edwin C. Burt's shoes to $3.50.

CITIZENS AROUSED.

THE EVIDENCE OF FRAUDS AS SO FAR SECURED.

Let There be a Committee of Safety Formed to Prosecute Those Who Have Already Violated the Law.—The Penalty $1,000 Fine and Five Years in the State Prison in Each Case.

[EXTRACT FROM THE ELECTION LAW.]

15. That any person who shall cause or procure his name to be registered in more than one election district, or shall cause or procure his name or that of any person to be registered, knowing that he or the person whose name he has procured to be registered, is not entitled to vote in the election district or ward wherein said registry is made, at the next election to be held therein, or who shall falsely personate any registered voter, shall be punished for each and every offense by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The investigation now being made respecting the false registration in the First Ward to carry it by fraud in the interest of Combine Hetfield, is only begun, but already enough evidence has been secured to send to the State prison persons who may not now realize the serious crime they have committed because of the haste caused the false registration to be made.

The law provides for their punishment as partly shown above just as much as for the punishment of the persons whose names are falsely registered.

We repeat the list of names, with what an investigation thus far reveals. A few of the names on the list are regular, but every person about whom there is the slightest doubt will wish before the next few months are passed that he had refused himself to be made a victim of the combine. In some of the cases it will be necessary to wait until after the persons have voted or attempted to vote. We advise them in all kindness not to run the risk of the State prison and a heavy fine. The game isn't worth the powder.

We advise the citizens all over town to keep this copy of THE NEWS, and carefully examine with it the registry list for comparison and name any improperly registered in more than one ward, and that every one who attempts to vote illegally is properly punished.

Here is the list with discoveries thus far made:

List of Extra Registered in the First Ward.

ALL THESE REGISTERED AS RESIDING AT SCHORB'S (A SALOON.)

Harry Windom. Has been a bartender for Schorb for two months. Formerly lived in Somerset in this county. Evidence to show he has not resided in the county the necessary five months.
Herbert Corey,
John W. Corey. Evidence to show his legal residence is with his mother in Hetfield Row, on Arlington avenue, Fourth Ward.
Michael Daly,
Jas. Emmons. Now in the county jail for thirty days. It is supposed he will be discharged in time to vote. Considered a resident of Somerset county.
Dennis Murray. Registered also in the Eleventh Ward. Realizing the danger he is in, he says his name was registered in the First Ward without his knowledge or consent and that he intends to vote only in the Fourth Ward, where he resides.
Herbert Schillings.
Ludlow Franee.

AT BOCK'S (A SALOON, DWELLING, (15 AND 17 EAST SECOND STREET.)

Joseph Willett,
Ira Beaumont, (colored.)
William Butterfield, says he resides in the Fourth Ward and means to vote there. Says that his registration as residing in Bock's saloon or residence is a lie, and was not authorized by him. The person who swore that he resided 'in the First Ward is to be prosecuted.
John Smith. Evidence secured showing that he will not be twenty-one years old until Christmas. He must prove that he did not register or cause his name to be registered to save himself from punishment.

AT CITY HOTEL.

Fred. S. Moore, bartender, (held under bonds.)
Daniel Manley.
Benjamin Gowen,
Jas. Anderson.
Frank E. Hale. Hale's wife resides on West Fourth street, in the Fourth Ward, and that is considered his legal residence. He is among the "bolters" against whom evidence has been secured as in other cases.

New Jersey Division L. A. W.—The Vote.

The polls of the annual election of officers of the New Jersey Division by mail vote to the secretary-treasurer, G. C. Pennell, closed on Monday, Nov. 16. The vote cast this year was very large, being 646 out of a membership of 1,800. The vote cast was as large as that of the Massachusetts Division, with over 3,000 members, in which there was a big fight. The secretary announces the vote as follows:

For chief consul, G. Carleton Brown, Elizabeth, 639.
For vice consul, Leonard S. Mulford, Vineland, 300.
For vice consul, Charles K. Berdan, Paterson, 447.
For secretary-treasurer, George C. Pennel, Elizabeth, 440.
For representative, Gardner B. Cain, Trenton, 273; Harry D. Lewitt, Trenton, 301; Frank W. Cramer, Camden, 438; John B. Dodd, East Orange, 97; W. Stauffer, Asbury Park, 436; H. S. Fuller, Flemington, 304; John H. Hunyes, Edgewater, 429; Theo. F. Merseles, Jr., Jersey City, 432; W. Scott Calkins, Millville, 422; Wm. A. Drayton, Jr., Jersey City, 439; Thomas H. Dixon, Paterson, 443; T. N. Gray, Orange, 421; David H. Lenox, Plainfield, 438; W. E. Shultz, Camden, 440.
This shows that Berdan, vice consul, and Cain, representatives, were not elected.

A Conference of Christian Boys.

All the boys over thirteen years of age are especially invited to be present at the Saturday morning session of the convention of the Youth's Department of the Y. M. C. A. of New Jersey, to be held in the Association Hall at 10 a. m. Ladies and all interested in work among boys are cordially invited to the 2.30 and 7.30 p. m. sessions on Saturday.

A most interesting programme has been arranged, and Mr. S. F. Dudley and other prominent leaders in Boys' Work will be present.

A Pleasant Hour in China.

Rev. D. H. Davis, late of Shanghai, China, will give an illustrated lecture at the Seventh-Day Baptist church to-morrow evening, at eight o'clock. The lecture includes 100 views, painted by Chinese artists under Mr. Davis' personal supervision, of Chinese street Scenes, Marriage Ceremonies, Funeral Processions, Temples, Heathen Gods, etc., to be thrown upon a screen. All are invited. A collection will be taken.

Looks as if Forgery is Added to Fraud

Ulyses S. Force of New street says that he did not sign his name to the petition for the alleged Citizens' Ticket and who ever did was guilty of forgery. It would be interesting to know how many more there are of the same kind. It is said that several residents of North Plainfield have also signed it.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Struck by Lightning.

When the scientific girl of the period is struck by lightning and lives, the first use she makes of returned consciousness is to write an account of the whole occurrence to a newspaper. This was what Miss Mary C. Avery, of Ledyard, Conn., did. Her story appears in The Popular Science News, and it is full of interest as well as of value scientifically.

Miss Avery was struck while returning in a carriage from church, though she neither saw nor heard the crash. Her father and mother were with her, and presently they saw that she was "toppling over." Her pulse was all gone apparently and her body was limp.

They carried her at once into a house near by and administered brandy and water. It was half an hour before she regained consciousness to some extent, though she showed signs of life almost immediately, and was seized with convulsions so tremendous that it required two men to hold her. She remembers nothing at all of these spasms, and remarks incidentally, "This goes to prove that the contortions about which some people raise objections in electrical executions are not indicative of conscious suffering."

The lightning struck her on the left side of head, face and neck and burned her there severely. Her first feelings on returning to herself was one of intense pain. Of the rest this cool headed heroine writes:

The wire in my hat and the hatpin disappeared, and the lining was scorched only. My collar melted in the middle. My clothing, even to jacket and outer shawl, had an irregular hole, two inches by three or four, pierced through. The shawl, after a year of ten months, still smells of brimstone. The burn at my eye was more of a scorch than a burn proper, but the eye was closed and the sight doubtful for a week. The path through my hair by which, I but enough to make two good sized switches is recovering itself, and the hair is in some places four inches long. As memory consciousness returned I had the use of my mind. The burns were deepest across the shoulders—perhaps as large as two hands—but the soreness there was nothing compared with the pain in the nerves of the arms and chest. I was brought home the third day on a litter and had no setbacks. The burns healed in three weeks, and in four I was able to get slowly up stairs.

A curious thing now occurred. One-half of my face—the side that was not hurt—was paralyzed, the line between the sides being as straight as if drawn by rule, and the eyelid needing to be closed by hand for sleep. I am almost well now, though I can still feel the effects of the slight paralysis. I have no more fear of thunder showers than other people, nor can I predict them, but I was felt when the wind is northeast by a faint return of pains in arms or chest. There is a scar upon my right shoulder.

William J. Florence.

May earth rest lightly on him! It is a benefactor of his race who makes mankind laugh, so sad and desperately earnest is this life, and Florence made his fellow countrymen laugh for many a year. It is to be noted that Florence was of Irish descent, as many of America's most brilliant men are. His humor was so droll, so good natured, original and altogether irresistible that there is none left like him. There never was any one like him. When or where was there an actor who could keep one play running for twelve years and not have it pall on the public taste? For twelve years the Florences, husband and wife, played "The Mighty Dollar," with really almost a laugh in every line. A mighty dollar, indeed, if ever a dollar was! for they made a fortune of it, and, best of all, nobody grudged it to them, so kindly, genial and merry were these two, off the stage as on. Here, too, was one theatrical married couple who had no domestic difficulties. Their life together was a beautiful and happy one, and the loss to the one who is left is irreparable.

Strangely enough, Mr. Florence said only a few weeks ago that he never felt stronger or more full of life than he did this autumn when he began his engagement with the Jefferson combination. How lonely Jefferson must be! But what are we to do now for American actors? Mary Anderson has retired, John McCullough died some years ago, Barrett is dead and Florence is dead. Who can take their places?

The horse show at New York was misnamed. It should have been called a show of fashionable women. There were more of these to be seen than of any other exhibits. As to the horses, they were of the greyhound and Fifth avenue carriage varieties. Honest old Dobbin would never have known his own cousins here. Some of the New York papers devoted more space to describing the costumes of the women than they did to the horses.

The Philadelphia Press has its dignified fling at the women dress reformers too. It remarks, in passing, "But whatever the women reformers may do, there is one thing which the people will insist on, and that is a pocket, commodious and accessible, to be made a feature of woman's attire."

At the dinner of the New York chamber of commerce given at Delmonico's the banquet cost twenty-five dollars a plate, and there were more applicants for seats than could be accommodated. What will Chicago do now?

A number of learned scientific gentlemen have been giving their opinion on the question, "What is life?" So far as appears to the common mind life is a perishable for more money.

YALE DOWNS PRINCETON

Blue Humbles Orange and Black in the Dust.

THE TIGERS FAIL TO GET A SCORE.

At the Close of the Game the Teams Stood: Yale, 19; Princeton, 0—About 40,000 People on Manhattan Field, New York, to See the Contest.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Yale, 19; Princeton, 0. The blue has triumphed this year, and wearers of the orange and black have gone back to Princeton with heavy hearts. The greatest athletic event of the year occurred at Manhattan field yesterday afternoon, and when the opposing football elevens of Yale and Princeton lined up for the great championship game, nearly 40,000 people were present in spite of the rain. On every hand were the raving colors of different colleges, and these, added to the brilliant costumes of the women, made a bright and animating picture. The crowd, besides, was an interesting one to study. The grey lawns and stern visaged judge sat beside the beardless student and appeared to be just as ready to cheer as did the younger man. Lawyers of high and low degree, men prominent in business, society and letters, all were there to witness the game. Before it was over they had become just as enthusiastic and shouted just as loud as the younger men.

How the Teams Lined Up.

The teams lined up as follows:

YALE.	POSITIONS.	PRINCETON
Hinkey	Left end	Vincent
Winter	Left tackle	Hollly
McClung	Left guard	Wheeler
Morrison	Centre	Symmes
Morrison	Right guard	Riggs
Wallace	Right tackle	Harrold
Harwood	Right end	Warren
Barbour	Quarter back	King
McClung	Left half back	Flint
Bliss	Right half back	Poe
McCormick	Full back	Homans

Referee—William Brooks, of Harvard. Umpire—S. V. Coffin, of Wesleyan.

Princeton Wins the Toss.

Princeton won the toss and chose the west side of the field. Symmes held the ball for a moment, then touching it down, suddenly passed it back to Flint and the V advanced. Five yards were gained when Heffelfinger alighted in the midst of the phalanx. There was a general scattering of Princeton men, and the ball was stopped as suddenly as it had started with a five yard gain. Flint was sent around the left end. He fell short of the mark though, for Hinckey tackled him very cleverly. Homans then tried a dash through the right side, but it was no use, for he stood in the breach like a stone wall. It was three downs and Homans punted. McCormick caught but he could not bound from his position. Wallace was on his neck in an instant. Yale had the ball for the first time and it was passed to McClung, who responded nobly with a fifteen yard gain. Yale's beautiful interference was already apparent. Bliss then took the leather for another fifteen yards. Yale got five yards for off side play on the part of Princeton. Yale backed the center in a mass play for three yards. Bliss got the ball, but Riggs broke through and Yale lost five yards. Bliss punted thirty yards and it was Princeton's ball. Homans returned the kick, but the ball was ten yards nearer Princeton's goal. Yale got five yards for off side play.

McClung's Big Gain.

McClung got the ball again for fifteen yards before he was downed. Harbour fumbled. It was no gain for Yale. Yale then worked the mass play for a yard. Bliss punted. The ball was at that time on Princeton's ten yard line, and Yale men were howling like maniacs.

Homans, for Princeton, punted for forty yards, and on the first down Yale got five yards for off side play. Yale now had large gains, but the ball was given to Princeton for off side play, and Homans punted for forty yards. Bliss fumbled, but fell on the ball. Heffelfinger then got the ball from a short pass, and was dragged through eight yards. He was then again and made seven yards. Hinckey was the next to gain ground, and he made about three yards through Princeton's center.

Princeton got five yards because Hartwell threw Homans after he made a fair catch. King lost five yards. Homans then got the ball and punted for forty five yards, but McCormack caught it and ran back ten yards. McCormick was sent through the center and made ten yards.

King Brings Down a Mustang.

Up to this time Princeton had not done much with her backs, but had confined herself to punting. She showed up wonderfully well in tackling, and Yale was considerably surprised at the way her runners were frequently stopped in their tracks. Play became rather rough, and Umpire Coffin had to warn the men to be careful.

McClung got the ball on a short pass and started on one of his long runs around Princeton's right end. He would have had a clear field, but King broke through, and grabbing him by the seat of the trousers, pulled him to earth. The two rolled over and over and the crowd, even the Yale men, went wild.

Bliss made the finest run up to this point of the game. The gain was twenty yards around the right end. Princeton objected to the referee's decision that the ball rested on a fair play, but it was no use. Slugging was fast and furious and the umpire had to warn the players. Homans punted. McClung caught the ball on the bound and the ball was down on Yale's thirty-five yard line. This was the nearest to Yale's goal thus far in the game. McCormick gained a few feet through the center. Bliss bucked it again, but fell against a stone wall of yellow legs. It now began to rain again, but this had no effect on the crowd's enthusiasm. Clever after clever went up and the ball alternately went back and forth. The playing up to this time had been the sharpest ever seen on a football field. The ball had remained almost entirely in the center of the field.

Jumped on by the Whole Field.

McClung was sent around the right end clear for long yards, escaping the ball dangerously near the Jerseymen's goal. Bliss then took the ball and sneaked around the right for five yards, but the ball was given to Princeton for off side play, much to the disgust of Yale, who was the nearest yet to a touchdown. Homans punted to get out of danger, and Bliss allowed the ball to go down to him, but fumbled it. Then he did he was jumped on by all the men of the Princeton team who were getting through the line excellently. Time was called with the ball on Princeton's forty-yard line. Neither side had scored and Princeton was jubilant, for Yale had counted on scoring in the first half.

The Second Half.

At 2:10 p. m. the teams lined for the second half in a pouring rain. Yale had the ball, and McCormick, her great full back, started in to do or die. As usual they started with a V and made seven yards. McCormick tackled the center for a yard. Winter tackled and made four yards, and McClung followed, making two yards.

On his next run he was splendidly tackled by Harold and lost five yards. The ball was now within forty yards of Princeton's goal.

Yale was gaining at every down and the Princeton boys seemed to be losing their dash. Heffelfinger was sent through the center for ten yards. The ball was now on Princeton's ten yard line, and when Winter gained four yards more it looked very much like a touchdown. The crowd was nearly frantic.

Winter took the ball again, and when he was tackled the ball was within three yards of the goal line. It was carried in fifteen yards. Everything depended on the next play.

First Touchdown for Yale.

McClung bucked the center, and the ball was within one yard from the line. Then the whole Yale team massed around McCormick, and he was shoved over, scoring a touchdown by about two feet.

McCormick failed to kick the goal. This made the score: Yale, 4; Princeton, 0. The ball was taken out to the twenty-five yard line and the Princeton formed a wedge. So far the ball had not been out of Princeton's territory. Flint got five yards and Poe followed it up with five more. Homans snuffed a poor punt and the ball was Yale's. McClung then took the ball from the thirty yard line and ran within one yard of the Princeton line. He was well guarded by Heffelfinger and Winter was shoved over for the second touchdown at the extreme left corner. The score was now 8 to 0. McClung again failed to kick the goal. Princeton formed a V and made five yards. Homans then punted and McClung then got the ball out of bounds. The ball was all in favor of Yale now and their gains seemed irresistible. McCormick kicked a pretty goal from the field right in the middle of the poles. The score was: Yale, 12; Princeton, 0. The Yalelites rose en masse and shout themselves hoarse.

Bliss Makes the Run of the Day.

With defeat staring them in the face Princeton rallied, and on the ball being returned to the centre made the gamest fight of the day. Little Poe tried the right end and gained a few yards. The ball was continued for some time in Yale's territory, and the ball was passed to Bliss, who suddenly darted toward the right end, and eluding the whole Princeton team made the run of the game. He covered fully seventy yards and gained a touchdown between the goal posts, from which McClung easily kicked a goal. Bliss was injured slightly by the strategic interference of Heffelfinger, who, as Poe was in the act of tackling the speedy Bliss, threw his aggressive arm and killed Princeton's last hope, and game was called a few minutes after. Yale's victory was due to superior team work. Their rush line was invincible, and back of the line they were as strong.

Right work against the great Heffelfinger was the most surprising thing of the game. He and Winters do as they did them well, Heffelfinger meeting his match.

McCormick, Bliss and Winter get the credit of the touchdowns. Princeton fought well and were simply overcome by superior team work.

Yale Owned New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Yale owned the city last night. At the hotels, in the theatres and other places of amusement, on the streets, from Harlem to the battery and from the East river to the North river, everywhere was encountered crowds of wildly demonstrative students, cheering the great victory of Yale over Princeton at football. In several of the theaters the students had made a farce of the performance. The jam in the hotels was awful, and great incongruity was caused to the guests of those places.

Chicago Outslugged Cornell.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—The Chicago University club team beat Cornell yesterday by 12 to 4. Chicago won by individual play and slugging. Cornell put in a strong, pluckey game in team work, but was no match for the heavier rush line by an injury to Galbreath, which forced him to retire. Every member of the Cornell team received wounds of some sort.

Sullivan's Last Battle.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 27.—A benefit arranged by John L. Sullivan and a number of San Francisco sports was tendered Paddy Ryan at the Pacific Athletic club last night. The principal event of the evening was a three round go between the redoubtable John L. and Ryan. At the conclusion of the bout Sullivan announced his willingness as to the match between Slavin and himself. He was willing to fight in the latter part of September or early in October and the money to bind a match was posted in New York. Continuing, Sullivan said: "Slavin is the first man I ever challenged, and win or lose, it will be my last fight."

THE WASHINGTON FIGHT.

Mr. Mills Angry with Mr. Crisp's Friends.

THEIR CRITICISMS DISTASTEFUL.

They Say His Temper Would Make Him an Undesirable Wielder of the Gavel, but Senator Carlisle Declares There Is no Foundation for the Accusation.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—A New York paper has received the replies given below from Messrs. Crisp and Miller, the principal speakership candidates, as to their attitude on the tariff question. Congressman Charles F. Crisp writes:

What Mr. Crisp Says.

My record on the tariff question is as clear as that of any representative in congress. I have always acted and sympathized with efforts to obtain genuine reform and positive reduction. The first vote I cast in congress was for Mr Carlisle in preference to Mr. Randall for speaker of the house. Later I voted for the Morrison bill and for the Mills bill. I have made tariff speeches in congress, in New York, in Massachusetts, in Missouri, in Virginia, in Maryland, in Kentucky and in Georgia, and in such and every one of these many speeches I have advocated reduction of duties.

Of course I cannot outline in a brief dispatch a tariff bill such as I would like to see enacted, but the following paragraph from The Record's report of my speech on the McKinley bill may serve your purpose:

His Idea of a Tariff Bill.

Mr. Crisp—Mr. Chairman, the committee on ways and means have spent months of restless days and sleepless nights trying to find out what will give relief to the farmers of this country. I can suggest a plan of relief in five minutes. Modify the existing tariff laws; reduce taxation; remove some notable cause of petition in the market; destroy trusts; accord equal rights to all and special privileges to none. Do these things and you will help the farmer to get a better price. That would help a little, but it would give to the farmers on the coast of Maine and on the coast of Massachusetts; why not give it to the farmers?

Give him free binding twine, which the farmer of the west sacks his corn, and with which the farmer in the south wraps his cotton. Give him free iron ties, with which in the south he binds his cotton bales and with which in the west he bales his hay.

Give him some reduction on his hats on his woolen clothes and on his cotton goods. In that way, and in that way only, can you benefit the great mass of the farmers of the south and west. You cannot increase the price of their products by protective tariff duties, but you can decrease to them the cost of productions and of living by reducing the tariff on those articles used to make their crops, and on those articles of necessity which all families must use.

Any further information that may be desired will be found in my speeches.

The Stand of Roger Q. Mills.

Roger Q. Mills thus defines his position: In reply to your despatch inquiring about my views on the tariff I would say that if my speeches in congress and out of it in all parts of the country for the last fifteen years do not make them known I can hardly do so within the limits of a telegram. I would try, if I had the power, to make the tariff low for the United States. I would exempt from taxation all raw material. Why? Because we could then produce cheaper than any other people, and sell in markets now closed to us by reason of the higher cost which the tariff imposed upon it. That would give vastly more employment to our labor, and consequently higher wages than any process of protection. That is what I have said all over the country.

The Speakership Fight.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—With the exception of Mr. Hatch, who will not be here until Saturday or Monday, all the candidates for speaker are now established in headquarters. The contest may now be said to be actually on, although there are, as yet, comparatively few congressmen in the city. It is already apparent that the fight is to be made very largely a matter of Democratic policy, the latest indication in this regard being the departure of Senator Gorman for New York in the interest of Mr. Crisp, and of Senator Carlisle for the same city in behalf of Mr. Mills. This gives evidence of the intensity as well as of the importance of the pending struggle.

Mr. Mills has his parlors in Willard's hotel and Mr. Byrnes assists Mr. Mills in receiving and entertaining visitors. Judge Crisp has quarters in the Metropolitan. His friends are figuring that he will receive almost, if not quite, a hundred votes on the first ballot. Mr. McMillin is also at the Metropolitan. He denies emphatically that he intends to withdraw from the contest. It is believed that Mr. McMillin will have about thirty votes on the first ballot.

Should Springer's Friends Say.

The vicinity of Mr. Springer's headquarters in the National hotel is placarded with signs announcing his candidacy. The logic of Mr. Springer's candidacy, as presented by his friends, is the enlargement of the Democratic presidential possibilities in the next election. Even if the Democrats carry the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana and secure three electoral votes in Michigan they will have only one more than a majority. It is claimed in behalf of Mr. Springer that if the speakership is given him it will do a great deal toward insuring the twenty-four votes of Illinois for the Democratic column.

A Breezy Incident of the Ballot.

To the Star reporter Mr. Mills said: "I see that Judge Crisp's friends are angry because they say, in an interview with the reporter of the New York Times, that I called him a 'protection Democrat.' I never said that. Judge Crisp was a protection Democrat, and the New York Times does not say I did. My attention was called to an article in The Sun, Judge Crisp's warm advocate and strong protectionist journal, in which it was said: 'If a party nominates Henry George it thereby declares itself in favor of the single tax.'

"If a party nominates Neal Dow it thereby declares itself in favor of prohibition. If the Democrats nominate Roger Q. Mills for speaker they will declare themselves in favor of free trade. When the paragraph was read to me I said that Mr. Dana should have carried out his comparison and said that if the Democrats nominate Judge Crisp they will declare themselves in favor of protection. The Sun declares that I am a free trader and should be beaten for that reason. To defeat me with any one would as logically prove the house to be in favor of protection as to elect me would, according to The Sun's reasoning, prove the house to be in favor of free trade.

"No protectionist in the present house will vote for me. They might all advocate the election of a gentleman who was not a protectionist in order to defeat me, and, in fact, most of them have done so. Judge Crisp's friends have charged that I am a free trader, that I am supported by Henry George and Thomas G. Shearman, the great single tax advocates, but I have never complained.

"They have assailed my qualifications for speaker, because, they say, I have an ungovernable temper, but I have not permitted these attacks, though very hurtful to me, to ruffle my feelings, or lessen my regard for Judge Crisp."

The letter of Senator Carlisle to Representative John DeWitt Warner, of New York, disposing of the claim that Mr. Mills is "unfitted by temperament to make a dignified and effective presiding officer of the house," is regarded with satisfaction by the friends of Mr. Mills.

The General Warren Statue.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—At a special meeting of the G. K. Warren Monument association the plaster statue of General Warren's statue, executed by Sculptor Henry Baerer, was accepted. The cast is eight feet high and represents General Warren at the second day's battle of Gettysburg. He is in full uniform, holding in the right hand a sword and in the left a field glass.

Struck by a Train.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 27.—Matthew Arnold, of Bordentown, was killed by being struck by a passenger train on Crosswick's creek bridge, Burlington.

FASHIONS

Ladies' Dressing Gowns.

Dressing gowns are rather more shapely than they used to be, as our illustration shows. The favorite material is colored flannel, old rose, pink, blue, heliotrope, gray or terra cotta, patterned with flowers or stripes in contrasting shades. Some of the newest flannels are made in Paisley shawl patterns.

NEW STYLES IN DRESSING GOWNS.

Both the models here sketched are cheap, pretty and comfortable. One has puffed sleeves, a yoke and a Watteau back. The other is flounced round the bottom and is ornamented at the waist with a girdle.

Fashion Briefs.

Carriage cloaks for afternoon and evening wear are large Siberian circulars that cover the entire costume.

A white polka dotted enamel bow rimmed with gold is the most chic fastening imaginable for a watch.

Hitherto leopard skins have only been considered suitable for hearth and carriage rugs. This season, however, they are going to be used for ladies' mantles and cloaks.

Ruby spirals and garnets set in squares and centered with gold are used as queen all over the country.

The new laces for millinery have morsels of colored felt introduced to complete the pattern.

Silk blond is coming in again, and in Paris white veils are worn.

WORLD'S FAIR MATTERS.

Dr. Talmage Paints the Glories of the Exposition.

TIME FOR THE SULKING EAST TO ACT

The Eminent Brooklyn Divine Thinks New York and Brooklyn Still Act Disgruntled and That All Disappointed Eastern Cities Should Support Chicago.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 27.—That the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage does not hold any ill will against Chicago because she took the World's fair away from the east was shown by an appeal he made at the Brooklyn Tabernacle yesterday.

"And now on this Thanksgiving Day of 1891, I charge you people of Brooklyn and New York and America, get ready for the year 1893, when our national prosperity will be set forth as never before in the World's Columbian Exposition. See to it! It is high time that we seacoast cities, who failed to get the World's fair, come out of our sulks, and instead of our standing with the face to the wall in a big pout, turn round and join in the stupendous enterprise, and by pulpit, and printing press, by legislative enactment, and public spiritedness of utterance, help on what will be either with us or without us the mightiest exposition ever seen; the London, the Vienna, the Paris fairs a child's pinwheel show compared with it.

A Great Advantage to the East.

"Mark these two thoughts: the fair at Chicago will be a $60,000,000 exposition and it will be in the final result of as great advantage to this cluster of seaboard cities as it will be to Chicago. Through our harbor will come the most of the foreign fabrics and products. The foreign people who come will for the most part be men of means and their patronage of these cities as they pass through twice will be valuable beyond estimate. As to the size and grandeur of that exposition have you a clear idea? Its buildings will cover 600 acres of ground. The great nations of Europe have their agents this moment in America struggling for whole acres of space in which to set forth their fabrics.

Painted by a Master Hand.

"The manufacturers and liberal arts building will cover thirty-two acres, its roof of iron and glass, hovering 150 feet above ground and its columns suggesting Parthenons American instead of Grecian. The government building, with its octagonal dome, 120 feet in diameter, and with its walls encompassing a national museum, demonstrating what our government has done in war and peace; and a life saving station, telling how the ship wrecked are saved from the deep, a building surrounded by lawns and promenades dipping to the sea. The casino and pier, with nine pavilions, amid which you pass on fairy bridge or Venetian gondola; the waters in front by night having lamps sunken beneath the surface, so that it will be a sea of glass mingled with fire. The machinery hall, to contain the triumphs of invention the world around; the world, a million dollars to be expended in its construction, the ceiling glorified with all opulence of color, and the building crowned with a dome and exquisite work of statues, a great palace to display the results of the brawn and brain of the Nineteenth century.

Eve and the Woman's Building.

"The electrical building, where will be shown as never before what can be done with fire, electric lights masked behind triumphal arches. The transportation building in which the whole railroad world will be dramatized. The horticultural building, a half heaven full of flowers. The woman's building, where Eve, whose pomological fondness turned the race out of paradise, will turn them in again. The fisheries building that will demonstrate that the chief resource of the world's food has hardly yet been drawn upon. The art palace, which shall be a Louvre, a Luxembourg, a Vatican, a Dresden, combined into one great bloom of pictures and in one Alpine snowdrift of statues. The administration building, the naval exhibit, the hall of mines and mining, the agricultural building, majestic, and educational, and radiant, and the pride of America and the world.

They'll All Be There.

"We shall feel none of the reactions which are oft to be felt in a city where a great fair is done. We congratulate Chicago on her securing the fair. We congratulate our seaboard cities just as much on the advantages they will surely gain. And then we are to have the great display of shipping in our harbor, the first act in that great drama of celebration. Now let us wake up to our national opportunity and instead of spending so much time in deploring the seeming disaster of not having the World's fair in us, rejoice that so many advantages will surely be ours with none of the disadvantages. From this time on let our lukewarmness give way to one great national buzz for the World's Columbian exposition."

Melba's Husband Bought Off.

PARIS, Nov. 27.—La Lanterne is authority for the statement that the Orleans-Melba scandal has been quieted. According to that journal the Duc d'Aumale has placed 250,000 francs at the disposal of his ecratic grandnephew, which has proved sufficient to appease the ire of the belligerent Captain Armstrong.

Jay Gould Out of Wall Street.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—A morning paper says that Jay Gould has just stated for publication that he is out of Wall street forever. "I am," he said, "out of Wall street, and am not interested, directly or indirectly, in market quotations. Mr. Gould stated that he was feeling well and growing stronger daily.

ALBANY, Nov. 27.—A certificate of incorporation of the Humanitas company was filed with the secretary of state. It is proposed to establish and carry on a sanitarium at Lakewood for the special treatment and cure of alcoholism, the opium habit and the use of tobacco. The capital stock is $400,000.

To Pay the Archbishop's Fine.

PARIS, Nov. 27.—The subscription opened by The Figaro to cover the fine imposed upon the archbishop of Aix and the costs of his trial is completed. It took but a single day to reach this result. The Figaro announces that it has received 5,000 francs. Many of the French nobility were among the subscribers.

It Was Not All Imagination.

"Good night," she said and held her hand
Upon his manly breast;
And he, accepted, homeward turned,
His soul with joy possessed.

PALMER AND THE REBEL FLAG.

He Refers to It in Very Strong Language at a Banquet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—But, in doing honor to the people of the south, they should not confound us with that stinking old rag of treason." These were the words of General John Palmer, commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, in the course of his remarks yesterday at the banquet given in his honor in the Clarendon hotel, Brooklyn. There was an outburst of applause from many of the Grand Army leaders who were present, while others smiled and whispered that the general was "excited."

General Palmer's remarks follow:

"There is no class of men on God's earth that are half so appreciated for their gallantry and valor as those who fought against us. Their bravery is reflected credit on American valor, and whom we are so willing to forgive, as the soldiers of the south. But we cannot forget the loss of hundreds of millions of money and of the lives of hundreds of thousands of men who are now lying in their graves be cause of the rebellion. In doing honor to the people of the south they should not confound us with that stinking old rag of treason. I believe that the men who were in the struggle on the front want no fighting, but when we listen to the young orations who say that the Confederacy is to them an inspiration and that they will avenge the cause of their soldiers, it is too much to bear in silence. Loyalty to the Stars and Stripes will ever nerve us in the cause of the Union.

"What is repeated me more than anything else," said General Palmer, after the speech, "was the assertion made by a North Carolina orator that if the members of the Grand Army of the Republic don't want to march under our flag let them stay where they came from." The Atlanta Constitution has said that it had no record and that I couldn't take it up. I have a four years' record and I am not ashamed of it."

An official of the G. A. R. said last night: "I don't wonder that General Palmer should be excited at times because of the position he is in. Many letters which he received from time to time from anonymous correspondents in the south who have taken offense at his recent order in reference to the flag are being sent on to public occasions. He has even been threatened."

Among the veterans there was a feeling of regret that the Confederate flag question had been introduced.

MANTELL SUED FOR A SEPARATION.

The Famous Young Emotional Actor Estranged from His Wife.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Mrs. R. B. Mantell has engaged Howe & Hummel to procure a legal separation for her from the handsome and popular young actor whose name she bears. Divorce proceedings are not contemplated. Mrs. Mantell does not wish her husband to marry again, as he might if set free from the matrimonial bonds which, if reports be true, have been chafing him for some years. She wants a separation which will allow her the custody of her children and a suitable provision for their maintenance and her own.

Mrs. Mantell is known on the stage as Marie Bradon. She has for years acted in her husband's company, and has traveled with him incessantly.

She has three children and cares for nothing in the world outside of her head some husband and babies. Mr. Mantell has been spoiled, his friends say, by the adoration of silly women. He has received so many love letters and has been tempted so often off the stage that his head has been turned, they say.

He was married to his wife and children until about five years ago. Since then there have been several outbreaks of jealousy on the part of his wife, directed usually against actresses in Mr. Mantell's company. She makes certain statements concerning matters of recent occurrence in the company, which, if proven, will not only blast the virtuous reputation of Robert Mantell, but also bring into unpleasant prominence some actresses who are more famous for physical beauty than for brilliancy of talent.

IS VON CAPRIVI TO RETIRE?

Rumor That the German Chancellor May Soon Step Down.

BERLIN, Nov. 27.—A decided sensation was caused here by the announcement that Chancellor von Caprivi will, in all probability, soon resign the chancellorship of the German empire. The statement was made by a press correspondent by The Wochenblatt, a newspaper edited by Deputy Arendt. The Wochenblatt says Von Caprivi is weary of his position, office and that this fact has caused him to arrive at the decision referred to. It is inferred that the retirement of Chancellor von Caprivi is not definitely decided upon and that it is among the strong probabilities.

The chancellor's enemies, so soon as this report gained circulation, started the rumor that Von Caprivi has had a serious misunderstanding and that he has adopted the old Bismarckian tactics of threatening to resign unless he has his own way. They add that he will find that "Young William" will not put up with any such "bluffing."

Of course coupled with this rumor is the report that should Von Caprivi retire Prince Bismarck may be recalled to power.

The Kaiser as a Preacher.

BERLIN, Nov. 27.—The Freisinnige Zeitung says that a book is being published of sermons preached by the kaiser while yachting in Norway. The book is entitled: "The Voice of the Lord Upon the Waters," and in the preface it is said that it is Hanoverian who speaks his thoughts in the absence of a clergyman.

FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN.

INFORMATION AND AMUSEMENT HAPPILY BLENDED HERE.

A Pleasant Hour's Reading That Will Not Interfere With Studies—All Work and No Play Would Make Jack a Dull Boy.

"Six and two, and four and three—
How these sums do puzzle me!
Five and seven, nine and eight—
Figures right across my slate!
Such a bright and sunny day
Is the very time for play;
How I wish that school were done!
Quickly to the fields I'd run."

"Come, in earnest now begin,"
Speaks a little voice within;
"Those who do their best indeed,
Surely shall at last succeed.
Workers, patient workers never
Can grow worthy, wise or clever;
Whether work be great or small,
Child, be faithful still in all."

ADVICE GRATIS.

A Very Enjoyable Feature of an Evening Party.

This amusement involves considerably little mental exertion, but lots of fun. Each player is provided with a slip of paper, on which he is to write a piece of advice, which may be either original, or, if he lacks imagination, a proverb, or a mere piece of copyslip morality. The papers are then folded and shaken up in a hat. Each person draws one, and reads it aloud for the information of the company, first declaring, without seeing it, what kind of advice it is; e.g., good, very good, uncalled for, or totally mistaken.

Thus Miss A. declares that her piece of advice is "very good," and finds that she is advised not to spend so much time at her looking glass.

Mr. B. declares his piece of advice "extremely appropriate," and finds that the sentiment conveyed by the paper he has drawn is that, if he wasn't quite so conceited, he wouldn't be a bad sort of fellow.

Carats.

It is very likely you have heard pieces of gold jewelry, especially rings, spoken of as so many carats fine. But I do not believe you know the meaning of the expression, so I will tell you. A carat of gold receives its name from the carat seed, or seed of the Abyssian coral flower. This was at one period made useful when gems or gold (uncoined) were used in eastern trading, and so came about the peculiar and now general use of the word. Twenty-two carats fine means that out of twenty-four parts twenty-two are gold and the rest alloy.

A Matter of Sex.

It is a well-established principle of economics that the young man who would get up with the sun should not stay up later than 10 o'clock with the daughter.—Lancaster Times.

There was once a young woman of Chester,
Who was eager to sing when one pressed her;
When she once got a start
She would sing with such art
That it took twenty men to arrest her.
—Harper's Bazar.

HARD THINGS TO SAY.

They Are Excellent Practice for the Tongue, However.

"Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers; a peck of pickled peppers Peter Piper picked. If Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers, where's the peck of pickled peppers Peter Piper picked?"

"Thou wast'd'st the rickety stiff over the mountain-height cliffs, and clearly saw'st the full-orb'd moon."

"When a twister twisting, would twist him a twist,
For twisting a twist three twists he will twist,
But if one of the twists untwists from the twist,
The twist untwisting untwists the twist."

"Robert Rowley rolled a round roll round; a round roll Robert Rowley rolled round. Where rolled the round roll Robert Rowley rolled round?"

"Bandy-legged Bornabo Mustasche Whiskerinos, the bald but brave Bumbardino of Bagdad, helped Abormilque Bue-Beard, Bashaw of Balmendeb, to beat down an abominable Bumble Foafshaw."

EXPLANATIONS OF FOREIGN WEIGHTS.

That Will Be a Benefit to all Children to Learn.

The rates of exchange and price of gold here are to be taken into account in forming a comparison between foreign markets and our own:

ENGLISH.—In round numbers, count for a pound sterling marked thus (£), $4.86; for a shilling, marked thus (s), 24 cents; for a penny, marked thus (d.), two cents.

CONTINENT OF EUROPE.—A franc, composed of 100 centimes, marked thus (f.), is 19 cents; five centimes are equal to one cent. In France a kilo is about 1 1-5 pounds. In Austria a florin, equal to 50 kreutzers, is worth 40 cents. The German florin is 40 cents. In Prussia a thaler, equal to 30 silver groschen, is worth 71 cents. In Hamburg a marco bank, equal to 16 shillings, is worth 36 cents. In Holland a guilder or florin, equal to 100 Dutch cents, is worth 41 cents. A Holland centner is equal to about 100 pounds, a Prussian centner to 103 pounds.

Answers to Last Conundrums.

1. Invisible green.
2. D K.
3. Absence of body.
4. Tapering day.
5. Because it's the grub that makes the butter-fly.
6. The letter M.
7. A cat caught (cat'ch).
8. A plover.
9. The one is a photo-tedendron and the other is a cold day dumpling. (You surely wouldn't wish for a greater difference than that.)
10. A bald head.
11. Because it is the centre of light.
12. B-cause we cannot be wed without it.
13. Hope—hop.
14. Because one tongue is enough for any woman.
15. Yew. (This a riddle which should be used with due precaution.)
16. Because none but the brave deserve the fair (fare).

Usefulness of the Orange Tree.

Those who think that in its delicious fruit the entire usefulness of the orange tree is centered are very much mistaken. On the contrary, its flowers furnish by distillation an essential oil that enters into many delicate perfumes. Again, the early unripened fruit gives the distiller a volatile oil for other perfumes used in all nice foreign cologne water. Meanwhile the long, straight shoots are sold immediately for walking-sticks, and the yellow-grained wood is in great demand for fancy furniture and inlaid work. A water is obtained from the flowers that is used to disguise the taste of medicines and to flavor cookery, and another oil of value is yielded by the rind.

The Rat.

I hardly think I am a bird;
And I will tell you why:
I've not one feather in my wings,
Although I fit and fly.

When other birds have gone to bed,
All but my friend the owl,
Like him, among the ruins old,
I love to pry a prowl.

From ancient tower and hollow tree,
I sometimes venture down,
To flutter, like a butterfly,
Above some little town.

When, to my dark and dreary home
I go to seek repose,
I want no pillow for my head,
I hang upon my toes!

She could talk in seven languages
And paint on china plates,
She could dance the latest dances
Or parallelogram on skates;
She could write the sweetest verses
About love and human strife,
But ere couldn't point a lead pencil
To save her precious life.

GRAMMAR IN RHYME.

Here is How Your Parents Learned the Parts of Speech.

The following useful edition is well calculated to assist the memory in recollecting the nine parts of speech. Young people commencing the study of the English language will do well to commit the lines to memory:

1. Three little words you often see,
   Are articles a, an and the.
2. A noun's the name of any thing,
   As school or garden, hoop or swing.
3. Adjectives tell the kind of noun,
   As great, small, pretty, white or brown.
4. Instead of nouns the prosouns stand—
   As I want you to lend me a hand.
5. Verbs tell of something to be done,
   To read, count, sing, laugh, jump or run.
6. How things are done the adverbs tell,
   As slowly, quickly, ill or well.
7. Conjunctions join the words together,
   As men and women, wind or weather.
8. The preposition stands before
   A noun as in or through a door.
9. The interjection shows surprise,
   As Oh! how pretty! Ah! how wise!

The whole are called nine parts of speech,
Which reading, writing, speaking, teach.

MUSICAL FRIGHT.

Here is a Parlor Game That Will Interest Old and Young.

One of the company takes a seat at the piano, and plays a lively air. A row of chairs, in number one less than that of the players, are arranged down the middle of the room. These are placed close side by side, but facing in alternate directions, and the company march round them in single file, to the sound of the music; and the moment the performer ceases to play, each endeavors to secure a seat. The player who is left standing has to pay a forfeit, and is "out," and remains seated, or one of the chairs is then removed, and the march round them resumed. This process is repeated till all the players save one are "out," that one being the winner, and entitled to adjudicate upon the forfeits of the rest.

MUSICAL FRIGHT.

It should be mentioned that sitting down improperly, i. e., before the music has ceased, is also a cause of a forfeit; and if the player be a good executant, much fun may be occasioned by his introducing what are apparently concluded chords, and thus baffling incautious players into a premature subsidence, or, on the other hand, pulling up short in the very middle of a musical phrase when appears to be good for at least another dozen bars.

GOOD HEALTH

THE HANDS.

The Attributes of a Beautiful Hand and How to Secure Them.

The chief attributes of a beautiful hand as sung by bards and written of by novelists in the description of their heroines seem to be whiteness, smallness or shapeliness. The first and last of these qualifications can be acquired, although Dame Nature may have withheld the fairylike proportion so much admired.

Roughness, hardness and redness are often attributed to the male hand by writers. In "Paradise Lost" there is an allusion to "his red right hand." Climate also has a great deal to do with the color and texture of the skin. It may often be noticed that white, silken hands are possessed by American and Anglo-Indian ladies. The enforced idleness induced by tropical heat, or other causes, has a tendency to make life and climate, certainly do produce these white, slender hands.

A great many whitening applications are on the market, some being highly lauded. Before, however, purchasing any unguents, we would advise ladies to borrow some of their fathers' or brothers' evening gloves. For a month or six weeks these gloves should be worn in bed. Apply any good whitening preparation, after washing the hands in warm water and using some good soap. Rub in the whitening ointment, giving an extra rubbing to the backs of the hands. Anything of a greasy nature well rubbed in tends to fatten, and so a thin hand can be made softer.

Draw the fingers out, and if the tips are flat pinch them persistently, making the object of the pressure to obtain a hogshead nail. Careful manicuring, of course, makes the nails themselves pretty, but excessive manicuring is injurious. Lastly, draw on the gloves, which naturally will be now too big, and fasten them as long as no sense of stopping the circulation is felt.

Glycerin and rose water, mixed in the proportions of one-third glycerin to two-thirds rose water, is very good for the hands. The great secret of success in skin unguents is to find out what suits individual cuticles and use it.

On going to bed young ladies who suffer from red arms and elbows, or that ugly appearance like unboiled veal, should thoroughly massage them with their toilet cream or pomade, and then quickly powder with any reliable powder.

Method of Sterilizing Milk.

To kill all the bacteria usually found in milk—and there is always a wonderfully great and diversified army of them—it requires to be heated a few minutes at about 224 degs. F. A special steam steriliser is necessary to attain such a high temperature. The same effect may be obtained usually by boiling the milk about thirty minutes. Heating a few minutes between 158 degs. and 176 degs. is sufficient to destroy temporarily the energy of a large number of milk microbes, including several disease germs, but does not kill many of them, and is not, therefore, sufficient as a preservative means. This is the temperature (about 167 degs.), the application of which is known as pasteurization.

The Bacteriological World, authority for the foregoing, says that it is not only to destroy disease germs that sterilization is indicated. Indeed, in infant feeding it is chiefly to prevent the irritative action of acid produced by microbes or germs of all kinds, whether truly milk ferments, pathogenic bacteria, or organisms harmless under ordinary circumstances.

Milk coagulases, acidifies, under the influence or vegetative phenomena of various ferment organisms. The acid produced has the most baneful action on the delicate stomach and intestinal canal of the child. Sterilization of fresh milk destroys the property of the germs before any acid is produced by their process of nutrition.

ETIQUETTE

LADIES' LUNCHEON.

How to Seat the Guests and an Attractive Menu for the Occasion.

At a ladies' luncheon the hostess takes the head of the table and places the guest of honor at her right hand.

Unless cards are used, the hostess should have so clear an idea in her own mind of where each guest is to sit as to be able to direct them to their places without confusion. It is not necessary for the guests to go in in couples. The hostess usually takes the guest of honor, and the others fall into line as they please.

Harpar's Bazar, which is authority for the foregoing, says that "A pretty lunch might comprise bouillon; small squares of fried halibut and Parisian potatoes; either sweetbread patties, broiled chicken, or lamb chops with green peas; tomato mayonnaise salad, ices or charlotte russe, or some other dessert; fruit and coffee; salted almonds and olives as hors d'oeuvres. The entree may be omitted if desired.

Hints About Invitations.

Invitations to small and rather informal entertainments can be written on a lady's visiting card with perfect propriety, according to an authority on "Manners," though informal notes are more customary. In inviting the different members of a family the name of the daughter or daughters is frequently placed after that of the parents on a card of invitation, but a son should always receive a separate card. When several sisters in a family receive an invitation addressed to "The Misses," it is usually understood that not more than two of them will avail themselves of the invitation. Invitations for any general entertainment sent to a country house where guests are stopping are as a rule addressed to "Mr. and Mrs. Green and party," this invitation including the sons and daughters of the house as well as the visitors.

Novelties in Note Paper.

Fashionable note paper includes pale blue, old pink, cream and copper colors. The paper itself is quite plain, makes no attempt at ornament and only gains effect by its own beautiful color. Sometimes the top left corner of white paper has an imitation "dog's ear," on which a pretty black or red monogram is embossed. Some colored correspondence cards show a gold edge and small initials, and are now made in the long shape, with envelopes to match.

Now gowns are to be seen with princesse back and coat fronts. These are designed for reception and carriage toilets.

This Date in History—Nov. 27.

8 B. C.—Death of Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus, Roman poet, at the court of Augustus, born 65 B. C.

311—Charles, first king of France (according to the Frankish classification), died at Paris; born about 68; he adopted Christianity because of a victory over the Alamanni, having made a vow to that effect, and all his army did the same and became Christians.

1660—Vincent de Paul, saint, founder of the Sisters of Charity, died at St. Lazare, near Paris; born 1576 in Gascony.

1710—Robert Lowth, poet and divine and son of William Lowth, the commentator, born in Winchester; died 1787.

1778—John Murray, Byron's famous publisher, born in London; died there 1843; he paid Byron but £600 for the first two cantos of "Childe Harold."

1826—Battle of Seroguesville and La Vergne, Tenn.

1863—Grand reconnaissance and fighting about Ringgold, Greyeville and Taylor's Ridge, Ga., by Fourteenth and Fifteenth corps and Granger's division of the Twelfth corps.

Just the Same.

He had a hatbox in one hand and an umbrella in the other and was making good time down Chambers street the rain when he struck something soft, took a slide and brought up in a heap on the walk. A man who was closely following him came to a halt to inquire:

"Strike a banana peel?"

"I—I think it was a peach skin," replied the other, as he sought to get his legs under him.

"Oh! It was? I see. Answers the purpose just the same however." And he passed on and left the other sitting helpless in a pool of water.—New York Evening World.

An Enviable Position.

"Mamma," said Chippy Oldblock, looking up from the newspaper that he was slowly spelling out, "I should like to be Annie L. Jerkins' little boy."

"What makes you say that, dear?" asked Mrs. Oldblock. She had tried hard to do her duty by him, and it grieved her to think that his affections should go out to some one else. "Why, you see, this paper says that the Annie L. Jerkins has just come into port with her spanker gone."—Boston Post.

Some Doubt.

"They say Rousseau has water on the brain."

"Where did he get it?"

"Want—the water?"

"No—the brain."—Life.

A warrant was issued yesterday for the arrest of John W. Cross, No. 4 Arlington avenue, (Hetfield's row,—Fourth Ward.) He has registered in the First Ward, from Schorb's, a saloon, and the charge is illegal registration on complaint of Mr. George W. Moore, as a member of the Board of Registry. Cross is only nineteen years old. He has disappeared. Complaint is made that Constable Moffett who is a relative of Combine Moffett does not serve these warrants promptly. His action in the case of Fred. S. Moore is severely criticised. More arrests are to follow Monday.

NORTH PLAINFIELD M. E. CHURCH.

The New Methodist Church.

Above is an illustration of the beautiful North Plainfield M. E. Chapel, a unique structure of the gothic type situated on the southwest corner of Somerset street and Park place. In its construction and arrangement it is complete in itself, though intended as a mere adjunct to the future church edifice which will without doubt, be a necessity in the fast growing part of our community in which this chapel is located. It might be looked upon as a sort of twin offspring of the mother church of the Methodist Episcopal denomination situated on West Front street, the companion chapel, which has sprung into existence almost simultaneously being located on Fourth street, corner of Monroe avenue. The North Plainfield building is a brick structure measuring fifty-seven feet six inches by sixty feet, exclusive measurements on the ground and has a capacity for about 400 persons. A gallery is provided at one end of the audience room, under which is a large class room separated from the main room by sliding doors. The main audience room is in the cruciform, the transepts being separated from the nave by graceful semicircular arches, three on each side, resting on neat columns. From these same columns the large arched ceiling ribs springing, thus paneling the ceiling in a very pleasing manner. The side walls throughout will be waincoted and the entire trim and finish are neat, simple and consistent. Plastering will be done with a sand finish suitable for future decoration.

The windows will be of simple, neat, leaded glass work in quiet colorings harmonious with the tone of color predominating in interior finish of woodwork.

This little structure though quiet and modest in its bearing reflects much credit on the enterprise of a worthy people who have conceived and carried into effect its construction, and we congratulate the society on possessing a building in this one, which is second to none in this city in all of its appointments as well as cost, which will be kept within the limit of about $7,000 exclusive of the land on which it is placed. The structure is built from plans of Mr. O. S. Teale, that most gifted of architects.

BREVITIES.

—Reform Hall meeting to-morrow night.

—Look in VanEmburgh and White's show window this evening. They say you will surely buy one.

—At the close of the preaching service in the First Baptist church to-morrow morning, the ordinance of the Baptism will be administered.

—At a meeting of the North Plainfield Township Committee held last evening Messrs. A. J. Winckler, L. E. Barkalow and Jacob Long were appointed committees on the opening and widening of Pence street.

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

The Misses Emma Beach and Fannie Clark have returned to their homes in Newark after a short and enjoyable visit to Mr. and Mrs. John N. Gulick, of Park Place, North Plainfield.

John F. Wiechers, of corner Grant avenue and Eighth street, is one of the partners in the firm of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co., of New York, which failed yesterday with liabilities variously estimated at from $1,000,000 to $4,000,000.

Painless Dentistry.

Dr. Brewster is to be at the office of Dr. Thiers for the next three days, commencing Monday, to extract teeth by his painless method. There are hundreds in this vicinity who can testify to the painlessness of the method, and many, it is thought, will avail themselves of this opportunity. tf

QUESTIONS AT ISSUE.

PLAINLY EXPRESSED THAT ALL MAY UNDERSTAND.

The Unjustifiable Course of the Majority in Common Council—Leading Democrats and Republicans Unite in Opposing It.

To the Voters of Plainfield:

The attention of the voters of Plainfield is respectfully directed to the present condition of municipal affairs and to the importance of the approaching election.

Until recently every Common Council that has governed the city of Plainfield has enjoyed the confidence of our citizens. The present Council does not. On the contrary, its acts have excited the apprehensions of many of our citizens, who have instituted legal proceedings to prevent the execution of ordinances which seem to them to seriously endanger the interests of the city. And we think that any impartial observer will see that there are good reasons for these proceedings and for the existence of the apprehensions which have led to their institution.

It is proposed by a majority of the Council to make a contract which contemplates the introduction of a second system of water works. Such a course seems to us to admit of no possible justification. It has been suggested that it will create competition. Exactly the reverse is the fact. The Plainfield Water Supply Company has obtained a charter which cannot be set aside by the courts. If the second contract is made, the question then presented will be whether the party who owns it will put in a second plant or sell his contract to the company already in possession. It is obvious that no capitalist would furnish funds to put in a duplicate plant, and the result will be that the contract will be sold to the Water Supply Company. And, as the proposed second contract provides for the payment of twenty-five dollars a hydrant for flushing the sewers, and the Water Supply Company has already agreed to perform the same duty for six dollars less, the execution of a second contract will inevitably destroy all competition and tax the people of Plainfield unjustly and wholly unnecessary tax of six dollars a hydrant.

Is there any conceivable reason why the city should pay $25 a hydrant when a the desired service can be secured for $19 a hydrant?

The injury to our streets if another water company is to take possession of them is a contingency of a serious character. The complications which would result if two plants were laid down in our city would be of the most serious character.

The introduction of sewers in the manner proposed by the ordinance which has been recently passed, seems to us to be a startling proposition. Every impartial person must recognize the fact that there are many systems which are highly objectionable. Some of the methods have been condemned in unqualified terms by competent authorities; no unwise selection would result in the permanent injury to the public health, and an irreparable depreciation of values. And yet the citizens of Plainfield are kept in entire ignorance of the plans which are favored by the Common Council. We are told that we are to have a system of sewers, but what system we are not informed, and our efforts to ascertain come to nothing.

Is it not contrary to all reason to ask intelligent people to approve of legislation so blind, unreasonable and dangerous? Certainly we have a right to know what is to be done with our streets and property, particularly in a matter which involves directly the health of our families and the community.

Feeling that we can, with propriety, take the co-operation of all who desire to promote the interests of our city, in securing an intelligent and business-like administration of public affairs, we respectfully solicit your serious consideration of the questions which are at issue in the approaching election. The Republican candidates are men of character who represent an element which is not connected in any sight of and all unite in giving Plainfield such a Council as ought to be chosen.

SMITH AGAIN EXPOSED.

HIS LATEST MISREPRESENTATIONS REPUTED NINE MONTHS' AGO.

"The News" of Mar. 7th and Jan. 8th of This Year Completely Answer His Latest Tricky Statements.

Combine Smith is driven to desperation. In a communication last night in his organ he tries to throw the blame for the increase of public taxes upon the Council of 1889. This charge is not new and was completely answered in THE NEWS of Mar 7th last, nearly nine months ago but set up again Smith with his usual trickiness thinks the people have forgotten all about the matter. Possibly they have, so we herewith republish below the exposure at that time of his falsehoods and his attempts to deceive the people. It is a communication from Mr. F. E. Marsh, a member of the 1889 Council. Smith's trick in this instance is in trying to make it appear that they were left without money to pay a debt of $22,000. He conceals the fact that the city treasury had $25,000 to pay with. Here it is:

EXPLODING ANOTHER BUBBLE.

PUT FORTH BY THE COMBINE.—A SCATHING AND CONVINCING LETTER, SHOWING HOW PUBLIC FUNDS ARE WASTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—It has been so often quoted in certain quarters that the Council of 1889 left such a large amount of bills and outstanding notes for the Council of 1890 to pay that some of our citizens may be led to believe that the Council of 1890, besides carrying their own burdens, had to bear a large part of those belonging to the Council of 1889.

An intelligent understanding of the financial resources of each Common Council and a careful examination of the figures will show the increase for the year 1890, but recently published, and of the report of 1889 will show the utter absurdity of the claim made in behalf of the Council of 1890.

The taxes of each current year are never available for the use of the Council of that year until after December 20th of each year—the last collection of each Council.

As a result each Council has to borrow money on its note in anticipation of the collection of the current taxes, and necessarily the notes in part fall due after the expiration of the Councilmanic term and have to be paid by the next Council, out of moneys collected or provided for by the Council making said note. So with the bills for salary, etc., for the month of December.

One would think from the claims made for the Council of 1890 that the previous Council left the treasury bankrupt, but what do the treasurer's reports for the two years show?

The Council of 1890 handed over to the Council of 1891 in cold cash on deposit in the bank the sum of twenty-five thousand and seven hundred and two dollars and seventy five cents ($25,702.75) available for the use of the city, out of which to pay notes for general fund $12,500, fire department $5,000, poor fund $2,500, and bills incurred about $5,000, amounting in all to $24,700.

Besides they had advanced from the general funds over $7,000 to pay county taxes in full, which was paid back to the general fund from county taxes as collected, leaving in fact the Council of 1890 bankrupt when more money was actually in the treasury than the total outstanding indebtedness called for? No Council ever made a better financial record than the Council of 1890, and this in the face of the fact that not one penny was received for liquor license during the whole year.

Now, how does the record of 1889 compare?

The last treasurer's report shows balance on general fund $3,449.26; fire department $6,873.81, in all $10,357.07 turned over by the Council of 1889 to pay note account general fund, $11,500; fire department $2,500, and unpaid warrants general fund $2,334.98. In all $16,394.98, to be paid out of $10,357.07.

In the poor fund there was a balance of $5,187.91 against which there stood three notes, $2,000 in all, due the bank, besides $1,000 borrowed from the general fund.

Including the poor fund there was left in bank only $13,925, with which to pay $19,394.98 of outstanding and a shortage of nearly $5,000—a legacy for the present Council!

The Council of 1891 paid out $4,000 out of its general fund on the county taxes to be repaid when the county taxes as collected—but even that added as cash in future leaves an actual deficit of nearly $1,000 for the Council of 1892 to make up, while figuring in the $7,000 likewise paid on county taxes by Council of 1889 as a part of the surplus left by the Council of 1890 it makes a clear surplus of $7,000 about turned over to the Council of 1892 some five installments.

Which financial record is the best?

Let it be borne in mind that the shortage of 1890 arises notwithstanding the Council of 1890 received in hard cash $11,500 more than the Council of 1889 actually imposed $1,000 more city tax on the people than any preceding Council.

And a number of outstanding bills to meet the false charge of the heavy financial burden the Council of 1889 left in the Council of 1890 to shoulder this article has been written and this comparison of the financial records has been made. No fault is meant to be found with the Council of 1890, but a little light turned on the page of history often makes clear what is somewhat dark. Facts are facts, and figures are interesting even if they are true.

F. E. MARSH.

In a previous communication (Jan. 8th, 1891), Mr. Marsh showed that with but two-thirds of the money (that is, $10,500 against $15,000 squandered by the "Combine's") better work had been done on the streets and concludes as follows:

Nowhere was there an impossible or impracticable or absolute grade insisted on when a practicable one had been established and a good street built. No attempt was made to hide the earth below the surface of the ground in any section, and no street that had been macadamized and made into a good, first-class roadway carrying water off satisfactorily, where before were mudholes, was interfered with, and on A WELL BUILT SURE DOWN A FOOT AND A HALF BELOW THE REST OF THE STREET, and the stone which had been spread there at a cost of 50 cents a running foot, scooped off and thrown away, and the street left a miserable quagmire for that block—because in ages gone there had been certain grade maps made establishing grades that were impracticable and had never been confirmed to, to any extent. The work done will compare favorably with that of 1889, and exceed it, and yet cost but a little over $10,000. "Justice to whom justice is due."

F. E. M.

A SORRY MASS MEETING.

THE COMBINE CONTROL AND ARE AS TRICKY AS USUAL.

"Charley" Lyman Calls Order, J. M. Dayton is Named Chairman, and Hetfield and Schoonmaker Speak, and We Show Their Statements False.

The "combine" held a mass meeting in Music Hall last night, and had an audience of less than 50 persons, many of whom were attracted by mere curiosity to see the game who have caused the citizens of Plainfield so much trouble during the past two years of power, secured by treachery, which defrauded the people of the representation they had voted at the polls. "In fact," said one present, "only the Regular Republicans and small boys, and it would leave scarcely anyone outside of the combine."

Mr. Charles Lyman, a young man until recently residing in Somerset county, called the meeting to order. He read a list of the vice-presidents, which it would be an insult to many of them to publish as associated with the combine at all, they having no intention of voting that way. Mr. Lyman, after calling on all in their treacherous grasp. When Mr. Lyman had read the list he named John M. Dayton, chairman, he hurriedly jumped off the stage, as if ashamed of the company present.

One of the "vice-presidents," ex-Mayor V. P. Randolph, said that if he had been at the meeting when his name was called, he would have demanded that it be taken off, as he had given no such authority to put it on. He denounced the putting it on the list as a piece of cowardly, and there was a number of others known to be of the same mind, notably Mr. D. W. Pond, who sends us a letter to that effect to-day, adding that he always votes the straight Republican ticket, believing the primaries the place to settle any differences.

The five members of the combine, Hetfield, Hoffman, Smith and Spangenberg, occupied seats on the stage, alone, with John M. Dayton and Justice L. P. Wadsworth.

Mr. Dayton, on taking the chair, made a few remarks, upholding the combine, demanding the water company, and urging substantially that our only salvation was in giving a sewerage franchise to A. M. Low & Co., Kingston, N. Y., who are said to have had no experience whatever in building such a system. Mr. Dayton also warns (what the combine have voted to give them), "the inhabitants of the city will be compelled to pay Low & Co. the sum of six thousand, two hundred dollars per year, for flushing sewers with the bills for salary, etc., and does not propose to acquire." All this and the combine's rascality, Mr. Dayton of course approves of, judging by his conduct.

Combine Hetfield was introduced as the next speaker, and review the deeds of the Council for the past two years, they could not well refuse to become, in his estimation, veritable angels. They really live to-day in the Pools' Paradise.

Mr. Hetfield said that during the night his having had a bar-room opened at mid-night in violation of the ordinances that he could not help the people their appetites at the bar, about their treatment of Chief Carey, for doing his duty, about the Council refusing to allow the bonded for $40,000 to buy Miller's Saloon building for a City Hall. Hetfield having introduced the water ordinance into Council and had plans prepared as already reported in THE NEWS, he had had nothing to say about he and Moffett and Spangenberg going to Trenton and having the water bill amended so as not to take away from the citizens the right to vote on the question of sewerage and on the sale of bonds.

He had nothing to say about these things—all matters of record—and the way public money was being squandered by the combine, an instance being where Spangenberg had three electric lights put up on his and brother-in-law's private property, and two lights in Smith's district placed at Hetfield Lyman's barn on private property called Elizabeth street, not owned by the city, and hundreds of lights are now burned used by no one, and all at the public expense. He said nothing of the way the combine have treated the citizens in the store which to proper condition will require thousands of dollars.

He said the combine came into power the city had no modern public improvements. Well, we might say it had no such improvements as a bonded debt, schemes or schemers to bleed the taxpayers and increase taxes as they had never been increased before, and had kept honest citizens who were also tax-payers and brothers-in-law from statistics for five years had shown Plainfield to be the healthiest city in New Jersey, with a death rate per cent. equivalent only eight per cent. to New Brunswick for instance, our nearest neighbor of relative importance, and Plainfield was an exceptional case, as witness Rahway and Elizabeth.

He said C. K. Moore still holds the water franchise, which the Plainfield Supply Company had purchased to have got when they in good faith bought him out. But they only got the machinery and will be sold. Now the spirit of trickiness permeates everything the combine does. Of course a Court in Equity can set aside the sale as a sham over all that was bought of him.

But our space will not permit to go over all this matter. It has been gone over so often in THE NEWS in the past two years that our readers must be familiar with it.

Mr. F. X. Schoonmaker followed Hetfield. He has a siren voice that would make black appear white, and because of this gift he has received as high as fifty dollars a night. It is business to him. How much he was paid for last night's work to make the black record of the combine appear white we don't know, but substantially the financial standing of the combine—or lack of it—it is natural to inquire where they got the money. In an investigation by the Council we intend to elect may reveal where all the money of the taxpayers has gone.

Said a gentleman in the audience: "Ah, I see Schoon is erecting off his old trick. He begins with his overcoat on, and talks until he thinks he can make a point, then takes it off to secure from the gallery gods applause. He has the stage business down fine."

But the following quotations from the Mayor's messages to the Council, dated May 11 and Sept. 15, are a complete refutation of the gross mis-statements made by Messrs. Hetfield and Schoonmaker:

[Extract from special message of May 11th.]

"But regardless of my own judgment it is strongly in favor of construction ownership and control of sewers by the city and that the Legislature has authorized cities to issue bonds for this purpose I should only favor such a step with the consent of the people expressed at the polls. I do not think that the interests of Plainfield will suffer if the question is postponed until the people are ready to take up and settle it for themselves."

Extract from Mayor Gilbert's Message Republished from The News of Sept. 15.

I realize full well the necessity that exists for a sewerage system in the thickly settled portion of the city, and I shall be glad to co-operate with your Honorable Body in an effort to secure the same. If in my judgment, due regard is shown for the interests of the city, in the selection of a system and the contract for same, I cannot, however, look favorably on this effort which begins by leaving the selection of the system and the method of constructing entirely discretionary with the party who seeks the franchise, whose only interest in the city is to make what he can out of it.

Yet Messrs. Hetfield and Schoonmaker, knowing them to be false, would have us substance the following statements:

Mr. Hetfield says: "Now my Honorable Mayor says that he believes that we need a system of sewerage. He believes we ought to have it in the thickly settled portions of the city. He says so in his message, his veto, which every one of the Little Five Grocery stands. To do so my Mayor says you must bond our city, and the people on the outskirts must pay the interest on the Bonds."

Mr. Schoonmaker said: "The party who refused to be in power we say to bond the city to the extent of $800,000."

The meeting was very tame, and made more voters for the regular Republican ticket.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The convicts in the penitentiaries will get the benefit of the Pennsylvania law fixing eight hours as a day's labor in institutions controlled by the state. Jan. 1 the law takes effect, and after that the prisoners will have leisure hours to improve their minds and become physical athletes.

It is a gloomy comment on the honesty of the civilized individual, the remark of a distinguished inventor that an invention of any merit is always stolen and the original discoverer has no redress because of the rascally quips and resorts of patent lawyers and their unscrupulous employers. There is something to the feeling in the public mind, anyhow, that inventions ought to be given to the people free.

The Financial Reform Association Almanac has been putting in a quiet way before the English people some facts as to the cost of royalty. Queen Victoria, for instance, receives $1,360,000 a year, besides having several palaces at her disposal. The Prince of Wales, who is always in poverty, has had from the British people since he came of age not quite $15,000,000, which would give him an income of half a million a year. Even an American millionaire could live on that, and a prince ought to be able to do it and keep out of debt besides.

It is a fact that in general the greatest naturalists have been slow to learn from books. They learn from things, not from books. Darwin was very slow. At eight years old he knew little of printed lessons, but had a notable collection of shells, plants, coins and minerals. It may comfort some parents to remember that in his childhood Darwin was a great liar, that is to say a liar in the line of boasting of what wonderful things he could do by his experimenting. His imagination was so powerful that he seemed not always to know the difference between what was really true and what he imagined to be true. Not all youthful liars make Darwins however.

Alas, They Quarrel!

When Christianity first began to gain sway over the world it was owing greatly to a fact mentioned by one of the ancient heathen as follows, "See how these Christians love one another." Whenever any great movement has radically changed the thought and action of an age morally, the same fact has come uppermost—the devotion and love for one another of the little band of apostles who heralded the new movement.

As if mindful of this fact, the theosophists formulate as one of the motive principles of their cult "universal brotherhood." This is very beautiful. It is the dream of enthusiasts, prophets and martyrs. Theosophists could have made progress, if at all, by showing that they never were jealous; that they viewed all earthly ills and wrongs with indifference, sure enough, according to the tenets of their faith, that when a wrong is done the doer himself in the nature of things must pay the penalty in this life or some other. With this exalted belief, one has no need to punish a wrong done to himself. The doer invites the penalty when he commits the wrong, and no power in the universe can enable him to escape it.

With this lofty faith, anger or revenge should have no place in souls that seek and teach the divine wisdom. But, alas! we are told that at the very fountain head of theosophy there are quarrels and snubs as bitter and hot as among any of the outside unregenerate anywhere. Where is universal brotherhood? Is it anywhere at all? Is there any such thing?

Cotton Looms in the South.

It was said some years ago that New England could never compete with Old England in the manufacture of the finer grades of cotton goods. Yet in all but the finest of drss material New England now makes better cotton fabrics than Old England. In China our white goods are preferred to those of Europe.

The same story is repeated in reference to the competition between New England and the south. New England manufacturers say that the southern mills can never equal those of the north in the finer grades of cotton textiles. The south thereupon responds, "We shall see." New England manufacturers put forward as an advantage that cannot be overcome the fact that their mills are near to the consumers. On the other hand, southern manufacturers answer that their mills are on the very ground itself where the cotton is produced. Cheap fuel lies all about these mills and labor is cheaper. The cost of a bale of cotton to the manufacturer by the time it reaches Lowell from Savannah is within two cents of forty-six dollars. The cost of a bale of cotton at the local mills in the south is five dollars less than that.

In counting the cost of the raw material alone a southern mill consuming 3,000 bales annually can be operated for $25,000 less than a mill of the same capacity in the north. Then, as a southern journal unblushingly remarks, the southern mill has the advantage of "lower taxes and, in the majority of instances, entire exemption from taxes." This last seems enough to tempt the northern manufacturer to move his mills south.

VON CAPRIVI DENIES IT.

He Tells the Reichstag He Will Not Resign.

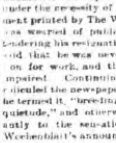
THE FRANCO-GERMAN SITUATION.

Prussia's Chancellor Says France Has a Strong Government and Does Not Threaten Germany, Whose Army, He Adds, Is Second to None on the Globe.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—In the reichstag Chancellor von Caprivi said that he was under the necessity of denying the statement printed by The Weckenblatt that he was wearied of public life and intended tendering his resignation. The chancellor said that he was never in a better condition for work, and that his health is not impaired. Continuing, the chancellor ridiculed the newspapers of Berlin for, as he termed it, "breeding the bacillus of inquietude," and otherwise referred pleasantly to the sensation caused by The Weckenblatt's announcement.

France Does Not Threaten.

Touching upon the subject of the alleged strained relations between Russia and Germany on account of the Czar's visit to Paris, the chancellor said incident, that the visit of Admiral Gervais' squadron to Cronstadt only emphasized what the whole world has long known to be a fact, namely, that France has a strong government, and that it does not threaten that of Germany, whose army is, he said, most distinctly defensive in character, though still the improvements being made in its organization and armament are as yet unfinished.



VON CAPRIVI.

Two Years' Compulsory Service.

Finally the chancellor said that the new bill bearing upon the terms of compulsory military service, proposed for the year 1892, would not increase its scope, and that a two years' period of serving under the colors would be one of its main features. The chancellor's speech was loudly applauded and has caused a considerable abatement of the feeling of uneasiness which has been prevailing for some time past owing to sensational political rumors and numerous financial crashes within the past five weeks.

The Emperor Backed Down.

There now seems to be no doubt that strained relations did really exist between the emperor and the chancellor, but that the former had since repented of his hasty action in regard to the matters which led up to the state of tension and that things have been smoothed over. Some idea of the sensation caused in Berlin by the Weckenblatt's story can be judged from the fact that the chancellor felt called upon to make a public denial of its truth. The Weckenblatt is to be enabled upon to furnish the source of its information regarding the chancellor and his alleged resignation. It was noticed that the chancellor was in better spirits than he has been for some time past, and this was attributed to his reconciliation with the emperor.

The Russo-Turkish Alliance.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—Mr. Goers has communicated to Emperor William and Chancellor von Caprivi a clear explanation as to the conferences held in Paris and the character of the Russo-French alliance therein achieved. The Russian statesman's recent interviews with President Carnot, M. de Freycinet, premier and minister of the interior, and M. Ribot, minister of foreign affairs, resulted in a definite agreement for an exclusively defensive alliance.

The alliance agreed upon differs in one most essential point from the triple alliance treaty, inasmuch as, while that makes the European status quo the basis of the maintenance of peace, the Russo-French combination aims at what M. de Giers has called "respect for treaties," which is equal to the limitation of Russian grip on Bulgaria and British evacuation of Egypt.

The Precursor of Actual War.

The same authority considers rumors from the Berlin embassy is that the Paris conferences of M. de Giers have resulted in a scheme to maintain diplomatic warfare against the Dreibund and England, awaiting a more propitious period for engaging in actual war. M. de Giers' communications assume the first importance, because they constitute the first official admission of the Russian government as to the powers that a Russo-French alliance has really been arranged.

China May Ask for Help.

BERLIN, Nov. 28.—It is reported here on diplomatic authority that China is unable to overcome the various forms of insurrection that confront the government and is about to beg the active assistance of England, Germany and America in the restoration of order.

Criminal Building in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The coroner's jury that investigated the death of Jerome White, caused by the fall of the Metropolitan Music hall during the cyclone here, returned a verdict that the accident was the result of carelessness in allowing the side walls to high above the front walls without other proper support, and that the owners of the building, the inspector of buildings, the contractor and the superintendent of the work are all to blame in the matter.

They Thumped the Professor.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—At the Old Sorbonne Professor Lacaz Eluthiers was lecturing on geology when a vessel full of acoustic explosives burst in the apartment nearby. The students extinguished the fire on his clothing, pounding and thumping him about with a vigor that the flames was superfluous for any meritorious purpose.

Moral Legislation in France.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—A committee of the chamber has rejected a bill for the prosecution of men living on the earnings of dissolute women. The reason given for rejecting the bill is that under French law the course of life pursued by such women is not criminal.

To Retaliate Against Newfoundland.

HALIFAX, N. S., Nov. 28.—The Herald says: "The time has come for the Canadian people to adopt measures of retaliation against Newfoundland, in view of the persistent refusal to extend to Canadian fishermen privileges which we have so generously extended to their people."

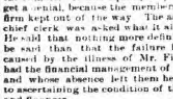
TROUBLES OF THE FIELD FAMILY.

Death, Illness, Insanity and Financial Embarrassments.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The illustrious Field family is experiencing the truth of the old saying that misfortunes never come singly. Cyrus W. Field has been prostrated by the death of his wife and is on a sick bed. The life of his daughter, Mary Grace, wife of Daniel Allen Lindley, is despaired of. His son, Edward Morse Field, is said to be suffering from mental derangement; and yesterday the assignment of the firm of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. was announced in the stock, produce and exchanges. The "Lindley" of the firm are Cyrus W. Field's son and son-in-law. The assignment of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. was made to Charles W. Field, of 2 Wall street, without preferences. Mr. Gould was the assignee of "Beacon" White's firm. Gresses at the liabilities range from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000.

CYRUS W. FIELD.

On the Stock exchange tongues wagged fast and furious. The report that securities pledged for collateral were missing went from mouth to mouth. It was impossible to get a clinching verification of the rumors. It was equally impossible to get a denial, because the members of the firm kept out of the way. The assignee's chief clerk was asked what it all meant. He said that nothing more definite could be said than that the failure had been caused by the illness of Mr. Field, who had the financial management of the firm and whose absence left them helpless as to ascertaining the condition of the books and finances.



CHILDREN'S CLOTHING.

Novelties in Materials and Styles for Very Little Girls.

Children's fashions this season are wonderfully varied and nearly all the new kinds of woolen cloths are being employed for them.

Many of the frocks for children of very tender years are made with long bodices, to which the skirts are sewn. A popular frock has a full skirt with many rows of black velvet and a short, full waist, with puffs in short sleeves. Coming from the under arm seams are square jacket fronts edged with rows of velvet, which showed up well on red in the example I saw. Long coats and paletots are to be the principal outdoor garments for juveniles. A camel's hair cloth coat reached to the heels, and had a deep sailor collar, and from beneath this came brown silk plaiting to the waist. A little paletot was composed of a very light beaver suede made with full cape, the sleeves slit up the back. Fur is a favorite trimming for children, and is much used on the long haired cloths employed for outdoor wear. In the cut is shown a child's coat in white cloth, thick and soft, with a full front in white poplin. It is trimmed with brown fur. The bonnet corresponds in material, color and trimmings.

CHILD'S BONNET AND COAT.

Children's indoor gowns for special occasions are made, many of them, in silk. Girls from two to five years of age wear large bonnets with soft crowns trimmed with ribbons and feathers. Larger girls wear large picturesque hats.

Silks and Satins.

It is announced that silk is once more to be generally worn. In Paris most of the gowns are either made of it entirely, or of silk combined with woolen stuffs. Fourteen years since silk has been universally worn. Though we are adopting bright colors, we have by no means turned our backs on black, and the new silk for the great and prettiest silks of the season have black grounds with brocaded flowers. Many of the black grounds appear shot with the color employed in the flowers. Some of the more important stripes are intended to be introduced with plain silk or woon, as petticoats for the skirt, and as trimmings for the bodices.

Bengaline has quite taken the place of faille, the newest has a thick and decided cord, and has been bought out under the name of Tyrolienne. Satin remains the most fashionable fabric for wedding gowns.

This Season's Jackets.

Jackets are nothing this season if not mannish. One seen was made in the same style as the covert coat worn by men. It was made of black cheviot with no seam down the center of the back. It fitted the figure like a sack and was fastened with large bone buttons.

Is Aimy to Go Free?

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 28.—The Monitor discusses at length the sentence in the case of Mrs. Jeremiah Almy and concludes as follows: "There is an intuitive confidence that some secret understanding has been arrived at, perhaps a gracious waiver or concession on the part of the defendant, of which the public are not yet informed; for it does not seem that unless there was some such secret agreement the pardoning station is undesirable and hazardous in the extreme."

Charged with Election Frauds.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 28.—Westmoreland county politicians are excited over the arrest of George P. Blackburn, of West Newton, on a charge of illegal voting. Blackburn is the solid supporter of his widowed mother. She was taken out dead, while two others were badly hurt.

At Work on His Message.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—There was no cabinet meeting yesterday, and the president put in several hours hard work on his annual message. The message is absorbing most of the president's time just now and he is hard at work upon it. He will probably finish it about next Friday.

BANKER BEAL'S SON BACK

He Pays $5,000 to the Bold Kidnapers.

INFLUENCED BY THE ROSS AFFAIR.

His Words to the Detectives Were, "First Let Let Me Find My Child and Then You Can Find the Kidnapers." Money Was No Object to Him.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 28.—The two-year-old son of Millionaire David T. Beals that was kidnaped by Lizzie Smith, a waiting maid in the household, while the family were at dinner, was returned at 9:45 last night on payment of a $5,000 ransom. In the afternoon Mr. Beals caused the following notice to be published:

$5,000 RANSOM.

To Whom it May Concern:

Return my child, receive $5,000 and no questions asked. D. T. BEALS.

The offer of ransom was made after a long and serious discussion. The police officers argued that the criminal should be brought to justice and that the offering of a reward without attempting to secure the kidnapers was, from a moral standpoint, compounding a felony.

He Remembered Poor Charlie Ross.

But Mr. Beals, taking counsel of the Charlie Ross case, refused to take the risk. "If I let me find my boy and then you can find his kidnapers," was his answer. A reward, Mr. Beals argued, would attract too many detectives, who might run the kidnapers so close to earth that, rather than suffer the penalty for their crime, they would put the child out of the way and make good their escape. Mr. Beals, therefore, advertised his willingness to pay a ransom. His offer was made in good faith, and that whatever knowledge he might obtain of the identity of the abductors, should they accept his offer, would be honorably regarded.

A Note from the Kidnapers.

At 4 o'clock Mr. Beals received a note by a messenger boy, who said that an unknown man had handed it to him on the street. The description of the man as given by the boy tallies very closely with that of the man who is known to have conveyed a cottage to Lizzie Smith together with another man and Lizzie Smith. He is supposed to be a man named King.

The note informed Mr. Beals that he declared to meet him in front of the postoffice as soon as possible. Mr. Beals was directed to wear a plain gold ring on his left hand, prominently displayed, as a means of identification. The child, said the writer, was securely hidden, and he would return him to the father for a stated sum. Mr. Beals went as near as possible and paced up and down the corridors unceasingly. As the hours wore on, with no response to the secret signal, the poor father began to weep. Finally friends led him to his desolate home.

Settled for $5,000.

Shortly after the evening papers appeared with the offer of $5,000 by reason a man, whose description no one has obtained, appeared at the Beals residence and called for Mr. Beals. Mr. Beals opened the door himself. The child, dressed in that of $20,000 in cash was paid him at 9:45 to night and the police were instructed to keep out of the way, he would return the child. He finally consented to take $5,000. Mr. Beals willingly made the promises asked, and sent down to his boy for the money in small bills.

At the hour appointed the man with the boy, safe and sound, appeared at the residence and delivered up the child. He received the $5,000, counted it deliberately, bowed politely and disappeared.

The police have arrested Lizzie Smith. She was taken to the police station and then to the jail in his house, where she was fully indentified. Mr. Beals believes the child was never out of the vicinity of the house. David T. Beals, Jr., the kidnaped child, will be two years old in a few days. He is very fair, with bright blue eyes.

HE IS SOME OTHER CHARLIE.

Mr. Ross Denies Another Story About His Son.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—Christian K. Ross, father of the missing Charlie Ross, was seen in reference to the story telegraphed from Cortland, N. Y., that his boy had lived there on the adopted son of Henry Stratton, who killed himself recently in an endeavor to emulate Sweet's feat.

Mr. Ross replied: "I investigated the matter some years ago and found there was nothing in it. I am daily in receipt of letters from people all over the country who think they have discovered my boy. This morning I had one from Auburn, N. Y., about a lost boy."

Did the Brothers Love the Same Girl?

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 28.—Alexander Moorhead, twenty-four years of age, son of Rev. W. W. Moorhead, shot himself through the heart this morning and will probably die. Young Moorhead says his brother was married on Wednesday and that they had been reared together and he could not bear the separation from him. It is believed that Alexander was a suitor for the hand of his brother's wife.

Commodore Rouckendorff's Death.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Commodore William Rouckendorff, United States navy, died Nov. 27 at the Grand hotel. He was born in Pennsylvania and was appointed to the navy in 1832, served throughout the rebellion, was commissioned commodore in 1878 and was retired the following year. During the war he was in charge of ironclads and did important service.

The General Grant Story Denied.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Secretary Halford says that General Grant, assistant secretary of war, has not been appointed secretary of war, vice Redfield Proctor, resigned. He would not discuss the probabilities of the case. There are many persons who believe that the assistant secretary is likely to be selected for the place.

Crushed by Tons of Coal.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 28.—As a number of men were engaged in shoveling coal on the pier at Piermont the cribbing fell in, crushing several of the men under hundreds of tons of coal. Ira Davis, nineteen years old, was the sole support of his widowed mother. He was taken out dead, while two others were badly hurt.

TO OUST SENATOR BRICE

John Sherman Advocates the Election of a Republican.

BRICE SAID TO BE A NEW YORKER.

Senator Hoar Says That the United States Senate Would Be Almost Sure to Decide That Mr. Brice Was Entitled to His Seat at Washington.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 28.—Copies of letters received from Judge King, of Youngstown, chairman of the Republican state committee, show that United States Senator John Sherman, while not opposed to a contest of the seat of United States Senator-elect Calvin S. Brice, does not deem it right for him to object to that senator taking his seat inasmuch as he would be called upon to act judicially if a contest should arise. His plan is for the Republican state committee to present a memorial to the senate and for the legislature of Ohio to assume a vacancy, elect a senator, and then let that gentleman conduct the contest.

What Senator Hoar Says.

Senator Sherman's views are coincided in by Senator Hoar, who has written a long letter to the Ohio senator, in which he declares it his opinion that senatorial precedent and the usages of congress demand that the gentleman holding a certificate of election be entitled to take his seat until such time as an investigation shall prove that he is not entitled to it. It seems probable that the seat of Senator-elect Brice will be contested.

SENATOR BRICE.

Talking the Case Over.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 28.—The Republican state committee met here with a full attendance. Ex-Congressman Grosvenor spoke upon the question of ousting Senator Brice. He said it would be impossible to prevent Mr. Brice from taking his seat. He suggested that the only thing to do was to memorialize the senate to investigate the question of Senator Brice's residence.

As to the merits of the question, General Grosvenor believed that if Mr. Brice was the man he took him to be, the moment the question was raised in the senate he would rise and demand an investigation. He would hail the opportunity to wipe a blot from his escutcheon. Representative Griffin, of Toledo, candidate for speaker of the assembly, decried the whole movement. He believed Mr. Brice to be a citizen of Ohio within the meaning of the constitution, and that Mr. Brice could prove it. He feared the Republicans of Ohio were about to make fools of themselves.

Thinks It Will Hurt the Party.

President W. I. Squire, of the Republican State league, opposed taking action against Senator Brice on the ground that it would hurt the Republican party in Ohio.

"People will call it," said he, "an attempt to steal a senatorship."

Judge Kennedy Is Angry.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 28.—The county board of canvassers appeared before Judge Kennedy and reported that out of twenty-three districts whose returns are erroneous only thirteen have made corrected returns. Judge Kennedy said that the court had been much trifled with by a high authority, but he would see to it that its mandates are obeyed.

The court issued orders requiring Superintendent Thomas Welch, of the Third ward, and all the election inspectors in derelict districts to show cause why the court's orders are not obeyed. It is not impossible that some of these may be sent to jail for contempt of court.

Judge Kennedy said that he should direct the grand jury at the next court of oyer and terminer to indict those who fail to comply with the election law's requirements.

Indictments May Follow.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Nov. 28.—It is reported that Judge Barnard will be asked for a writ of mandamus compelling the Dutchess county board of canvassers to recanvass the returns on senator. Application, it is also said, will be made later for the indictment of the Democratic members of the Columbia and Dutchess county boards, who declared Osborne entitled to a certificate. The matter is now in the hands of the Republican state committee.

Mills, Crisp and Springer Confident.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—All the candidates for the speakership of the house of representatives are busy and confident of success. "Claim everything and claim it boldly," is apparently the motto of all of them. Talk with Mr. Mills' partisans and you will be told that his vote may exceed even 160 on the first ballot, and that he will win in a canter.

When you repeat these optimistic generalities at the Crisp headquarters they are greeted with a long sort of deflance. The Crisp men are firmly convinced that Mr. Crisp is a winner. They will not admit that there is any probability of his defeat, except in the event that the other candidates combine against him.

There is an air of serene contentment about Mr. Springer's headquarters. Mr. Springer is the Micawber of American politics. He is genial under all circumstances. A deegration of prominent Illinoisans will start for Washington this evening to labor until the caucus is held in his behalf.

Mr. Springer is developing more strength than his opponents have thus far accorded him.

The scarcity of representatives makes it impossible, of course, to predict what the relative strength of any candidate will be, and it is doubtful if 15 per cent. of the number have as yet committed themselves. It has been believed that Mills and Crisp would be even when they divide the New England vote. Mr. Springer's New England friends say that Springer will have 4, if not 5, of the 14 votes from New England. Mr. Springer also believes that he will secure a considerable vote in the northwest and southwest.

Mr. Crisp will have the seven votes of the Maryland delegation, and his friends claim the practically solid support of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi for him, as well as the major part of the New England and New York delegations. Henry George, who is here, is an outspoken supporter of Mr. Mills.

THE WORLD OF SPORTS.

Stagg to Have Charge of Athletics at Yale.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 28.—It is stated that Yale has decided to establish a department of athletics, of which Alonzo B. Stagg, the famous athlete, will have charge. Stagg had been engaged to take charge of the athletic department in Professor Harper's university in Chicago, but it is now probable that he will go there. He is reported as having said that he received a better offer from Yale, which he will probably accept.

Signed with Pittsburg.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Secretary Young, of the National league, announces the following contracts made with players for the baseball season of 1892: With Pittsburg—A. H. Whitney, J. O. S. Corkhill, M. A. Baldwin, F. W. Wood cock and J. P. Beckley. With Cincinnati—T. J. Mullane, T. A. McPhee, James E. O'Neill, E. J. Chamberlain.

John L. Sullivan Sued.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 28.—Suit was brought against John L. Sullivan and John W. Barnitt to compel the payment of a note amounting, with interest, to $1,500. The note was given in Melbourne, Oct. 3, to J. & A. C. McMahon, and was payable one month after date at the Bank of California, in this city. No part of the note has yet been paid.

Heffelfinger for Captain.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 28.—The Yale football team in meeting this year failed to follow its usual custom of electing a captain immediately after the Thanksgiving Day game. It is reported that the team Heffelfinger has announced that he will probably take another year in the law school, and he will undoubtedly be chosen captain.

Cardiff Ready for McAuliffe.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 28.—Patsy Cardiff, who is matched to fight Joe McAuliffe before the California club toward the end of December, has arrived. Cardiff is in good trim and will begin training at once.

Pugilist Dan Daly Dead.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 28.—Dan Daly, a well known pugilist and sporting man, died at St. Vincent's hospital. He had been confined for the past ten days from nervous prostration.

SCANDAL AT RUTGERS COLLEGE.

Lady Principal West said to Be an Embezzler.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Herald says that Mrs. E. S. West, who for six years was the lady principal of Rutgers Female college, at 54 and 56 West Fifty-Fifth street, stands convicted by her own confession of converting the funds of the college to her own use. There is proof that by most original and illegal methods she has taken more than $3,000, which should have gone into the treasury of the institution.

Dr. George W. Samson, the president of the college, admitted yesterday that Mrs. West's connection with it had ended for the above reasons. He said he was inclined to regard her as a sort of kleptomaniac.

From Europe to Chicago.

QUEBEC, Nov. 28.—Sir George Baden Powell, K. C. M. G., one of the British commissioners in the Behring sea affair, is now interesting himself in the scheme for the establishment of a fast Canadian transatlantic steamship service. President Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific, states that the new steamship line will run in connection with his road, and he believes passengers from Europe, via the St. Lawrence, will be landed in Chicago within a few hours of the time that those via New York will be disembarked at the metropolis. The present intention is to have the new steamships on the line before the opening of the World's fair and to compete with American railways for the travel in connection therewith. The government subsidy will be made $1,000,000 per year.

Mrs Annie Besant in America.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Mrs. Annie Besant, who is probably the most prominent member of the Theosophical society now living, but who disclaims being Mme Blavatsky's successor, has arrived in New York on the City of Berlin. She came to America by the advice of her physicians, who advised the rest of a short excursion. She is going to lay aside her delivering four lectures, two in New York, one in Fort Wayne and one in Philadelphia and by talking business with other Theosophists in the intervals. She appears to be in excellent health.

Science Progress.

A PROBLEM IN GYMNASTICS.

A Curious Effect of the Displacement of the Center of Gravity of the Body.

Place a low stool on the floor close against the wall, and yourself facing the wall, with your feet distant from it just double the width of the stool. Stoop down and grasp the stool with one hand on either side, and rest your head against the wall. Now lift the stool from the floor, and slowly raise yourself to the erect position, or rather endeavor to do so. It is better to try the experiment for the first time on a well carpeted floor. On one of polished wood you would probably have a bad fall.

THE DIFFICULT PROBLEM.

We have here a curious effect of the displacement of the center of gravity of the body, which renders it almost impossible to stand upright without first replacing the stool on the ground and resting the hand upon it to get the needful support.

Canks Made Direct from the Tree.

Everybody familiar with the lathe knows that a very long turning can be taken from a piece of wood or metal. In this way, tells Iron, casks are now produced direct from the tree—that is, without the wood having to be cut up in numerous staves, the cask being formed of a single stave. In this system the tree stem is first sawn into lengths to suit the length of cask to be made, and these lengths are boiled for about three hours in a closed vessel, which renders the wood soft. A current of electricity is passed through the water during the boiling process. The log is taken from the boiler to the cutting machine, in which it is fixed as in a lathe, and brought up against a long, broad cutting blade.

The log is revolved, the knife automatically approaches it and the sheet of wood is drawn from the machine onto a table, and is cut into lengths suitable for the diameter of barrel required. The lengths are then taken to a grooving machine, where they are grooved near the edges for receiving the head and bottom of the cask. The wood is then put into another machine which cuts long narrow V pieces or gussets out of the edges at intervals, which give the necessary double taper to the cask. The sheets of wood are then formed up into a cylinder and the first two hoops are driven on by the machine. There is thus only one stave in the cask, and consequently only one joint. Works are already in operation in Europe turning out barrels and casks.

Ingenious Application of Electricity.

An electric insect killer is a recent novelty in that line. It is formed by a cover of wire gauze, which is placed over a lighted candle. The gauze is in an electric circuit, and when the insects touch it they are killed. An unerring application of electricity for ventilation has been brought out in France. An electric fan furnishes the current of air, which can be cooled by means of ice or other cooling agent. If hot air is required, electricity is sent through a series of meshes of wire, whose high resistance causes it to become hot, and the air passing through these is given the heat required.

Rainmaking Experiments.

Professor Houston is credited with having made these remarks on the rainmaking experiments: "Rain can never be obtained by explosions except under certain meteorological conditions, when the energy required for the fall is already stored up in the moist air from which the rain comes. A comparatively high difference of electric potential or pressure between different parts of the air, or between the air and the earth is, he thinks, favorable to rainmaking, and he believes that the explosions should be of such a kind as to produce a general uprush of the air.

An Extraordinary Plant.

Nothing more remarkable has been on exhibition at the botanical garden of Kew in several years than the brilliant exotic depicted in the cut, if we may believe what the English exchanges tell about it.

A BRILLIANT EXOTIC.

The buds resemble a pelican at rest on the water, and the expanded flower is like a large sou'wester hat. The color is a cream yellow veined all over with purple. It is a climber, and the flowers hung from the roof over a sugar cane in the house where the great water lily (Victoria regia) is grown. The family of plants to which it belongs is a widespread one, an example, though a rare one, being found in our own Birch swort, which grows upon ruins and old walls.

Besides the use which its common English name suggests, this species of plant has established medical properties. Thus it is much used in India for the cure of snake bites, acting as it does in preventing the coagulation of the blood, which is one of the peculiar symptoms of blood poisoning.

Cups and Saucers and Spoons.

A very unique and tasteful fad now prevails, viz., the engagement cup and saucer. It consists in the presentation of a dainty after dinner coffee or afternoon tea of the finest china to young ladies whose engagements are announced.

The daintiest specimens in spoons have handles of fingers. Occasionally these are mounted with colored stones, or the

THE HOUSEHOLD

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

A Few Suggestions About New and Popular Things in Fancy Work.

It is early to talk of Christmas gifts, but for those whose purses are not long and whose presents have to be thought out and made by willing fingers it is not too soon to begin preparations. Many pretty and ornamental knick knacks can be made if one begins in time. Something quite new is a photograph frame made as follows: Take three-quarters of a yard of heavy, handsome 5-inch ribbon and fringe out about four inches on each end. Take thirty ordinary brass curtain rings and cover by crocheting around them in silk, matching the ribbon in color, at the same time joining the rings so as to form a frame the size of a cabinet photograph. The frame will be six rings wide and seven in length, with an extra row of four rings just above the bottom row. Tack this frame to one end of the ribbon, slipping in the photograph before tacking down the top of the frame. Cover one large ring with crochetting, slip the ribbon through this and sus pend from the wall by means of this ring and a hook or tack, taking care to make the picture end hang flat against the wall.

Another pretty thing that has come up in the same style is a shopping bag ornamented with brass rings covered with crochet work. A handsome and serviceable bag is made of desired size in dark red plush and lined with old gold satin. A sufficient number of rings are crochetted over in silk to match the lining of the bag. A row of these, the width of the bottom of the bag, is sewed on, and above them another row. Then five rings are sewed on and one missed, and so on across the bag, and above these a row consisting of three rings sewed onto each of the five and three rings missed between each group, and so on to form points, the last row having one ring on each point.

There is a great fashion just now for bags, and work bags are frequently made of a purse shape, and strips of alternate silk and velvet may be used, with a tassel at each end. The old model known as a stocking bag, a circular case around which is a row of pockets, the center closing with a ribbon or string, is always useful.

Useful little cases for string balls are made in velvet, four points meeting over the ball in the center, like the petals of a flower.

Very fashionable work is now done either with colored threads on white linen or white thread on colored linen. Of the former class are the charming little white linen tidies, with a wide hem, and a deep drawn border and sprays of flowers, embroidered in gold and white thread. These are always elegant in appearance and wash admirably. A tidy pattern in drawn work upon linen makes a pretty table center.

Mistletoe Bough.

Mistletoe bough is a very pretty decoration for the Christmas season. Take a small branch of evergreen, and to it attach a bunch of mistletoe, and tie with a bow of red ribbon. Hang in the doorway, and the young people will do the rest.

Hanging Baskets.

GOOD HEALTH

MALARIA.

Why We May Have It in Winter, or Far Away from a Malarious District.

Dr. Bray, of Canada, in a paper on "Malaria," openly expresses the opinion that the disease is due to micro-organisms in the blood, which are taken into the system, either by the respiratory or the digestive tracts, and when things are necessary for the production of these organisms, namely: Heat, moisture, and vegetable decomposition. Their presence in the alimentary tract gives rise to dysentery, which can only be cured by clearing out the intestines and giving quinine. The reply to the question why we have it in winter, when the decomposition of vegetation is arrested, is that there is a supply of the microbe organism stored up in the earth and drinking water, and even in the human body. In accordance with the law of all germs, they may remain quiescent as long as the constitution of their host is vigorous, but rapidly develop when the system is run down. This also explains why people may develop an attack of malaria thousands of miles away from a malarious district. Sudden changes of temperature favor an attack. He endeavored to explain the various types, such as quartan, tertian, etc., by the strength of the virus, which varied according to the age of the virus and the time of the year. Malaria has a tendency to become milder as lands are drained and cultivated and the forests cut down. He denied the existence of such a disease as typho-malaria, but said there was nothing to prevent a coincidence of the two diseases.

An Elderly Belle's Advice.

An elderly Frenchwoman, who has been a belle for seventy years and is still fair to look upon, has written a book of counsels to the young, which all Paris is reading just now. "Do not sleep too long or too little," writes this oracle. "When you are going to be up late at a ball try to sleep for an hour or so during the afternoon. On returning from the ball jump into a really hot bath, and remain just a moment; immediately get into a hot sheet and be rubbed down with a bath towel. Drink a cup of bouillon, a small glass of strengthening wine, and sleep until 10 the next morning. Immediately on waking be sponged with cold water and have a cup of hot coffee and a slice of buttered toast for breakfast. Wear a narrow piece of flannel from the nape of the neck down the length of the spine, tied in front with ribbons, to ward off colds and rheumatism. Give yourself over to one day's complete rest every week or ten days."

Goat Whey.

Apropos of an attempt just now to revive a belief in the curative properties of goat whey, a London journal notes that the remedy was held in high esteem in Scotland in the last century. In the annals of the Duff family, the Lord Fife of the day, under date June 22, 1750, records, "I intend to stay some days at Mar Lodge, as I intend to drink the goat whey." On April 12, 1791, he writes, "We were till 1 o'clock this morning in the house of Inoris. I wish I were at Mar Lodge to drink goat whey for ten days." Similar entries are found under other dates, for this good lord died a believer in goat whey. Sir Walter Scott, in "The Heart of Midlothian," makes reference to the health restoring virtues of goat whey, indicating confidence in this cure, which was pretty general in his day.

Sleep with Your Head Toward the Engine.

"Always sleep with your head toward the engine," say experienced travelers, one of whom gives as the reason for so doing that you thus escape drafts and the catching of colds which is so common in a sleeping car. Many others say that by so doing you will (if possessed of good health and a clear conscience) spend a restful, comfortable night and wake up free from the oppressive headache and stiffness that is usually spent in the contrary position is very liable to bring; the cause of unrest is said to be that when the feet are toward the engine the motion of the train causes the blood to settle in the head.

ETIQUETTE

GOOD FORM.

Information for All Who Wish to Do the Correct Thing.

Harper's Bazar, among replies to correspondents, furnishes the following useful items:

Wear a handsome visiting dress with bonnet at a 6 o'clock church wedding and reception.

A man who follows "form" in such matters should not pay formal calls within six months after the death of his parent.

A clear, rather thin glass, with a little hand engraving, is always pretty and in good taste. Stem glasses are used for claret. Thin water crackers, or very thin white or brown bread lightly buttered, or the slender slices of bread (grissini), may be passed with bouillon. This may be taken with the teaspoon or sipped from the cup.

Send regret or acceptance to everything but a tea.

When merely eating an ice or other slight refreshment between dances, it is not necessary to take off your gloves.

A mistake occasionally made by the unaccustomed hostess is that of using the wrong form in presenting her friends to one another. The introduction should be made to the older person, as to the one chiefly to be honored. For instance, Mr. Jones is a grave and reverend senior, Mr. Smith is a lively young man about town. Therefore the form of introduction should be, "Mr. Jones let me introduce Mr. Smith."

In presenting a gentleman to a lady the lady's name should be mentioned first. Quite out of date is the phrase, "Let me make you acquainted with Mr. or Miss So-and-so."

Send a written regret for the wedding reception to the parents and your card for "at homes" to the young couple. You should always send a card to the hostess when paying a call to her guest.

Begin your letter, "My dear Dr. Brown," and sign it "Sincerely, or cordially yours, Mary Brown." Do not invite people to call upon you the first time you meet them, unless exceptional circumstances make it desirable.

It is not necessary to leave the drawing room on the arrival of other guests.

The calling cards should read Miss Smith for the elder sister; Miss Mary Smith for the younger.

BREVITIES.

—Ask at L. W. Randolph's for one of the illustrated yearly calenders he is giving away.

—Captain McIver of the Salvation Army will leave town to-morrow for a much needed rest.

—The regular meeting of the McAll Auxiliary will be held at the Library, Tuesday morning Dec. 1st, at eleven o'clock.

—U. S. Marshals are in town to arrest fraudulent voters to-morrow. Good bye, Smith and the rest. "Brer Rabbit, he lay low."

—A musical entertainment is to be given under the auspices of the Epworth League of Monroe chapel this evening at eight o'clock, as elsewhere advertised.

—The offer is made by A. D. Van Sciver in another column to hang all papers purchased from him during December for half price. To advertise the quality of his work is the object.

—Doane and VanArsdale, 22 West Front street, will give away twenty-fifth pair of leather shoes from now until January 1st next sold by them for cash. Read carefully their advertisement.

—Elsewhere is advertised Dr. French's lecture, being a series of sketches from 20 years' experience. This lecture was delivered in Dr. Talmage's church in Brooklyn to a large audience and netted $300.

—At about half-past seven o'clock last evening a boy notified the police that a man and woman were engaged in a fight on Second street. When the police visited the place the participants were not and consequently no arrests were made.

—There is to be no dancing at the G. A. R. fair notwithstanding to the contrary has been stated in the advertisement Saturday, but there is to be music every evening as stated in the advertisement to-day.

—The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum Building is now almost completed. Mr. Musgrave, who is doing the carpenter work, expects to have the last door done in a few days. The building will be a handsome structure when finished.

—A feature of the lesson of the Bible Normal Class, which meets in the First Baptist church this evening, will be a Bible reading on the "Book of Genesis." Anyone in the city, either young or old; will be welcome, as visitors or members of the class.

—All boys over fourteen years of age whether members of the Plainfield Young Men's Auxiliary or not are invited to be present at the address by George M. Ellison of Rahway, on Tuesday evening next at eight o'clock, at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association.

—A pleasing and successful entertainment, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Warren Missionary Church, was held in the chapel Friday evening. The large platform was covered with ivy and leaves. In the rear stood a large sheaf of corn and surrounded with bundles of rye straw. In front of these all of the vegetables and fruits of the season were prominently displayed. Upon a rustic seat could be seen the sickle, rakes and Forks, as having performed their work were laid aside, all having a beautiful effect and appropriate for this season of the year. An interesting programme was rendered. This included singing, Mr. Wm. Solms by Mr. Will Fielding (as well as Stats) "I feel sorely bereaved, I have lost my strong prop, the one upon whom I depend for counsel and inspiration."

Mrs. Downs' favorite Psalm, the 23d was read, and her hymns sung, and Mrs. Tomlinson gave a review of her life and work in such tender words of love and praise that all hearts and eyes were been touched in loving remembrance.

Mrs. Downs' last messages to her children were characteristic of the noble spirit of her life: "Be good; you know mother's standard of goodness." To her son John he whispered: "Be good, and vote for Prohibition."

That Fellow Smith.

How can a respectable and self-respecting Democrat vote to elect Seymour G. Smith? Why, his followers, the Republican party cast him off with contempt, and the Democratic party refused to take him up. He is repudiated by both parties alike. Think of this, intelligent Democrats. No one vouches for Smith but Smith himself and those of his ilk. Will you indorse a man not good enough to command the respect of either of the great political parties or of anybody else except his own clique.

The Trick Didn't Work.

Mr. Fred. Caspar refused to receive thirteen letters addressed to Caspar's Hotel to-day for persons who he says do not reside there. The letters were returned to the post office. The repenters will be caught if they attempt to vote. They are known. They may be arrested anyhow.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

AN ELECTIONEERING DODGE THAT DIDN'T WORK.

President Smith Pretended That he Did Not Know That a Meeting Saturday Night Would be Illegal—Trying to Spring a Roorback on Plainfield.—Balked by Councilman Ackerman.

A special meeting of the City Common Council was called for Saturday evening. Besides the President, Councilman Ackerman, Gallup, Hetfield, Johnston, Moffett, Roberts and Spangenberg, responded to roll call. Councilmen Ginna, Lee and Rushmore were absent.

It was 8.40 o'clock when the meeting was called to order.

The president then stated that no meeting could be held that evening on account of it being a holiday. He said the meeting had been called for the purpose of showing the taxpayers how they were being robbed by the Electric Light Co. He said the lights were not what they should be; that the Committee on Public Lights had investigated the matter and ascertained that the city was only getting about one half the amount of light that it was paying for.

Mr. Ackerman inquired regarding the report in reference to the Edison Electric Light Company signed by the chairman and members of the Committee on Public Lights.

Mr. Smith said that the meeting had been called to state the facts in the matter.

Mr. Hetfield said that the company contracted to furnish twenty-five candle power lights and that the lamps they used were only twelve and seventeen candle power.

Mr. Smith stated that the Committee had had experts to examine the lamps and that in no case was the company using a twenty-five candle power lamp. He said he had some of the lamps with him that had been examined.

Mr. Ackerman inquired of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lights if there was not a remedy or a penalty.

Mr. Spangenberg said the company was under ten thousand dollars bonds, and that he had been told by the police that the lights were invariably turned down after twelve o'clock.

Mr. Smith stated that the bond only held *the company responsible for acci*dents.

Mr. Ackerman inquired how long the Committee had known that the light had been unsatisfactory.

Mr. Spangenberg replied several months.

Mr. Ackerman wanted to know why the attention of the Council had not been drawn to the matter before.

Mr. Spangenberg replied that he thought the company would do better.

Mr. Ackerman wanted to know why the petition of Edison Company had not been acted on before as that it was only a few months ago that a contract for another year was entered into with the Electric Light Company. He thought the Council should have been made acquainted with the facts before this late date and was of the opinion that all this work of to-night was post legislation.

Mr. Smith gave as the reason why that the matter was under investigation.

On motion the meeting then adjourned and the audience of about twenty-five persons left the room quietly. One of the audience was heard to remark: "They can not fool me again. If they want me, they can send a carriage after me."

THE LATE MRS. S. J. C. DOWNS.

W. C. T. U. Memorial Service.

Memorial exercises in memory of Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, State President of New Jersey, were conducted by Mrs. Tomlinson yesterday afternoon in the rooms of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Every women mourns the loss of their great leader who was a grand spirit, full of nobility and ably advocated by voice and by pen. Miss Willard says of her death (for Mrs. Downs was a National officer as well as State) "I feel sorely bereaved. I have lost my strong prop, the one upon whom I depend for counsel and inspiration."

Mrs. Downs' favorite Psalm, the 23d was read, and her hymns sung, and Mrs. Tomlinson gave a review of her life and work in such tender words of love and praise that all hearts and eyes were been touched in loving remembrance.

Mrs. Downs' last messages to her children were characteristic of the noble spirit of her life: "Be good; you know mother's standard of goodness." To her son John he whispered: "Be good, and vote for Prohibition."

THE LAWYER'S CHARGES.

EX-CHANCELLOR RUNYON'S LETTER ON THE SUBJECT.

An Item that May Run the City Into Thousands of Dollars' Expense Entirely Due to Combine Stupidity.

Ex-Chancellor Runyon was recently written to by Councilman Ackerman, for a bill of the city's indebtedness to him for services rendered.

The ex-Chancellor's reply was received Saturday. He declined to state the amount he proposed to charge the city, explaining that it was his custom not to render a bill until the service for which he had been engaged was finished.

"The ex-Chancellor was engaged as advisory counsel in the settlement of the Lattimer estate," said Mr. Ackerman, "and the charge was $5,000 for five hours' consultation. So we may judge what the city may be expected at no distant day to pay me."

This was not intended as any disparagement of the eminent counsellor, but as showing one of the many entirely unnecessary expenses to which the city has been put by "the combine."

Ex-Chancellor Runyon pointed out to the combine that their course in relation to certain franchises they were trying to force through was illegal. The courts afterward sustained this view and decided against the combine.

The ex-Chancellor's advice was identical with what Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh had previously given, but that made no difference to them.

They were determined to go ahead in defiance of all law or justice. The public had to pay the expense, and could not get rid of it until after they got rid of the cause of it.

To-morrow there will be a chance to do so at the polls, and kick out of office every one of the disreputable gang who have conspired against the city during the past two years and brought the only disgrace it has suffered during its twenty-two years of existence.

THE NEWS alone has fought the combine from the beginning at great personal sacrifice, when we were satisfied of their treachery to the people, and denounced them as the only course they after-wards did in utter disregard of the people's rights or the city's interests.

To-morrow's vote will decide whether all our efforts have been for naught.

We are confident that there will be an overwhelming victory for the people, and are sure they will not disappoint us.

ANOTHER CROSS.

John W Cross of Arlington Avenue Proves His Innocence.

The warrant for the arrest of John W. Cross of Arlington avenue, on the charge of illegal registration, reported in Saturday's NEWS was issued under a misapprehension. It appears that there are two persons of the same name, and it was a case of mistaken identity respecting the one of Arlington avenue.

He is a respectable young man.

When he found that a warrant was out for his arrest he promptly went before City Judge Codington to prove his innocence.

As soon as Mr. George W. Moore saw him, he said, "Why he is not guilty of such a crime. He has an honest face, and I will swear that a man with such a face would not stoop so low as to vote illegally."

Said Mr. Moore: "We discovered, however upon investigation that there is another person of the same name, and he appears to be the one whose name is registered in the First Ward, although he resides in Seguine's stables in the Fourth Ward, and takes his meals at Mrs. Bowman's boarding house. We will look after him if he attempts to vote."

We think from what we know of the intention of leading citizens that it would be wise for those whose names are registered in two wards or about whose registration there is the slightest taint of fraud, to abstain from voting altogether rather than run any risk, as the lists are to be carefully gone over and every person found guilty of illegal voting will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

[EXTRACT FROM THE ELECTION LAW.

15. That any person who shall cause or procure his name to be registered in more than one election district, or shall cause or procure his name or that of any person to be registered, knowing that he, or the person whose name he has procured to be registered, is not entitled to vote in the election district or ward wherein said registry is made, at the next election to be held therein, or who shall falsely personate any registered voter, shall be punished for each and every offense by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned for a term not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Evidence in a great many cases is already in possession of the Republican members of the Boards of Registration, and wholesale arrests are likely to follow immediately after election of all those who attempt to vote fraudulently. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Some very unpleasant facts are deeply involved, and the evidence against them will be carefully considered, and it is possible that they will, when too late "wish they hadn't."

MR. MOFFETT PAYS NO TAXES.

Nor Has He Paid Any Money Into the City Treasury for Ten Years, at Least.

[From the Plainfield Courier of Friday.]

According to the city tax books Elmore D. Moffett, candidate for Councilman-at-large on the so-called Citizens' Ticket, and a member of the "Big Six," is not assessed on one dollar's worth of personal property or real estate. On his poll tax of one dollar he claims, and has claimed, exemption as an old soldier. He therefore pays not one cent of taxes into the city treasury, nor has he paid a cent of taxes for ten years at least, and probably for a longer time.

Voters of Plainfield, should this man who does not own a dollar's worth of property, or pay a dollar of taxes, be elected to spend the money which you pay into the city treasury? Should he have another chance to involve by his *vote in the Council, this city's fair finan*cial fame? Should he be allowed to make the city pay for two sets of hydrants, not one dollar of which expenditure can come from his pockets?

Is it a wonder, then, that this man cares so little how much he makes you pay in taxes as long as he himself cannot be taxed.

AN HONEST DEMOCRAT OBJECTS.

Still Another Name Used by the Combine without Authority.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I am a Democrat. I have voted the straight Democratic ticket in Plainfield since 1865 and don't propose to ever vote a mixed ticket. I did not authorize my name to be used as a vice-president at the alleged Citizens' Mass (?) meeting held in Music Hall last week. I first learned of it when I read THE NEWS next morning.

Irishmen Asked to Remember Moffett's Insult.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—About seventeen months ago the Irish-Catholics of this city arranged for a banquet to be held on the evening of St. Patrick's Day, Mr. Elmore D. Moffett, at that time the president of Common Council, was invited to be present to represent the city, but instead of either declining the invitation or attending the banquet, he went to a hotel and got drunk, where he was caught by Chief Carey, at the bar after legal hours, and in company with others of the combine. He is now a candidate for Councilman. AN IRISHMAN.

A Colored Man's Appeal to His Race.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Will you be kind enough to publish these few words for the interest of our colored voters.

My colored citizens before going to the polls in the morning go to your mirror and ask yourself this question. Shall I be a man to-day and vote on my principle for the Republican party? Or will it pay to lose my principle and vote for nothing, in for of the combine. Don't allow yourselves to be carried in vest pockets. Very Respectfully,

JUSTICE LEWIS PETERSON.

An Irishman's Objections to Schoonmaker.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—I as a Catholic think that it was a poor return to the Catholics for the managers of the Citizens' Ticket to pay old Schoonmaker the defamer of our creed and race, to address the meeting. This is my feeling about the matter. A CATHOLIC.

HELD FOR THE GRAND JURY.

Notwithstanding Hetfield's Efforts Fred S. Moore's Bail Increased to $250.

In the case against Fred S. Moore for alleged fraudulent registration, the testimony of Geo. W. Moore, complainant, was taken this a. m. He merely testified to Moore's having registered in his presence and that the source of the information on which the complaint was made was the defendant's own mother. This closed the case.

Mr. Walter L. Hetfield appeared for the defendant and argued that he shall be discharged because, as he claimed, there was no evidence to hold him. Mr. Talk A. Marsh for the State contended that a very strong case of probable guilt had been made out by the cross-examination of the defendant himself. Referring to Mr. Hetfield's point that the State should have called the defendant's mother on the stand to testify against her son, Mr. Marsh said that rather than call a mother to the witness-stand and subject her to the terrible alternative of uttering words that would either convict her son or State's prison and infamy for her own soul to perdition, he would abandon the practice of law forever.

The court held that its duty was clear under the evidence to hold the defendant to await the action of the Grand Jury. The bail was increased to $250.

THE ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

ARE THESE FELLOWS THIEVES ALSO?

"Those Who Stole Our Lamps," Says Mr Moore, "I Don't Think Would Hesitate to Lie."

The combine, at the illegal meeting held Saturday night, claimed that the Plainfield Electric Light Company, were defrauding the city.

Some of the street lamps of the company were stolen. They were replaced during the past two months, in one instance (Sherman avenue) by other lamps a night afterwards, but not in other cases.

"These lamps are standard 25-candle power," said the superintendent to a NEWS reporter, "and are bought in the open market as such, every lamp being stamped. We would offer any proper person at any time without previous notice, every opportunity to test them on our current, which is fifty-two volts. The machinery is all speeded to give that voltage right along. If these lamps have been put on a system where the voltage was only fifty, it would of course give a less candle power.

"That is probably what has been done, merely to deceive the people, on the eve of election.

"We are under $10,000 bonds to give just what we agree, and any one who knows anything about electricity knows that there would not be the slightest object on our part to reduce the voltage, aside from the danger of loss under our bond to the city.

"It is my opinion that any one who would steal as in this instance would not hesitate to lie. That seems to be people's experience generally.

"But if the combine believed there was any dishonesty on our part why have they since ordered 600 more lamps to be put up on the outskirts of the city, many near Scotch Plains, and at an additional expense to the city of about $3,000 per year?

"There is one thing, however, which I think the public ought to know. The people are compelled to pay for lights they do not get because we cannot get police protection.

"Our lamps are broken by malicious persons, and we have repeatedly complained to the Council, and asked for police protection without any satisfaction.

"We can do no more, but our expenses for replacing broken and stolen lamps in the last year have been double what they have been in any previous year, while the city in consequence is not getting the service it pays for and is entitled to.

"It was not so when Mr. Carey was chief. He succeeded in arresting the offenders and securing their punishment."

SOCIAL & PERSONAL

Editor Runyon of the Courier is confined to the house by illness.

Mrs. Henry VanMiddlesworth, of Washington avenue, Dunellen, passed away on Saturday evening in her fiftieth year. She was one of the oldest residents of the place.

*Frederick C. Lounsbury, the Republi*can candidate for school trustee, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1857, and descended of old New England stock, being a cousin of ex-Governor Lounsbury of Connecticut. Mr. Lounsbury is a resident of the Fourth Ward, having purchased some four years ago the property previously occupied by Dr. Smillie, which he improved and enlarged till He is the father of six children, three of whom are pupils in the Washington school. He is young, energetic and successful and well-known in business circles in New York, being treasurer of the Standard Coal Company (limited) of that city. He is deeply interested in Plainfield and its future, and, being the owner of considerable property here, he is alive to the necessity of good, clean government in every department of the city.

To those who know him a word from us is quite unnecessary but to those who are not acquainted with him we would say he is a man worthy of support from all, irrespective of party affiliation, like every other man on the Republican ticket.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Growing Vegetables by Electricity.

Experiments looking to the increase of soil productiveness to an unknown extent by means of electricity are now making. They have not been in progress long enough to determine certainly whether the promise they give will be fulfilled, but that promise is dazzling. The government agricultural stations of several of the states, among them especially New York and Massachusetts, are investigating the subject carefully. Simultaneously scientists in Europe are experimenting in the same direction. The results arrived at by Professor Warner, of the Massachusetts station, indicate that electric currents acting on plants and vegetables dissolve out from the soil the salts which the roots need to nourish them, thus allowing these salts to be absorbed quickly by the roots, increasing the plant's growth rapidly.

Meanwhile a practical gardener at Arlington, Mass., has been doing some practical work on his own account that discounts all the achievements of the scientific men apparently. Mr. Rawson, the vegetable gardener, had some flower beds on a certain side of his yard that did not thrive and never had thriven. An electric light was erected in such a position that its rays fell directly upon these beds; they shortly began to grow as they never had done before. Could it have been the light that caused it? Mr. Rawson then introduced electric lights into the hothouse in which he raised winter cucumbers and lettuce. The effect here was as marked as it had been in case of the flower beds, and the gardener's profits were increased 25 per cent. The vegetables were of better quality and grew to perfection sooner than under the old method. Mr. Rawson's plan was to let the electric light shine upon the plants. Some of the scientific gentlemen, on the other hand, seem to have passed slight electrich currents through the plants down to their roots.

Perhaps we are on the threshold of great discoveries in this field. Perhaps this is one of the new methods whereby the earth will be made to yield food for six times as many persons as it now does.

Poor Consolation.

A kindly soul writes in The Youth's Companion to tell us how certain ailments of which he has suffered have really angelic unswerve and prolong lives. For instance, there is gout. It deforms the fingers and toes, makes them look like swollen sabers and sends 40,000 needles through the victim at times. But it is all right, says this consoler. If you didn't have gout you would die speedily from the causes which produce gout.

Then there is that blessed angel rheumatism. Perhaps you have a tendancy to heart trouble, a serious one. But you get a good tough case of rheumatism, fixed fast to your knees and ankles, and lo! You can no longer run hither and thither like a squirrel, endangering your life every day by your excessive hurry and activity. You walk temporately and slow like a solemn old lord with the gout.

But really a long life worth having at such a cost? Think of the lithe, slender hands of youth becoming twisted and hideous with gout. Think of changing the merry, birdlike activity of one who never had rheumatism or the crutch, for the deformed useless joints and hobbling gait of the rheumatic. Think of being unable to walk at all for twenty years. Many people would prefer ten years less of existence, with fully joyous life while they do live.

There never was anything known in this country like the present grain blockade in Dakota and the northwest. When it comes to mountains of wheat a train of cars is such a little thing, after all. Water transportation is the only method that will carry immense quantities of grain to their destination quickly and satisfactorily. Where is that Nicaragua canal? When it is open freight vessels can reach Europe from the western coast in twenty-five days, and the mountains of wheat that for months steadily piled up larger and larger in the north western granaries waiting for transportation, putting railroad officers to their wits' end and filling storage commission merchants with despair, could be transported much more quickly to Pacific waters than to the Atlantic coast. Loading the grain in bulk into fleets of waiting vessels could be quickly accomplished, and the millions of bushels would speed their way down the coast, through the canal, and turn their noses toward Europe before all the railroad cars in the northwest could have made any appreciable impression on a grain blockade—if we had that Nicaragua canal.

On the west coast of Africa white men have found a singular ailment known as the "Congo sleeping disease." The negroes are attacked with a stupor which gradually overcomes them. They cannot be aroused, answer questions only in monosyllables, and finally go off entirely into a sleep from which they cannot be awakened. They sleep themselves to death. Microscopists have discovered in the blood of persons attacked with the sleeping disease swarms of a peculiar bloodworm, by their locality. This enlightens the fated disease terribly much. Well, it is no easy way to die, anyhow.

FIRED AT DR. JOHN HALL

Lunatic Roth Attempts to Kill the Eminent Divine.

HE BLAZED AWAY THREE TIMES.

His Aim Was Very Bad, but the Third Bullet Struck the Parsonage Door Just After Dr. Hall Had Vanished Behind It. The Crank's Wild Story.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—John George Roth, a crazy German of middle age, attempted to kill the Rev. John Hall, D. D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, after the morning service Sunday by firing three shots at him from a revolver. None of the shots took effect. The would be assassin was immediately arrested and lodged in jail.

Story of the Shooting.

The shooting took place as Dr Hall was ascending the steps of the parsonage, which adjoins the church, and occurred just after he had left the church. Roth ran from the other side of the street to where Dr Hall entered the gate, and quickly drawing a revolver fired at the venerable preacher as soon as the latter had his back turned.

Dr. Hall turned his head at the sound of the shot, and then seeing his danger quickened his pace up the steps. He had just reached the landing when the man fired again.

It Was a Narrow Escape.

The doctor then hurriedly opened the door and entered the house. He was not a moment too soon, for as the door closed a third shot rang out and a bullet entered the casem-ent of the door the reverend gentleman had entered. There were but few persons on the avenue during the shooting, and the unusual spectacle they were witnesses of seemed to paralyze their powers for a time. When Dr. Hall had, however, safely escaped inside the house several gentlemen sprange forward and quickly disarmed the would be murderer. He offered no resistance.

The Lunatic's Charge.

"Do you know who you shot at?" he was asked.

"Of course I do," responded the man. "Why did you do it?"

"Because he has interfered with me and tried to ruin me."

It was at once seen that the prisoner was insane and he was married to the police station. There he was searched and a printed circular which purported to give a history of his ambitions and troubles was found on his person. On the back of this document were the following sentences in separate lines:

"Oh, human justice!"
"Tear the bandage from your eyes!"
"Cover your face for shame!"

In the body of this instrument its author says that he came to this country in 1871, and earned $10 per day. He soon became involved by chemical odors which filled his room and followed him everywhere. He also found that people were trying to poison him.

An Alleged Conspiracy.

"It was a conspiracy," he says, "which was inaugurated against me by wealthy people in 1879 and has no equal in human history. My business has been ruined, and efforts are being made to ruin my health and drive me mad by tampering with my meals and drink."

He mentions the names of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, Judge Hilton, Mrs. Bowdoin, Trustee B. B. Sherman, Dr. Hall and Bishop Potter as those concerned in the conspiracy.

What He Said.

Dr. Hall was for a time completely unnerved by his narrow escape, but recovered sufficiently to conduct the afternoon service in the church. He did not say but little regarding the shooting. He said that Roth had attended services at his church at irregular intervals for some time past, and that he had helped him on more than one occasion, thinking him a worthy man, as he certainly was gentlemanly in appearance and dress, and of good education. Dr Hall added that he had received threatening letters from the man, but paid no heed to them.

Where the Bullets Went.

The first shot fired passed Dr. Hall on the left and struck the stone front of the house. It missed him by three feet. The second flew a little over his head and struck a window on the first floor. It broke a little round hole in the glass without piercing it. The third ball was flattened against the lintel at the right side of the door and went on to Dr. Hall's back.

At the afternoon and evening services in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church the edifice was filled to overflowing. Dr. Hall chose for his subject: "Prepare to Meet Thy God, O Israel." He alluded to his narrow escape and the constant imminence of death and pointed out the obvious lesson. At the conclusion of the services the entire congregation stayed and filed passed the altar, each desiring to grasp Dr. Hall's hand and congratulate him upon his escape.

A Jersey Burglar Bagged.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 30.—James Dillon, who was arrested in Newark while trying to dispose of a watch stolen from a house in Rahway, confessed to the burglar who robbed Mrs. Martin's home at Woodside. He is believed to have committed other burglaries in Essex county.

One Big World's Fair Item.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—It will cost about $700,000 to make the awards at the World's Columbian exposition. President Palmer is in this city to-day trying to make the additional appropriation of $5,000,000 so necessary to make the exposition a success.

An Insane Man's Double Crime.

MARSHALLTOWN, Ia., Nov. 30.—D. C. Thomas shot and killed John Hockridge and then ended his own life in a like manner in this city. The murder was absolutely without provocation, and it is believed that the murderer and suicide was insane.

TELEGRAPHIC BREVITIES.

MRS. LEONARD'S SLAYER JAILED.

Farmhand Harriet Denies That He Knows Anything About the Tragedy.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Nov. 30.—The funeral services of Mrs. Charles H. Leonard, who was murdered by Farmhand Louis Harriet, were held here today at the Baptist church and were attended by a vast throng. On Sunday Pol ice Prosecutor Ivins, accompanied by Ira Vanatter and Field, went to Charles H. Leonard's house, where the physicians made a very thorough autopsy on the remains of Mrs. Leonard.

They found the face of the dead woman swollen and black as if from strangulation, and her tongue protruded from her mouth. Whether she died from the blow of the steel fish pole or from strangulation is a question to be determined. Either instrument was sufficient to have caused death. There was no blood upon the floors or walls to indicate a struggle.

The bulk of the dumb evidence seemed to indicate that she was first struck with the sharp blunt end of the fish pole, and after ward dragged perhaps by the necklace of hemp five times around what her fair and innocent neck into the murdered room. They were taken up on his neck by the cords about the neck on the woman's under clothing were found the dirty prints of cordroy, which was prima facie evidence of the guilt of Harriet. Harriet was arrested at Keyport and lodged in jail. When questioned about the murder of Mrs. Leonard he said that he knew nothing about it, and then relapsed into a stolid silence.

Among the Four Hundred.

A CHARMING DINNER GOWN.

In this sketch you see a dinner gown of very pale blue peau de soie, with a trimming of lace, white satin puffes, and dark silk buttons as designed. White or pale tan gloves were worn with this gown.

Dispensing With Weighty Garments.

This season woman has discarded the cumbersome petticoats, and even the separate dress-lining, the latter being attached to the skirt itself, like the lining of a jacket. This is better than any divided garment ever invented. The long dinner skirt is perfectly comfortable, and the limbs are as untrammeled as they ought to be consistent with feminidity. A short underskirt coming just below the knee gives warmth and protection. It would seem that dress reform is really beginning in the right direction by reducing the quantity of the manifold under-garment, that ladies used to wear and substituting well-fitting, warmth clothing in their places. One by one surplus garments are dispensed with, until we have succeeded in obtaining really comfortable apparel.

Patti's Chameleon Hair.

When the one and only Adelina trills her thousand-dollar arias for us again the world with the Titian red tresses will hide her diminished head, for Patti has changed her red gold crown for the peculiar dusky locks. Yet the whim for hair dying is now rampant in Italy, and the raven tresses of Italian beauties can be no longer sung of poets. Golden tints are those most coveted by the dark-skinned beauties, and so common is the habit of dying that even in the smaller towns he cannot walk without meeting women and little children who at first mistaken for Northerners were it not for their fiery eyes and brilliantly tinted cheeks.

It as Nannie Bishop Drowned?

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Nov. 30.—Coroner Van Dyke, of Long branch, on complaint of a number of people of West Asbury Park, Sunday stopped the funeral of Miss Mamie Bishop, the eighteen-year-old daughter of Mrs. John Rowland, who died very suddenly on Thursday morning last. The neighbors claim that Miss Bishops death was due to poisoning. Her physician declared that death was due to heart trouble. Saturday afternoon the neighbors noticed that the corpse had become badly discolored and swollen to twice its original size. These facts, together with her sudden death, aroused their suspicions. The coroner will hold an autopsy and an inquest.

FIELD IS IN AN ASYLUM.

Inspector Byrnes Said to Have a Warrant for Him.

CYRUS W. FIELD'S UNHAPPY FATE.

He Meditated Giving Up the Remainder of His Fortune to Save His Alleged Wayward Son, but the Amount Was Too Small to Be of Use.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—Edward M. Field was taken to the Bloomingdale Insane asylum on Saturday. The senior member of the firm of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. received advices from the world a sadly tarnished name. He leaves behind him disaster, confusion, a wreck of a business firm ruined by his misdoings and a blot on the scutcheon of an illustrious family. The innuendoes and accusations of Wall street are justified. Edward M. Field not only robbed associated railway banks placed with him as collateral, but he misappropriated large sums of money. He raised loans on worthless securities fostered by him on many banks and on private individuals as well. He deceived his partners also.

Pew Rents Gone Also.

Two thousand dollars in pew rents, turned over to E. M. Field as trustee of the Tarrytown Presbyterian church, is missing. He was treasurer of the association which owns the Washington building, where his offices are. He collected $2,000 in rents and sank the money in the affair, to avoid impending doom. Field ran a long race with the fates. It is no wonder that his intellect could not stand the strain.

Cyrus W. Field's Sad Fate.

The Field family's cup of bitterness surely overflows. Cyrus W. Field was prostrated by the death of his beloved wife, and with the weight of the affliction still upon him he had to face the terrible story of his son's disgrace and financial and mental ruin.

His daughter, Mary Grace, wife of Daniel A. Lindley, one of the unhappy firm's unhappy partners, is very ill of cancer of the stomach, and the physicians say that she cannot live two months. It is late three days of being a year since Cyrus W. Field's golden wedding anniversary was celebrated. From all over the civilized world where his name was known came congratulations.

A Family Conference Held.

The fame and the honor of the house of Field were household words. Had the responsibilities of the ruined firm been less the remains of a great fortune would have been bestowed to save the name of Field. Cyrus Field was willing to give up his all.

A family conference was held Saturday and Sunday at the home of Cyrus W. Field, 123 East Twenty-first street. Those who took part in it were Cyrus W. Field, his brother, David Dudley Field and Stephen J. Field; Georges De Forest Lord, of the firm of Lord, Day & Lord; Cyrus W. Field's counsel and a representative of Drexel, Morgan & Co.

Too Great a Sacrifice.

The conference was held to decide what course should be taken by Cyrus W. Field regarding Edward M. Field. Edward M. Field's liabilities, arising from the peculiar conduct of his business, which is such as to give rise to intimations of defalcation and forgery, amount to millions. To satisfy the claims of his creditors would require Cyrus W. Field's entire fortune and considerably more.

The family honor was at stake. Family pride shrank from the prospect of the public disgrace of a Field. The breath of scandal had already touched Edward M. Field's fair name.

When the desperate situation had been fully discussed it was finally decided, in view of the fact that even if Cyrus W. Field should sacrifice his entire fortune, he would not be able to meet the liabilities of his son, that he should not make the sacrifice.

A Warrant for Young Field.

From facts ascertained by reporters it is evident that the failure of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. is one of the biggest financial swindles and most gigantic steals in the history of Wall street. It is considered to be a parallel case to the famous Ives-Stayner failure. There are many plain evidences of fraud. So plain are they that only his illness saved Edward M. Field from arrest. A warrant, it is said, has been issued, and Inspector Byrnes has been watching the house 135 East Twenty-first street.

The Jugglery with the Bonds.

Now as regards the transaction between the Union Pacific people and the firm of Field, Lindley & Co. The latter borrowed on Union Pacific people $600,000 originally, taking as security notes secured by bonds worth at par value $1,000,000. These bonds today are worth about $1,100,000. The Union Pacific people have taken up, so far, $200,000 of this loan, and today owe Field, Lindley & Co. some $400,000.

The bonds are scattered everywhere, having been rehypothecated by the firm in lots to suit their convenience or that of innocent purchasers. The manner in their transactions with the Union Pacific people. On Saturday, however, Sidney Dillon said that neither he nor any of the Union Pacific officials knew of or had the least intimation of any sale of the bonds turned over to Field & Co. as security on the loan.

Davitt on One Man Power.

DUBLIN, Nov. 30.—In addressing the laborers at Bandon, near Cork, Michael Davitt said that no amount of revelations regarding Boulogne negotiations or forged letters would justify the conduct of the Irish parliamentary party in having re-elected Mr. Parnell chairman when his misconduct had become known. The party had placed itself in a corner of schoolboys in the presence of a master. It was the direct result of one man power, and never again should be tolerated.

Deadly Affray in Texas.

MARSHALL, Tex., Nov. 30.—W. R. Harvey was called out of his house eight miles north of here, and shot and killed by Luther Matthews, who charged that Harvey had seduced his sister under promise of marriage. A posse overtook the murderer and his brother John. The horses of the two parties came into collision, killing Hill Saunders and wounding three others. The Matthews boys were lodged in jail.

A Sneak Thief Steals $200.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 30.—A thief entered the front door of the Quinnipiac house, at New Haven, Saturday night, walked up to the ticket office, and snatching a pile of bills amounting to $200, which the cashier had just finished counting, ran off.

Sixty-one Years a Priest.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 30.—Rev. Father Peter Havermans celebrated at St. Mary's church Sunday the sixty-first anniversary of his ordination in the priesthood. He is the oldest priest in this country.

SECRETARY NOBLE'S REPORT.

Interesting Figures About the Pension and Indian Questions.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The annual report of John W. Noble, secretary of the interior, has been made public. The secretary announces that the years of the present administration have been marked to a notable degree by the expansion of the public domain for private settlement. On the pension he says that there were, on June 30, 1889, 676,160 persons borne upon the rolls, being 138,916 more than were carried on the rolls at the close of the last fiscal year. There were pending on July 1, 1891, 928,478 claims, of which 500,027 were claims of persons who were not on the pension rolls. The remaining 389,446 were claims for increase of pensions and disputes and cases under different laws. There are also on the files of the pension office 140,338 rejected claims.

There were 325,351 first payments of every description made during the last fiscal year, requiring $88,552,274.31.

Over 16,000 Indians have already become citizens of the United States, and about 4,000 more by taking their allotments have signified their desire to become citizens. To these numbers should be added the 7,619 Indians in Oklahoma who have taken or agreed to take allotments. A total of 27,619 Indians naturalized, and total of acres acquired for settlement of about 33,000,000 during the present administration alone.

Including the census the secretary remarks that the announcement of the official population Nov. 26, 1890, as 62,622,250 has never been changed, and upon that announcement the apportionment law was passed nearly two years sooner than at previous censuses.

The Maritime canal of Nicaragua is reported to be is a forward state. The railroad from the Atlantic port to the divide has been completed, equipped, and is now in operation for a distance of seven miles. The jetty or breakwater, which is to protect the harbor entrance on the Atlantic coast from the effects of shifting sand, has been extended 1,000 feet or more into the ocean.

About 3,000 feet of actual excavation along the canal has been made, and a channel formed from 150 to 250 feet wide and about 17 feet deep.

A Will Involving $2,000,000.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 30.—The will of the late William M. Force, of this city, will be admitted to probate today. The estate is valued at about $2,000,000.

Awful Fate of the Steve Ship Tahiti.

LOST WITH HER LIVING CARGO.

She Had on Board Nearly Three Hundred Gilbert Islanders, and the Probabilities Are That Not One Lives to Tell the Story of the Disaster.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30.—Information of a terrible disaster comes from Manzanillo, Mex. The brig Tahiti has been wrecked and it is believed that all on board—nearly 300 souls—were drowned. The vessel, which was pretty old a sinner, touched in Drake's bay, fifteen miles north of the Golden Gate, in September. She was loaded with Gilbert Islanders, under contract for a term of years to suffer planters in the San Benito district. The steamer Roseville has arrived at Manzanillo from Isiapa, and her captain reported that the Roseville passed the wreck of the Tahiti eleven miles southwest of Lizard Point.

Not a Living Thing in Sight.

She was floating bottom up, with her rudder gone and her ballast badly shifted. In the opinion of the Roseville's crew the disaster occurred probably forty days before they sighted the hulk. The steamer sent a boat off to examine the wreck, but not a living thing could be found.

The position of the brig forbade any search of her interior. The brig's yawl was still by her, but a few small boats were gone. This gives little hope that any lives were saved, for only a yawl would have stood any change of surviving the storm that would affect the brig to the extent of making it necessary to cut her running rigging, as had been done.

Her Curse of Slaves.

Not a survivor was reported as having made shore at any port any port which could be heard from. The Tahiti was 300 tons burden and was owned by H. H. Leavitt, of New York. Captain W. H. Ferguson was in command. She left San Francisco April 1 on a trading cruise in the South seas. After having disposed of her wares she took on 350 people from the Gilbert Islands, bound for Mexico, ostensibly to work under contract on coffee plantations. The contract was one of the usual kind in such cases, and provided that the slaves should work for a term of years at wages which would scarcely buy them a mess of beans a day.

Servitude or Famine.

The chiefs advised them to go, as the islands were in famine stricken. Lavish promised at the expiration of their term of servitude that they would be returned to their homes free of expense. On Sept. 30 the brig put in at Drake's bay to get Captain Reyes for repairs to her rigging. She had been forced out of her course by foul weather. Captain Ferguson did not care to bring his cargo into San Francisco.

Coll-ector Phelps, after examining the brig's papers, decided that he had no power to detain her. On Sept. 4 she was towed to sea. The natives seemed pleased because they were going to a warm country. If any of the natives had escaped they would have been found on the beach. It is almost a certainty that all perished besides the captain and the 300 islanders. The Tahiti carried three masts, a physician (Dr. Scrymzer), two cooks and a crew of twelve seamen.

BLAINE'S PHILADELPHIA VISIT.

His Physician There Pronounces Him Well Man.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—The Press says that the prime reason for Mr Blaine's present visit here was to consult his medical adviser, Dr. Madison Taylor. Mr Blaine's friends say that he was in better health and strength now than he was four years ago, and that six months or a year hence he would be stronger than he is now. His physician says Blaine has as good a man physically at sixty-one years, Mr Blaine's age, as anybody else of like age.

In an interview Dr. Taylor said he thoroughly examined Mr. Blaine and found him a well man. The doctor said Mr. Blaine was a sturdy man for his years. When he began to cough Mr. Blaine sprang he found him suffering from an acute illness. He was in a very bad condition and completely broken down by overwork. Now, the doctor says, Mr. Blaine's health is excellent. He is back to his normal weight, has a good appetite and sleeps well.

Mr. Blaine had become well by the exercise of common sense, not medicine. At Bar Harbor he went out riding so far per day, walked a certain distance and played handball a fixed length of time.

Dr. Taylor in conclusion said that if Mr Blaine took care of himself he saw no reason why he should not live many years longer.

Columbus Will Hold Her Place.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 30.—Messrs. Von der Ahe, of St. Louis; Phelps, of Louisville; Hart, of Boston, and Williams, of Chicago, are in the city in conference with the directors of the Columbus club. It is announced that Columbus will hold her place in the association. The circuit for 1891 will include Brooklyn or New York.

Killed by Mexicans.

EL PASO, Tex., Nov. 30.—William McCutcheon, a ranchman, living at Seven Springs, Tex., was killed in an altercation with three Mexicans. Two of them were captured and, it is believed, lynched, while the other made his way to Marfa and was captured by the sheriff and brought to this city for safekeeping.

Uncle Sam Gets the Cherokee Strip.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., Nov. 30.—There is a feeling rumor that the two commissions appointed by the United States and the Cherokee nation have agreed upon terms for the sale of the Cherokee strip, subject to the approval of the Cherokee legislature today. The price to be paid is $8,500,000 or $1.42 per acre.

At Least Twenty-five Were Killed.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 30.—Three laborers on the Northern Pacific road have made the startling statement that twenty-five men were killed by the landslide at Cushion station, on the line of the Northern Pacific, Wednesday. The statement was published that only two men were killed.

Grain, Flour and Coal Burned.

DETROIT, Nov. 30.—The grain elevator at Escanaba, owned by the Ogden estate, containing upwards of 300,000 bushels of wheat, four warehouses, docks and coal pits have been burned. The total loss will reach over $400,000.

Miss Rachael Sherman to Wed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The marriage of Miss Rachael Sherman, the youngest daughter of General William T. Sherman, to Dr. Thorndyke, of Boston, will be solemnized in the latter part of December at the residence of Senator and Mrs. Sherman, in this city.

Archbishop Kenrick's Jubilee.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 30.—The celebration of Archbishop Kenrick's golden jubilee was begun here. The majority of the visiting prelates celebrated mass in the various Catholic churches of the city.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Harsh officials are not disposed to place too much reliance on Chili's pacific intentions so the work on our warships is being pushed.

THE WORLD OF POLITICS.

St. Paul and Indianapolis Working for the Democratic Convention.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 30.—St. Paul has formally entered the field for the honor of being the Democratic convention city of 1892. At a mass meeting held at the chamber of commerce a resolution was adopted declaring that St. Paul enter the race for the convention and pledging the city to erect a suitable permanent convention hall at an expense of $100,000. A committee of 100 was appointed to manage the campaign and report at once. Before the close of the meeting pledges of money were informally made reaching about $60,000.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 30.—An effort is to be made to secure the Democratic national convention for Indianapolis. This movement has been started by James H. Rice and ex-Sheriff Sherrin, the latter the Indiana member of the national committee. A meeting is to be called in a few days to select the working forces to go before the committee.

The Speakership Fight.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—At the beginning of the last week in the speakership contest the situation is as uncertain as it has been at any time. That Mr. Mills and Judge Crisp are in the lead is nowhere disputed, but that the relative advantage of either of the other does not appear. The McMillin men, the Springer men and Hatch men are are still at work.

A leading Democratic member of the house, if he visits the headquarters of Mr. Mills, will hear that candidate's case presented in this way:

"Mr. Mills is the logical candidate of the party in this race. He stands for the great question for which the party has for years been battling—tariff reform. Thanks in a great measure to his courage, fidelity and capacity, is at last the Democratic standard-bearer.

"For the Democratic majority of the house of representatives not to make Mr. Mills the candidate for speaker would be as great a blunder as the Republicans of Ohio would have committed if they had refused to make Major McKinley their candidate for governor.

"The charge that Mr. Mills is unfitted for the duties of the chair because of an ungovernable temper is unworthy of attention. There was no effort made at the beginning of the fifty-first congress by Mr. Reed, his appointment as chairman of the ways and means committee for the same reason, but Mr. Mills acquitted himself so well of it that his political opponents extended their congratulations."

The Crisp men say: "Judge Crisp is in every way fitted by temperament and capacity for the duties of the chair. His rulings as a temporary presiding officer have always been marked by great readiness. He is a better man than Mr. Mills in this, while always firm and resolute, he never loses his temper."

The Line-up.

The followers of McMillin, Springer and Hatch hold the key to the situation. Springer stands accredited with 85 votes, McMillin with 30 and Hatch with 13. The total strength of the three is 68.

New York Congressman is Bad Luck.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Representatives Burke Cochran, Joseph Lafferty and Alfred C. Chapin, who were voted for on the 4th inst. to fill vacancies, cannot be put on the rolls until their certificates arrive, and will not be forthcoming until the state board of canvassers meets some time during December and canvasses the vote. It is possible that, by the grace of their party, the trio will be allowed to enter the canvas, but they certainly cannot vote for speaker in the house. A New York Republican—N. Martin Curtis, of the Twenty-second district—will also be deprived of his seat until his certificate is received.

SIX DEAD IN THE WRECK.

Terrible Results of a Collision in a Tunnel at Toledo.

TOLEDO, Nov. 30.—Six persons are dead and several others are fatally injured as the result of the terrible collision on the Flint and Pere Marquette railroad at the Union depot in this city. A passenger train collided with the Lake Shore express in a short tunnel. The names of the dead are:

Jesse McQueen, Elkhart, Ind.

Mrs. Dr. McCoygn, Madison, Ills.

Infant McDonald, eighteen months old, New York.

Master McDonald, eight years old, New York.

Eldon Meyer, Cleveland, O.

Howell Vaughan, San Fernandina, Cal.

The body of Mrs. Meyer was taken in charge by friends who arrived from Cleveland. When Mrs J. L. McDonald, the mother of the two dead children, at last regained consciousness, she called for her babies in heartrending tones. One of the sisters broke the news of the death of her children and the shock nearly killed the mother. Mrs. McDonald and her children were on their way from Chicago to New York. The serious ly injured now at St. Vincent's hospital are:

Mrs. George Bennett, Riverside, Ills. Her son Mrs. George James, New York; John Campbell, New York; Rudolph Murphy, Toledo; Mrs. and Miss McKenzie and daughters, Pearl and Maud; Bertha Dick, nurse girl to Mrs. McDonald's children, New York; John Conly, Millville, Mass.; Patrick Taylor, Arthur, Nev.

The Lake Shore had gone nearly through the tunnel with its seven heavy vestibuled parlor cars and the day coach, when a freight ahead made it pull up. The brakeman ran back to give the signal to the Pere Marquette engineer, but the trains were too close. The engineer and fireman of the oncoming train lay down and their cab was crushed through the dimly lighted tunnel into the rear of the Boston and Chicago special. The day coach was split in twain, the forward end plowing through until the roof of the car made a cover for the engine clear up to the cab.

The steam escaping in volumes scalded the unfortunates who were imprisoned in the wreckage. The bodies of the dead were horribly disfigured by the hot steam and the crash.

A War Rumor Causes a Panic.

ST PETERSBURG, Nov. 30.—A panic was occasioned on the bourse by a report that the kaiser had written to General de Schweinitz, instructing him to notify the czar of his the kaiser's resignation of the rank of honorary colonel in the Russian army. This was considered such an evidence of hostile feeling on the part of the kaiser that war was believed to be imminent.

Big Seizure of Smuggled Fish.

DETROIT, Nov. 30.—The customs authorities have made a seizure of Canadian fish valued at $37,000. The owners are the Buffalo Fish company, the Detroit Fish company and Solomon Daniels. The owners will contest the matter in the courts.

Where Is Pretty Carrie Brosnan.

ANSONIA, Conn., Nov. 30.—Miss Carrie Brosnan, one of the prettiest girls of this town, is missing and her friends fear that she has duped with Jack Breeden, an all round greek, who has served terms in the Bridgeport and New Haven jails.

HAVE PLENTY OF FRESH AIR.

Good Ventilation Does Not Mean, However, That One Must Have a Draft.

In spite of all, that has been preached and written upon the subject, it is doubtful whether the vast multitude of people yet appreciate the value of fresh air. A considerable acquaintance with the traveling public forces a person to this conclusion. Even persons of intelligence are inclined to [illegible] for [illegible] in the [illegible] car. It is not [illegible] upon air crank."

The amount of actual drafts of air which different persons can endure with equanimity is quite different. In due consideration for the welfare of those around us, we should not throw open the windows of a railway car or of any room suddenly, however close and unwholesome the atmosphere may seem. Persons who have been sitting in a close apartment have by that means become weakened, so that they are quite liable to catch cold from the sudden change caused by the entrance of pure air. In all cases of this kind the air must be gradually changed. Many a case of pneumonia may be traced to some robust person's coming in from the outdoor air, announcing "the room was close" and throwing open the windows to change it as suddenly as possible, despite the presence of other occupants who had been sitting in the close room.

Such a sudden change of the temperature of the room is always safe for the person coming in from the fresh air, but not to those who happen to be in the room for some time.

But because it is necessary to exercise care in changing the air of a room which has become vitiated, it does not prove it safe to breathe such air. It simply proves the power of close air as an active agent in deteriorating the system. Nothing is more hazardous than to habituate one's self to a close, superheated house. Only persons of the greatest strength can endure such unwholesome surroundings. As a matter of fact the very poor, who necessarily suffer more from diseases caused by exposure, do not show so high a mortality as people in a well to do or wealthy rank of life from the various zymotic diseases caused by the foul air of overheated rooms, poisoned as it is often is with dangerous gases of the sewer and furnace.

The statement seems startling, yet it is supported by evidence that the highest authority, that diphtheria, that most dreaded of scourges, flourishes to a far greater extent in the dwellings of the rich than in the hovels of the very poor. The poor man's dwelling, in spite of the want of hygiene apparent in all the household management, has at least the advantage of being ventilated to the extent of having all disinfectants, cold and frost. The fact that his children have but scantly clothing does not affect their health to any such extent as the poisonous gases do the children in comfortable circumstances. The poor child becomes hardened to cold.

No house is fit to live in that is not systematically washed out every day with fresh, cold air. The windows in each room in the house that is occupied should be systematically opened for at least ten minutes some time during the day, and should be arranged so that there is a continuous supply of pure, fresh air coming in the room and an exit for the used up air. An open fireplace is one of the best means of solving this difficulty. There are various systems of ventilation on which volumes have been written. The greatest need, however, is to adopt some system and not to neglect a matter so essential to the well being of those whom you care most for.

Where a furnace is used it is necessary to see that the cold air box opens outdoors. As furnaces are usually constructed [illegible] to open the [illegible] to regulate the [illegible] so always kept on the furnace in the [illegible] very much a convenience, [illegible] kept [illegible] into the room in some way so it does not produce a draft.—New York Tribune.

What Children May or May Not Eat.

For breakfast, children of three years old should be given milk, oatmeal, bread and butter, a little fruit and eggs, lightly boiled, poached or scrambled. If, instead of eggs, they prefer fresh fish or steak, either may be allowed, the meat of course being minced fine. Fried foods are forbidden, and fritters and fried cakes are included in the ban.

At dinner, if the soup is thin it may be given children, but thick soups would be more than their digestive organs could safely bear. Roast or broiled meats, such as beef or mutton, are allowable. The fact that pork and all salted and otherwise cured meats are hard to digest forbids their use. Potatoes, baked or boiled, dry and mashed, spinach, peas, string beans, asparagus of good quality, cauliflower and beats, when young, are easily digestible.

This is not the case with green corn, unless it is very tender and the kernels are carefully removed from the cob with the back of a knife blade and then crushed or grated. Such vegetables as turnips, carrots, parsnips and onions require strong powers to digest them. The same may be said of celery, unless it is stewed. The sweet potato is much less easily digestible than the round, or, as commonly called, the Irish potato, and quickly undergoes a sort of sugary decay, hence it must be held unsuitable for young children.

For supper, milk toast, bread and butter, and a glass of milk, with possibly a little stewed fruit, will be quite sufficient for young children. The latter, by the way, when eaten at night, sometimes causes dyspeptic symptoms. Hot bread, cheese, hashed meat and vegetables and the like, so often the supper of the hungry workman, are altogether too indigestible for young children.—Boston Herald.

Health and Carpets.

In our endeavor to be comfortable in the vain of tears there is a tendency to overlook the fact that many of the ills of life, and in no respect, perhaps, more so than in the superabundance of curtains and carpets—these competented contrivances for hindering the free circulation of fresh air and for stultifying nature's entente in arrangements for the deodorization and disinfection of our homes. Carpets in all ways objectionable when they are not designed to permit of easy removal for cleansing purposes without the necessity of turning a room topsy turvy. In most houses the carpet only comes up once a year, by which time it is as full of microbes and accumulated filth as its interstices will allow.

No wonder, then, if our rooms preserve a musty smell in spite of periodical opening of windows and vigorous sweepings, which only displace a portion of the dust, which promptly resewhere in some less accessible spot. Fixed carpets are even more objectionable and unwholesome in bedrooms, for they absorb the fetid emanations of the night and soak up various decomposable materials for future use. The floor should be a polished wood, the floor garnished with [illegible] kept soft, white and downy. Impure soap and careless washing, on the other hand, will ruin the handsomest blankets.—Chicago Herald.

Washing with Borax.

In Holland the housekeeper is poor indeed who has not a head of a linen closet, be it ever so humble. It is worthy the name if the stock on hand in the beginning numbers not a dozen pieces; and it is surprising how it will grow by occasionally adding an article. There is an untold pleasure to the housekeeper of limited means in accumulating linen piece by piece, while in the wake of a full purse extends before the linen closet at once knows nothing about. To accomplish this result it is well for such a young wife to know that it is better to put by one good linen cloth, sheet or towel than two poor, flimsy ones. The process of accumulating in this way may be slow, but in the end it will be found the only one that is satisfactory.

This is not the case with green corn, unless it is very tender and the kernels are carefully removed from the cob with the back of a knife blade and then crushed or grated. Such vegetables as turnips, carrots, parsnips and onions require strong powers to digest them. The same may be said of celery, unless it is stewed. The sweet potato is much less easily digestible than the round, or, as commonly called, the Irish potato, and quickly undergoes a sort of sugary decay, hence it must be held unsuitable for young children.

Carpets in all ways objectionable when they are not designed to permit of easy removal for day and hang them out of doors for an hour or so. It is well to whip blankets lightly with a rattan dusting stick. If treated in this manner they will not require frequent washing. When it does become necessary to wash them rip off the cheese cloth protectors, whip out the dust, and if bound with colored braid, remove it and replace with white.

Then make a very strong suds with warm soft water. Let them soak only a few moments, then rub lightly on the board, wring out and rinse in fresh warm water in which a little ammonia has been added. Dry in the fresh air, shake and stretch into shape, then hang out of doors in the sun and wind to dry. If the foregoing directions are carefully followed one's blankets will be kept soft, white and downy. Impure soap and careless washing, on the other hand, will ruin the handsomest blankets.—Chicago Herald.

Decorating the Home.

One needs to live a little while in a house before completely furnishing it; possibilities dawn upon the woman of taste by degrees, and it is far more interesting to add a picture here, a statuette there, a little stand in this corner and a portiere over a too obtrusive door from time to time than to do it all at once. It gives one something to look forward to. Whatever a woman's position, she should have a voice in decorating her own house.

A home ought to be an expression of the people who inhabit it, it should partake of their individuality, and how can we do this if everything is put into the hands of a professional decorator. A woman should have a scheme of color and an idea of her own for every room; then she can get what she needs in carrying it out from the best furniture and carpet warehouses, where there is always a good man of taste who is ready to give advice.

In one of the most charmingly furnished homes in the city, where the rich embroidery of some of the hangings, the exquisitely draped toilet table, beds and mantels, the tasteful arrangement of furniture and bric-a-brac, and the luxurious divans and couches, with pillows, soft silken pillows and cushions, all give the impression of a lavish expenditure of money. The hand of the mistress did much of the work, while she personally planned and supervised the whole.—Art Interchange.

Children's Ears.

Mothers are becoming agitated over the question of children's ears. It is being suggested that flaring ears are now very much in vogue, and that the fashion of the day, and the prevalence of these ungraceful head appendages is ascribed to the discarding of the caps which our grandmothers—some of our mothers, indeed—wore night and day. What the race has lost in aural beauty, however, it has certainly gained in immunity from head colds during infancy, as these caps seemed the little patent lay enclosed in a condition of tenderness and susceptibility that made them easy prey to drafts.

Mothers and nurses may avoid disfigured ears by a little watchfulness of their manner of putting their charges in crib or bed. For such purposes as may have escaped such care and thus come into the possession of ears rampant an "ear cap" may be procured, which is a set of tapes keeping the ears close to the head, to be worn at night.—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Chestnuts as Food.

How much can be accomplished by intelligent forced strains of chestnuts no one can tell as yet, but there are native varieties which afford promises sufficiently certain and flattering. Some of these, found in Tennessee, Pennsylvania and the mountains of Virginia, are scarcely as big as horse chestnuts and have a most delicious flavor. Grafts from the trees bearing them produce admirable results. It must be understood that grafts do not improve varieties, merely maintaining them, so that the planter is able to gradually better any kind of nut. Some trees which only a few moments, then rub lightly on the board, wring out and rinse in fresh warm water in which a little ammonia has been added. Dry in the fresh air, shake and stretch into shape, then hang out of doors in the sun and wind to dry. How to Preserve a Favorite Plant.

Pansies flower so freely from seed the same year the seeds are sown that it is not generally known that they are perennials, and may be kept over from year to year with great success; but in these cases they must not be allowed to flower profusely. As soon as the first large flowers have been produced, and the smaller ones appear, the flowering branches should be cut off. People often have peculiar varieties that they would like to preserve, but do not know that it is very easy to do so under the system suggested.—Mechans' Monthly.

Inexpensive Utensils.

Among the inexpensive and useful little things for kitchen use to be found at Japanese stores are the dark blue bowls that come in many sizes, costing from seven cents to seven times seven. They are fireproof, and endure the heat of the oven without loss of beauty. The small yellow bowls that are even less in price will also be found most convenient to be used in the refrigerator and in warming over foods in a steamer. They save much of the labor that comes from keeping many tin utensils bright.—New York Post.

Initials are not considered good form on note paper, not even monograms, but is it very much better taste for Americans to stamp their stationery with unmeaning, valueless crests? The present fashion of having city address or name of country residence stamped in plain letters across the page is a much more sensible one.

Sofia Sawtelle, lawyer, says that in many of the states a will made by a single woman becomes worthless on her marriage. She should make a new will and have her husband give his written consent to it on the document itself. This consent is not necessary in every state, but can do no harm anywhere.

Parents should understand that for a long time a young child's diet should be much restricted. First of all it must be taught to eat slowly, the habit of "bolting" food, so common to many—both children and adults—is an extremely pernicious one, for which there is no excuse.

It is a fact beyond dispute that the Dutch housewives cannot be equaled in managing their houses and servants. They seem both to command and the servants to obey. Doubtless one cause is due to the regularity and the precision with which their household affairs are carried on.

Lamp wicks must be changed often to insure good light, as they will soon become clogged with dust, which does not pass through them freely. A clear flame will be certain if the wicks are soaked in vinegar twenty-four hours before using.

What He Could Do.

He looked up and down the street furtively two or three times, took in the sign over the door once or twice and darted in as if afraid of being caught at it.

"This is an employment agency, ain't it?" he inquired of the man in charge.

"Yep," snapped the clerk person.

"Get work for people, don't you?"

"Yep."

"Any kind of work?"

"Yep."

"All kinds?"

"Yep."

"Get something for me to do?"

"Yep."

"In a restaurant?"

"Ye— What in thunder can you do in a restaurant?" exclaimed the boss, catching himself.

"Eat."
